INDIAN CASES.

VOLUME XLVII.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

October 16, 1917.

Present:—Lord Parker of Waddington, Lord Wrenbury, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

Bhaiya RAJ KISHORE DEO—APPELLANT
versus

BANI MAHTO AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Official document, admissibility of—Register of minhaidari villages.

A register of Minhaidari villages is an official document and is admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. If, however, it can be shown that a particular part of the register is in excess of the official duty by reason of which it came into existence, that part would be inadmissible.

Appeal from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Mr. Justice Chitty and Mr. Justice Teunon), dated the 29th April 1912.

FACTS.—The point raised in the case was as to the admissibility of a certain register of Minhaidari villages which was made in 1866. It would appear from this document that a survey of the whole Tappah Utari was made and a number of particulars were recorded regarding the villages and the tenants. It was argued before the High Court that there was no necessity for the Revenue Officer to record particulars of the various tenancies in the villages. The High Court wrote in their judgment on this matter as follows: "As to that it is impossible to say anything definitely without knowing more about the object and purpose for which this survey was made. But as we find in all the entries which have been put before us that the tenancies are mentioned and particulars of the tenancies given, we may reasonably infer that that was one of the objects for which the enquiry was conducted by the Revenue Officer."

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and J. M. Parekh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—In this case the question is as to the nature of the respondents' holding. It is admitted that the document under which their predecessor-in-title originally held, and which created the holding, is lost, and the only question that their Lordships have to decide is whether another document consisting of a register, as evidence of the contents, was or was not properly admitted. Now clearly this register is an official document, and therefore it is admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Indian Evidence Act. It may be possible that in the case of such a document, if it could be shown that any particular part was in excess of the official duty by reason of which it came into existence, that part might not be admissible, but no attempt has been made to show this in the present case. The document has been admitted by both Courts below as proper evidence in the case, and their Lordships see no reason to reverse or to vary that decision.

The appeal, therefore, should, in their Lordships' opinion, be dismissed. The respondents not having appeared, there is no question of costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

Res judicata—Matter not decided by Court—Suit for declaration of title by survivorship, dismissal of—Subsequent suit for declaration that certain alienations shall not bind reversion, maintainability of—Causes of action—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 93, 95, 110—Suit for declaration that document shall not bind reversion—Limitation.

A decision cannot operate as res judicata on a question which the Court deliberately abstained from deciding [p. 3, col. 1.]

The dismissal of a suit based on the allegation that the plaintiff took a certain property by survivorship on the death of a certain person, cannot operate as res judicata on the claim of the plaintiff, put forward in a subsequent suit, for a declaration that a kot kobala executed by the deceased and a compromise decree entered into in a suit to enforce it are not binding on the inheritance when it comes to the hands of the plaintiff as a reversioner [p. 3, col. 1.]

Articles 93 and 95 of the Limitation Act have no application to a suit by a reversioner for a declaration that a kot kobala executed by the last owner and a compromise decree made in a suit to enforce the kot kobala are not binding on the inheritance. The Article that applies to such a suit is Article 120 and where the plaintiff is in possession, limitation does not begin to run until some act is done on the documents sought to be declared not binding on the inheritance. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 4th September 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of that District, dated the 27th July 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey (with him Babu Sarada Charan Maity), for the Appellant;—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant No. 1 and it arises out of a suit brought by the reversioner for a declaration that a certain kot kobala and a compromise decree made in a suit to enforce the kot kobala are not binding on him.

My first point is that the present suit is barred by the doctrine of res judicata. After the death of Khetra Mohan the plaintiff had brought a suit against Khetra Mohan's widow for declaration of his right by survivorship in which he failed. In that suit he could have and should have made the claim which he is now making. Refers to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. Further, the question of the genuineness of the document, sought to be got rid of, should not have been allowed to be raised in this suit.

The next point is that the present suit is barred by the three years' rule of limitation. Refers to Articles 93 and 95 of the Limitation Act. Both the Courts have set aside the compromise decree on the ground of fraud. The present suit is not merely a suit for a declaration that the solenama decree in the previous suit is not binding on the plaintiff but also is one for setting aside a fraudulent decree, and therefore the three years' rule of limitation applies to it. Refers to Parekh Ranchor v. Bai Vakhat (1).

The last point is that the declaration sought for in the suit, viz., that the plaintiff is the heir and reversioner after the death of Khetra Mohan's widow, ought not to have been given as nobody knows now who will be the reversioner at the death of the widow.

Babu Bhujanga Bhusan Mukerjee for Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 1 against the decision of the learned District Judge of Midnapore, dated the 4th September 1916, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the same place. The suit was brought by a Hindu reversioner for a declaration that a kot kobala said to have been executed by one Khetra Mohan Pande in the year 1302 and the solenama decree which was entered into in the suit to enforce the kot kobala were not binding on the reversioner. The facts found are all clearly in favour of the plaintiff. What has been urged in this appeal and which was urged also in the Courts below is this. The present plaintiff brought a former suit against the widow of Khetra Mohan. In that suit, he alleged that the property now sued for was part of the joint family property and that the family being governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law, on the death of Khetra Mohan he took the property by survivorship. That suit failed, and the first argument that has been raised in this appeal is that the present suit is barred by the doctrine of res judicata, on the ground that the plaintiff could have included the present cause of action in the former suit which he brought. It is quite clear that a person having two separate and independent causes of action is not bound to include them both in the same suit. He may bring a suit for each separate and independent cause of action. It is quite clear that a suit based on the allegation that the plaintiff took the property by survivorship on the death of Khetra Mohan is essentially different from a suit for a declaration that a certain alienation made and the compromise decree entered into by the widow are not binding on the inheritance when it comes to the hands of the reversioner.

The next point urged in the appeal was that the question whether the kot kobala was a genuine document or not was not capable of being agitated in the present suit as that matter had been determined in the former suit brought by the plaintiff. The judgment of the Appellate Court in the former suit stated expressly that the Judge did not decide the question as to whether or not the lot kobala was genuine. The Court having deliberately abstained from deciding the question, it is difficult to see how that matter is res judicata.

The next point urged was that the suit was barred by limitation. It is said that Articles 93 and 95 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act apply to a suit of this nature. Articles 93 and 95 have nothing to do with a suit of this nature. The Article that applies is Article 120. In any case, it is obvious that the present appellant entered into possession of the property within six years prior to the institution of the suit. In that view, it is quite clear that the plaintiff was not bound to bring his suit until some act was done on the document which it was sought to declare not binding on the inheritance. The learned Judge was, therefore, quite right in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The last point was that the declaration made by the learned Judge was wrong. The declaration, so far as regards the plaintiff, is obviously right, the declaration being that the plaintiff when he succeeds to the property will not be bound by this transaction. The only matter that may be urged against the form of the decree passed by the learned Judge is that it ought to have been drawn in more wide terms so as to include not only the plaintiff but also any other reversioner who may succeed to the property on the death of Khetra Mohan's widow. The appellant before us has clearly no ground to complain in regard to the form in which the learned Judge has drawn up the decree. There is nothing in this point.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 4 (6)—“Landlord”, meaning of—Pre-emption—Sale of occupancy rights to mortgagee with possession of proprietary rights—Vendor's collateral, whether can pre-empt.

The term ‘landlord’ as defined in section 4 (6) of the Tenancy Act includes a mortgagee in possession. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, plaintiff sued for possession by pre-emption of certain land sold by defendant No. 1, an occupancy tenant, to the mortgagees with possession of the proprietary rights:

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, inasmuch as the sale must be held to have been made in favour of the landlord. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 10th January 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 1st November 1917, and remanding the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Appellants.

Bakhsbi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Prabhu, defendant No. 1, an occupancy tenant under section 6 of the Tenancy Act, has sold his occupancy rights to defendants Nos. 2 to 6, who are mortgagees, with possession, of the proprietary rights. The plaintiff sues for pre-emption on the ground that he is a collateral of the vendor.

The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the mortgagees of the proprietary rights were the landlords, and that in accordance with the ruling of Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1) the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption as against them.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court has remanded the case, being of opinion that the term "landlord" in the ruling quoted was used in the sense of "proprietor" and was not meant to include a mortgagee.

The defendants have filed a second appeal in this Court. It has been held in certain cases that the term "landlord" as defined in section 4 (6) of the Tenancy Act includes a mortgagee in possession. The learned District Judge admits this, but thinks that in Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (1), the word should be taken as used in the restricted sense of "proprietor." I do not agree with this view. The case of 1916 decides that there is no right of pre-emption in respect of a sale by an occupancy tenant of his occupancy rights to the landlord, under whatever section of the Act he holds his tenancy. The decision is based on the rights given to the landlord by the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and consequently the word "landlord" in the ruling must have the meaning which it bears in the Act itself and therefore includes a mortgagee in possession. I can see no warrant for the contrary conclusion, and I hold that the ruling of 1916 applies to the present case and the suit must fail.

I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiff-respondent will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Decree conditional on payment of money within certain period, whether can be altered—Jurisdiction of Court—Discretion, exercise of—High Court, power of interference of.

Once certain terms are embodied in a decree the Court itself which passed the decree, even if it so desires, has no jurisdiction to alter it save on an application for review of judgment. [p 5, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a Court made a decree in plaintiff's favour conditional upon his paying an extra Court-fee within a certain time and directed that the suit would stand dismissed in the case of non-compliance with the condition:

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the decree by extending the time for payment of the extra Court-fee. [p. 5, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad for Mr. Muhammad Yusuf, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this and the connected application are shortly as follows:—A suit was brought by the plaintiff for dower and also to set aside certain deeds executed by her deceased husband. A question as to the sufficiency of Court-fees arose, and eventually the Court made a decree in the plaintiff's favour conditional upon her paying an extra Court fee of Rs. 20 within a week. If this extra Court-fee was not paid the suit was to stand dismissed. What we have just now stated was all embodied in and was part of the decree

(1) 38 Ind. Cas. 712; 116 P. R. 1916.

BROJENDRA KISHORE ROY v. JUGENDRA KISHORE ROY.

itself. Unfortunately (it is said through the negligence of the plaintiff's Pleader) she did not get proper information, with the result that she deposited Rs. 10 only within the time allowed. The defendants then made an application for execution of the decree on the ground that the decree was now in their favour, the deposit of Rs. 20 not having been made as provided in the decree. The plaintiff sought in vain to be allowed to pay in the extra Rs. 10. The Court doubted that it had jurisdiction to extend time and rejected the application for extension of time. The plaintiff comes here in revision and contends that the Court had jurisdiction and it ought to have exercised it. This Court always feels great difficulty in interfering with the discretion of the Courts below on matters of discretion. But there seems to be a more formidable objection to the present application, namely, that once the term about depositing the Rs. 20 was embodied in the decree the Court itself, even if it desired, had no jurisdiction to alter its own decree save on an application for review of judgment under section 114 read with Order XLVII, rule 1. The case of Naik Ram v. Bhagwan Chand (1) is cited. This was a decision of a single Judge and the judgment consists of a single line. The circumstances were no doubt in principle the same as in the present case. The judgment of the Court is: "The Court had undoubtedly jurisdiction to extend the time." It has been over and over held in pre-emption suits, where the decree itself provides that the pre-emptor is to have possession conditional upon his paying the pre-emption money into Court within a specified time and that upon his failure to do so the suit shall stand dismissed, that the Court has no jurisdiction to extend the time. The ground for these decisions has always been that the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with its own decree save in the manner we have mentioned above. There is no distinction between a pre-emption decree and any other decree which embodies certain conditions and provides for the suit being dismissed if those conditions are not complied with. The only exception is that of a mortgage decree—time can be extended in mortgage decrees by virtue of the provisions of Order XXXIV. We reject the application but under the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

We may here mention that we think that it would have been better had the Court, after determining that the extra fee was payable, ordered the fee to be paid within a certain time, and delayed passing its decree until that time had expired.

Application rejected.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 106—Record of Rights, entry in, correction of—Plaintiff and defendant recorded as joint landlords—Partition—Burden of proof.

In a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights, in which the names of the plaintiff and his co-sharer defendant No. 7 were entered as joint landlords, it was found that there had been a partition between them long before the Record of Rights and that the plaintiff had been in sole possession since the partition:

Held, that although there was nothing to show what was the precise result of the partition, still in the absence of any evidence on the part of defendant No 7 to show that the plaintiff's possession was as a co-sharer on his behalf, the plaintiff should be recorded as the sole landlord. [p. 7, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 15th July 1916, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Mymensingh, dated the 8th May 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Charu Chandra Bhattacharjya), for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Plaintiff and defendant No. 7 are proprietors of Mouza Goalpara in equal shares. A holding was recorded under the plaintiff and defendant No. 7 jointly. Plaintiff brings this suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have the holding recorded in his name alone and not jointly in the name of the plaintiff and defendant No. 7. The first Court dismissed the suit; the lower Appellate Court has decreed it.

(1) 42 Ind. Cas. 613; 15 A. I. J. 511.

PROJENDRA KISHORE ROY v. JUGENDRA KISHORE ROY.

The finding is that the plaintiff is in possession but his possession is also on my behalf. The plaintiff has failed to prove his exclusive title. In the petition plaintiff sets up partition and says that the property is in his possession, but that is not proved.

When the question of title arises between owners of two separate estates, the Revenue Officer must confine himself to the question of possession and should not go into the question of title. Referred to Mohunt Padmalar Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), Kali Sundari v. Girija Sankar (2) and Ram Chandra Bhanj Deo v. Nanda Nandananda Deb (3).

These are cases of rival proprietors. As to the co-sharers there is no reported case. Jogendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Fromoda Dassi (4) says that no suit lies except a suit under section 106 or section 105.

[CHITTY, J.—That case has been dissented from in subsequent cases.]

The Judge amends the entry upon possession only, though he finds that plaintiff has not proved exclusive title. Therefore the entry should not have been made in plaintiff's name alone. The entry is the entry of the name of the landlord of each tenant, therefore the question of title should be gone into. The Judge says that he would decide the question upon possession only under the authorities, but there is no authority. He finds that the plaintiff has not got exclusive title and corrects the entry in plaintiff's name alone.

Bahn Sarot Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Bir Bhusan Dutt), for the Respondents.—There is no distinction in principle between co-sharers and rival proprietors. The name of the landlord of the tenants is to be entered. In the cases cited between two rival proprietors, the Settlement Officer has to decide who is in actual possession.

[CHITTY, J.—As between co-sharers, possession of one may be possession of the other, but between rival proprietors no such presumption arises.]

The position here is the same as that of rival proprietors because partition is admitted.

[CHITTY, J.—The allotment is not known and not proved.]

If the Judge finds that the plaintiff was in possession and getting rent, the question of title should not have been gone into.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 7 arising out of proceedings under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Plaintiff brought the suit for correction of the entry in the Record of Rights in which the names of the plaintiff and defendant No. 7 were entered as the landlords. Plaintiff's case was that there had been a partition of the estate between the co-sharers, that this particular part of the estate had fallen to his share and that he was the sole landlord of the tenants whose names were recorded in this Record of Rights. No evidence appears to have been given with regard to the partition, but we find from the judgment of the Special Judge that it was admitted by the Pleaders on both sides that there was a partition, said to be a private partition, that some lands were still held imali and some exclusively. There was, however, no evidence before the Special Judge to show in detail what lands were so held, and how at the time of the partition this land was treated. The Special Judge then went into the evidence of possession and, acting upon the authority of the cases which say where there is a question between rival proprietors the question of possession is the most important question for consideration, he found that the plaintiff had from 1304 onwards acted as the sole landlord of this part of the estate that he had let out the land to the tenants and had been receiving rent from them. There was no evidence before the learned Special Judge that the defendant No. 7 had asserted any right to the possession of this property either by letting out the land, or by receipt of rent, or in any other way. He, therefore, found that the plaintiff was really in possession and that his name should be recorded as the landlord of the tenants. It is objected on appeal on behalf of the defendant No. 7 that the cases referred to by the learned Special Judge deal only with the question of rival Zemindars and not, as in this case, with the question of rival co-sharers. There is this distinction that in the former case there can be no question of joint possession or possession of the one being the possession of the other. In the case of co-sharers there is this possibility, that the possession of one might be regarded as the possession of the other though exercised in the name of one only. But we think that, in the circumstances of this case, the learned Special Judge was justified in the conclusion at which he arrived. We start with the admission that there was a partition. It is true that there is nothing to show what was the precise result of that partition or what lands were allotted to the several co-sharers. That partition must have taken place before 1304. We find that from that date, that is to say, for twenty years past, the plaintiff has been in possession of this land and treating it as if he were in sole possession so far as his co-sharers were concerned. In the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendant No. 7 to show that that is possession on his behalf, we think that the learned Special Judge is justified in saying that the record was incorrect and that the plaintiff should have been recorded as the sole landlord in this particular case. That, of course, does not conclude the question of title which may be determined in other proceedings. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 280 OF 1918.

GHULAM NABI SHAH—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 12—Decision on question of value for purposes of Court-fee incidental to decision on question of value for purposes of jurisdiction—Appeal, whether competent.

Plaintiff sued for possession of certain land which he valued for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 764-7-0. On an objection by the defendant that the suit had been undervalued, the Munsif appointed a Local Commissioner who fixed the value at Rs. 943, but the Munsif refused to accept this valuation and having come to the conclusion that the land was worth considerably over Rs. 1,000 returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. On appeal the District Judge held that the Munsif had wrongly disregarded the Commissioner's valuation and returned the case to him for disposal. The defendant preferred a second appeal to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that in arriving at a valuation of the land the Munsif only looked at the question from the point of view of his own jurisdiction and although he decided the value for purposes of Court-fee, this decision was merely incidental to his decision on the question of the value for purposes of jurisdiction and section 12 of the Court Fees Act was not, therefore, applicable to the case. [p. 8, col. 1.]
(2) that under these circumstances the appeal to the District Judge was competent and was rightly decided. [p. 8, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Montgomery, dated the 24th July 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Pakpattan, District Montgomery, dated the 3rd April 1917, returning the plaint for amendment.

Messrs. Cooper and Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for Mr. L. M. Datta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for possession of certain land which he valued for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction at Rs. 764-7-0. The defendant raised an objection that the suit had been undervalued for purposes of Court-fee, whereupon the learned Munsif of Pakpattan appointed a Local Commissioner who fixed the value at Rs. 943. The learned Munsif, however, refused to accept this valuation and came to the conclusion that the land was worth considerably over Rs. 1,000. He accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, as the value he fixed on the property rendered the suit beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. Against this order returning the plaint the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, who held that the learned Munsif had wrongly disregarded the Local Commissioner's valuation, and, fixing the value of the suit at Rs. 943, returned the case to the Munsif's Court for disposal. Against this order the defendant has preferred an appeal to this Court and has contended that the appeal to the learned District Judge was barred by section 12 of the Court Fees Act. Mr. Cooper who appeared on behalf of the appellant contented himself with reading section 12 and urged that the words of that section were perfectly clear and that, therefore, the appeal to the learned District Judge was bad. I am, however, unable to agree in this view. The learned Munsif in arriving at a valuation of the land clearly only looked at the question from the point of view of his own pecuniary jurisdiction, and although, inasmuch as the values for purposes of Court fee and that of jurisdiction were identical, he decided the value for purposes of Court fee, this decision was merely incidental to his decision on the question of the value for purposes of jurisdiction. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the appeal to the learned District Judge was competent and has been rightly decided by him.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Res judicata—Rent suit, finding in—Kabuliyat held to be valid and effective—Subsequent suit to challenge validity of kabuliyat, maintainability of.

The question whether the decision in a rent suit can operate as res judicata on matters other than the relationship of landlord and tenant, depends upon what were the issues raised and decided between the parties in the rent suit [p. 9, col. 1]

Where in a rent suit, a kabuliyat has been held, on a judicial determination, to be valid and effective as against the tenant and to have been properly executed, a subsequent suit by the tenant for a declaration that the kabuliyat is null and void is barred by the rule of res judicata. [p. 9, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Bardwan, dated the 29th October 1914, affirming those of the Additional Munsif at Kalna, dated the 5th September 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sen, for the Appellants:—Defendant No. 1 is the patnidar of a mehal. Plaintiff's father executed a kabuliyat in favour of the patnidar of the mehal. Plaintiff brings this suit to set aside the kabuliyat and to set aside a rent decree which defendant obtained under the kabuliyat. In the rent suit against the plaintiff, the plaintiff put in objections that he was not in possession of the land and that the jama was a fictitious one. The Court overruled the objections and decided the rent suit in favour of defendant No. 1 and against the present plaintiff.

Two points are taken now: (1) The suit is barred by limitation, being brought after 3 years, i.e., 3 years from the filing of the written statement in the rent suit, when the existence of the kabuliyat became known to the plaintiff, (2) the suit is barred by res judicata. In the rent suit the same point was taken between the same parties.

I rely on Sreenath Dutt v. Kaser Sheikh (1).

Babu Satish Chandra Mukerjee (with him Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose), for the Respondents, was called upon to argue on the point of res judicata.—In the rent suit there were several parties, relief was also claimed against other parties. The plaintiff here not only prays for the cancellation of the kabuliyat but also prays for a decree for possession. In the rent suit the question was not directly and substantially in issue but was incidentally raised, which cannot operate as res judicata. The question in the rent suit was as to the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant.

[FLETCHER, J.—You could have raised any defence in the rent suit, no matter whether it was a rent suit only. The kabuliyat has been found to be genuine and effective.]

Babu Jatindra Nath Sen was heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.

No. 190 OF 1915.

This is an appeal by the defendant No. 1 against the decision of the learned District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 29th October 1914, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Kalna. The plaintiff sought in this case for a declaration that a kabuliyat, dated the 26th Sraban 1308 filed by the defendant No. 1 in rent suit No. 7 of 1909, and the rent decree passed thereon are null and void and inoperative and that the annual jama of Rs. 17 created by the said kabuliyat or the decree is false and fictitious, and further that the plaintiff is not bound to pay any rent to the defendant No. 1 in respect of the said annual jama of Rs. 17. Before us the case has been argued on two grounds: First of all limitation and secondly, res judicata. Taking the second point first it appears that the present appellant, the defendant No. 1, brought a suit against the plaintiff in this case to recover rent on the basis of the kabuliyat, and it is quite clear from the findings in that case that the kabuliyat was held on a judicial determination to be effective and valid and to have been properly executed; and the matters referred to by the plaintiff in this suit could have been made the grounds of attack in the rent suit. It is said that there is some rule that in a rent suit no matter is res judicata excepting whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists. It depends on what were the issues raised between the parties and decided in the rent suit. It is quite clear that in a case of this nature exactly the same points as have been adjudicated on in the rent suit arise, and it is not competent to maintain the present suit as against the defendant No. 1. In that respect, we may cite the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, reported as Sreenath Dutt v. Kaser Sheikh (1). It is quite clear that the relief granted by the lower Courts to the plaintiff against the defendant No. 1 cannot be supported.

The question of limitation, we need not enter into.

The appeal of the defendant No. 1 must accordingly be allowed and the decree, passed against him by the lower Courts, set aside and the suit dismissed against him. The plaintiff will pay to the defendant No. 1 his costs in this appeal.

No. 2987 OF 1915.

This appeal will be governed by the judgment in Second Appeal No. 190 of 1915 just now disposed of. It is accordingly decreed in the terms of the said judgment.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellant.

Sir Bipin K. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant-plaintiff sues on two mortgage-deeds, dated the 22nd March 1900, purporting to be executed by Dowla and Shambhu sons of Bhika. One mortgage is for Rs. 565-8-0 and the other for Rs. 500. Dowla is dead and his son is defendant No. 1, Shambhu is the respondent-defendant No. 2, the third de-defendant Govind is the brother of Dowla and Shambhu, and the fourth, fifth and sixth defendants are the sons and grandsons of another brother Khuman. The plaintiff's case is that Dowla and Shambhu were managers of the joint family and incurred the debts for the benefit of the joint family. All the defendants except Shambhu denied execution, consideration, valid attestation and valid registration of both mortgages. Shambhu admitted execution but denied receipt of consideration and made other pleas. Among other issues were issues as to whether Dowla executed with Shambhu for consideration, whether the deeds were validly attested and whether Dowla and Shambhu were managers. Neither of the lower Courts has described the signatures to the deeds quite accurately. The deed for Rs. 665-8-0 purports to be signed by the marks of Shambhu and Dowla. Then came the following entries:—

(1) Saksi (witness) Tikamdas at the request of Shambhu.

(2) Saksi Mukundram at the request and in the presence of Shambhu.

(3) By the pen of Gopalrao at the request of Shambhu.

Then comes a bit of paper gummed on possibly another signature. The deed for Rs. 500 purports to be signed by marks of Shambhu and Dowla. Then comes the word "Gowai" and then

(1) Saksi Tikamdas at the request of Shambhu.

(2) Saksi Mukundram at the request of, and in presence of, Shambhu.

(3) By the pen of Mukundram.

(4) Saksi Shambhu at the request of Dowla and Sambhu.

This Shambhu is Shambhu Patel, not the second defendant; he is dead but the other two attesting witnesses Tikamdas and Mukundram are alive.

The only witness called on the question of execution and attestation is Motiram, P. W. No. 1. He has been extremely badly examined. He says that the deed for Rs. 665-8-0 was written by Gopalrao whose signature appears on it and that the signature of Shambhu Patel is in Shambhu Patel's writing; though I do not find Shambhu Patel's name in this deed. His signature is probably covered by the paper used for repairing the deed. He says the deed was written in his presence. He says that he himself wrote the deed for Rs. 500 and that Shambhu signed in his presence, and Tikamdas and Mukundram attested in his presence. He does not remember whether Shambhu attested in his presence. He describes the sequence of events as follows: "I had been sent for by the father of the plaintiff to write the other deed (for Rs. 500). He came for me. When I arrived about 2 or 3 lines of the deed for Rs. 665-8-0 had been written and I proceeded with the other deed without waiting for this to be finished. Gopal and I were asking the mortgagors and mortgagees about the details of the deed and writing according to instructions..... I know Dowla; he is Shambhu's elder brother. He was not present when the deed written by Gopal had been executed and attested. He came after those attesting witnesses had left, and after Shambhu had signed the deed which I had written and after the witnesses had attested it. I waited for him and signed after he had put his mark in my presence".

The evidence of this witness proves that the attesting witnesses did not see Dowla sign the deed. He does not remember whether he saw Shambhu Patel attest. He was not asked whether the other two attesting witnesses saw Shambhu sign the deed. Neither side asked him any questions about this. He certainly does not prove that the attesting witnesses did not see Shambhu execute.

After the examination of this witness the plaintiff gave up Mukundram and Tikamdas whom he had cited as witnesses. He evidently considered it useless to call them in the face of Motiram's evidence that they were not present when Dowla signed.

It is clear to me from the way in which Motiram was examined by both sides that it was not considered necessary to prove the attestation in respect of Shambhu, who had admitted execution, and that the issue as to execution and attestation was considered as referring only to Dowla. As against Dowla, the plaintiff was bound to call an attesting witness to prove execution, and he was also bound to prove attestation according to law. As against Shambhu he did not have to prove due attestation unless the pleadings called for such proofs.

KACHHIRANNASSA CHOWDHURANI v. HEM CHARAN KASYA.

My views on the scope of section 70 of the Evidence Act are given in full in First Appeal No. 95 of 1914 [Balkishan v. Narainsha (1)], judgment delivered this day. It is evident that when there are two executants of a mortgage-deed, attestation may be according to law in respect of one of them and not in respect of the other. In this case the execution and due attestation was not put in issue as regards Shambhu. The deeds of mortgage on the face of them purport to have been duly attested as regards Shambhu, and there is no evidence which indicates that as regards Shambhu the attestation was not according to law. The plaintiff did not consider he was called upon to prove it, and the defendants did not cross-examine the witness on the point. The case of Shambhu must, therefore, be considered as entirely separate from that of Dowla. I have held that when execution is admitted and due attestation not denied, the question of attestation does not arise or that if it arises, the maxim "omnia presumuntur rite esse acta" comes in unless there is evidence that the attestation was not according to law. I, therefore, hold that the suit as against Shambhu cannot be dismissed on the ground that his execution of the deed was not attested according to law. The Divisional Judge, besides holding that attestation was not according to law in respect of both executants, also held that it was not proved that Dowla and Shambhu were managers or that the debts had been contracted for the benefit of the family.

In appeal to the Divisional Judge, Shambhu, as in this Court, was the sole respondent and in that Court, as in this, the sole prayer was that the mortgage deeds should be enforced as against Shambhu and his share of the property.

With reference to the above remarks I remand the suit for further trial by the Divisional Judge (1st Court) with reference to the liability of Shambhu and his share, the only point decided in this Court being that the deeds are not inoperative against Shambhu because of absence of legal attestation. Refund certificate will issue; other costs will be costs in the suit.

Case remanded.

Mortgage—Interest, heavy rate of—Proviso for capitalising arrears of interest—Undue influence—Presumption—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 4—Pleadings—Failure to give particulars, effect of.

In a suit on a mortgage bond the Court should not presume that undue influence has been exercised upon the mortgagor, from the mere fact that the rate of interest stipulated for is heavy and there is a proviso in the bond for capitalising the interest in arrear. [p. 12, col. 1]

The Court should not go into the question of undue influence at all where the defendant denies the execution of the mortgage and no particulars of the alleged undue influence are given as required by Order VI, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 12, col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 24th June 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 7th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babu Jitendranath Das Gupta), for the Appellant:—The appellant is the mortgagee and advanced Rs. 49 to the father of the respondent on a mortgage security with interest at the rate of 3 pice per rupee per month with annual rests. The simple interest comes to 56 per cent. Both Courts allowed me 56 per cent. but disallowed the compound interest on the ground of undue influence. I submit the Courts ought not to have disallowed compound interest. The respondent denied the mortgage and did not give any particulars of the alleged undue influence. The denial of mortgage and the plea of undue influence are inconsistent and cannot both be pleaded in defence in a mortgage suit. If you deny the mortgage, if you say you did not execute the mortgage bond, how can you say that the proviso for compound interest was obtained by undue influence? Referred to Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1).

RATNA V. HARNAM SINGH.

[SMITH, J.—The father executed the mortgage. The defendant knew it and ought not to have denied.]

There was no issue of undue influence and the particulars of the alleged undue influence were not given. If there had been an issue of undue influence, my client would have proved that there was no undue influence or at any rate would have asked the defendant to state the particulars of the alleged undue influence.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of the learned District Judge of Dinajpur, dated the 24th June 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The suit was brought to enforce a mortgage security. The mortgage was one that secured an advance of Rs. 49 with interest at the rate of three pice per rupee per month. There was a proviso in the mortgage bond for capitalizing the interest in arrear with annual rests. It may be admitted that the interest is heavy. The view that the learned Judges of the Courts below have taken is this: That the proviso for capitalizing the interest in arrear was obtained by undue influence. There are many reasons why such a point should not have been decided. First of all, the mortgagor or the representative of the mortgagor denied the mortgage. Secondly, no particulars of the alleged undue influence were stated as required by Order VI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, and, if that had been pleaded and the particulars given, the plaintiff might have produced evidence showing that the parties were at arm's length and had separate and independent advice. Whether that is so or not, we do not know. It is quite clear that the Court, because it does not like a proviso for capitalizing the interest when in arrear, cannot say that when such a proviso appears in the mortgage there is a presumption that undue influence was exercised. The present appeal must be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below varied by permitting the mortgagee to charge interest in accordance with the contract contained in the mortgage. A fresh period of six months is allowed for redemption. The appellant must have his costs from the respondent both in this Court and in the Courts below.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—On the 26th of July 1894 Sawan Singh and his brother Mihan Singh executed a deed of sale in favour of Bir Singh and others, under which they sold 89 bighas 7 biswas kham of land for Rs. 1,500. On the 5th of January 1914 the plaintiff-appellant Ratna instituted the present suit, asking for a declaration to the effect that this alienation was made without consideration or necessity and would not affect his reversionary rights after the death of his father Sawan Singh. The alienees pleaded that Ratna was not the son of Sawan

RATNA v. HARNAM SINGH.

Singh, that in any case he was not born before the sale was effected and that in any event the alienation was for valid necessity and consideration. The trial Court held that Ratna was the son of Sawan Singh and was born prior to the alienation which, however, was not justified, but that Rs. 1,390 out of the Rs. 1,500 had been shown to have been for valid necessity and the plaintiff was accordingly granted a decree to the effect that the sale would not be binding on him except to the extent of the mortgage charge of Rs. 1,390. The alienees preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. The plaintiff had also preferred an appeal in the District Court, which was dismissed by the same order. Against this appellate decree Ratna has preferred this second appeal through Bhagat Govind Das and we have heard Dr. Nand Lal at considerable length on behalf of the respondents. The judgment of the learned District Judge is unsatisfactory. He quite correctly commences by saying that the questions for determination were:

(1) Whether or not the plaintiff is the son of Sawan Singh, vendor? and

(2) Was the full consideration paid for valid necessity?

He, however, comes to no clear finding on either of these two points. With regard to the first, he has been unduly influenced by certain documentary evidence which was placed on the record in the Appellate Court. These documents were attached to the memorandum of appeal and an order was passed on the 26th October 1914 to the effect that they should remain on the record, whereas the judgment itself was pronounced on the 24th of October 1914. It is clear that in admitting and considering this documentary evidence, the learned District Judge has contravened the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27, Civil Procedure Code, which are mandatory, vide Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (1). Dr. Nand Lal referred us to Gopal Singh v. Jhakri Rai (2) and Jagarnath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (3). The former ruling is of no force against Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. (1), and in Jagarnath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (3) additional evidence had been taken with the consent of the parties. Having regard to the manner in which this documentary evidence was placed on the record, it is not surprising that the plaintiff-appellant was unable to explain the said documents. Although the learned District Judge does not come to a definite finding as to whether the plaintiff was the son of Sawan Singh or not, he has held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was in existence when the sale took place. This finding, however, is vitiated by the fact that to some extent at least it must have been based on the evidence wrongly admitted. As to the second point, i. e., that of necessity, the learned District Judge has come to no real finding, although in dealing with the first point he appears to have considered that the sale had been effected for inadequate consideration. Again he has assumed that at the date of the alienation there were no reversioners in existence other than the vendees themselves who could object to the alienation, although there had been no adequate enquiry on this point.

In these circumstances, we accept this appeal and, setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, remand the case to the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for definite findings on the points raised. The learned District Judge will, of course, be entitled to remand the case for further enquiry as to whether there were any other reversioners in existence at the date of the sale, should he think that course necessary, and if he does, it follows that both sides will be entitled to lead evidence on the point.

Dr. Nand Lal contended before us that the suit was barred by limitation and referred to Inayat Khan v. Shabu (4).

KASISWAR GOSWAMI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

AMIRUDDIN alias ZUKKA GAZI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Fraud—Decree obtained by false evidence, whether can be set aside.

The mere fact that a decree has been obtained by false evidence is not a sufficient ground for setting it aside. [p. 16, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Sub-Judge, Tipperah, dated the 9th September 1916, reversing that of the Munsif of Comilla, dated the 29th November 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Dyal Dey, for the Appellant.—The defendant-appellant obtained an ex parte decree for rent against the plaintiff-respondent and his brother on 22nd August 1911, and had the said decree executed against the plaintiff, who thereupon applied under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the same. His application was, however, rejected on the ground that the summons was duly served in his presence, he having declined to sign a receipt in acknowledgment of the service. The plaintiff then brought the present suit for setting aside the said ex parte decree as fraudulent. The fraud alleged was that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the claim was false and that the summons was fraudulently suppressed. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that the previous adjudication as to due service of summons was res judicata, that the tenancy of the plaintiff and his brother under the defendant was proved and that the defendant's suit was not a false one. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge, while agreeing with the Munsif that the question as to the service of summons was res judicata, held that the said tenancy was not proved and that the defendant had managed to get the ex parte decree by placing a false case before the Court, and he accordingly decreed the suit and set aside the ex parte rent decree.

I submit that the substantial point for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, having received summons in the prior suit and not having contested it, can now bring this suit on the same ground of fraud which might and ought to have been his ground of defence in that suit, the other fraud alleged by him as regards suppression of summons being found against him. Refers to section 11, Explanation IV, and Order VIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. Fraud must be pleaded specifically in defence, otherwise it is res judicata under Explanation IV. The rules of constructive res judicata preclude the plaintiff from re-agitating the same matter by merely changing the forum. See Morufal Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (1).

[FLETCHER, J., referred to Kedar Nath Das v. Hemanta Kumari Dasi (2).]

In some cases it has been held that the plaintiff in such a case must prove not only that there was fraud but that he was prevented by fraud from placing his case before the Court. See Abdul Haq v. Abdul Hafez (3), Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (4). A different view has also been taken in some other cases. But it is perhaps sufficient to prove that there was fraud and that the plaintiff was prevented by unavoidable circumstances from placing his case before the Court, as was the case in the case of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (5). In such cases the rule of res judicata does not apply and a fresh suit is maintainable. In this view all the reported cases can be reconciled.

KASISWAR GOSWAMI v. AMIRUDDIN.

[FLETCHER, J., referred to Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (6).]

That case is not against me. There the substituted service effected by the peon, in the absence of the defendant in the prior suit who could not be found, was held to be legally sufficient, and accordingly the application under section 108 of the old Civil Procedure Code was dismissed. That was consistent with the defendant's having no knowledge of the suit and being prevented from defending it. In fact the other party had him declared a lunatic in a collusive suit. There the Privy Council did not hold that the decision under section 108 of the old Code, so far as it went, was not res judicata but that it did not bar a fresh suit. It was not and could not be urged in that suit on behalf of the appellant before the Privy Council that the prior ex parte decree sought to be set aside was res judicata.

[FLETCHER, J.—In the case of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (5) the prior ex parte decree was set aside and the case which was restored was again decided ex parte.]

Yes. In that case summons was at first served on a person falsely personating the defendant. At the time of the re-hearing the defendant was prevented by illness from attending the Court and his application by wire for adjournment was rejected.

If on the authority of the case reported as Dharanidhar Aditya v. Hemanga Chandra Jana (7) the ex parte decree be set aside, in this case the original suit will have to be restored and tried again on the merits. Thus two different Courts will be given the chance of coming possibly to opposite conclusions on the same facts constituting the merits of both the cases. Therefore the essentials in a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud should be, first, that the claim must be alleged to be false, otherwise why should the decree be set aside; secondly, fraud, other than mere falsity of claim in procuring judgment; and thirdly, plaintiff having had no opportunity of defending the prior suit. In the first case perjury is inevitable and need not be separately mentioned. In the second and third cases fraud must be proved. Refers to the observation of Lord Justice Brett in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (8) quoted with approval in the case of Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (5): "Fraud of a party is an extrinsic and collateral act which will vitiate a judgment, that is, something other than that going to the merits of the prior suit, which can be gone into only accidentally in the fresh suit."

Moulvi Wahid Hussain, for the Respondent.—The contention of my learned friend that the present suit is barred by the doctrine of constructive res judicata has no substance. Explanation IV to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to this case. Refers to the case of Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (6). In the present suit it has been found that the previous suit for rent, in which the present defendant obtained an ex parte decree against the plaintiff in this suit, was false and fraudulent from start to finish. The cases in which it has been held that a fresh suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud is maintainable may be divided into two classes. In the first class may be included cases in which there was service of summons but the defendant had no knowledge of that. In the second class of cases may be included those in which the summons was served to the knowledge of the defendant. As regards the second class see Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (6), Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (5), Pran Nath Roy v. Mohesh Chandra Moitra (9) and Dwarka Prasad v. Lachhoman Das (10).

Only in Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (5) the plaintiff seeking to set aside the ex parte decree appears to have had knowledge of the prior suit but there the circumstances were peculiar.

In this case there should at least be some finding as to whether or not the plaintiff was prevented by sufficient cause from contesting the prior suit.

NUR UD-DIN KHAN v. PRAN KISHAN CHAKARVARTY.

Babu Ram Dayal Dey, in reply.—From the finding arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge it is not clear what is the kind of fraud which was committed by the present defendant in obtaining the ex parte decree in the prior suit.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 9th September 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif of Commillah. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to set aside a decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. It is not quite clear from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge what exactly he intended to find with regard to the fraud that is alleged to have been committed in the former suit. First of all, as far as I can gather, the learned Judge seems to have held that there was actual service of the summons in the former suit on the plaintiff. The learned Judge has not found whether, if it was so served, the present plaintiff was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the former suit was brought on for hearing. If he was so prevented, the fact that he had been served with the notice would be considerably discounted, as has been held in some cases notably in the Privy Council case of Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (6), where it was found that, although the plaintiff had been served in the earlier suit, steps had been taken to have him declared a lunatic so that possibly he could not attend the Court. That is a matter that must be enquired into by the learned Judge.

The next matter is that it is not quite clear whether the learned Judge intended to find that the former suit itself was a fraud or whether he meant to say that having served the present plaintiff in the former suit, what the present defendant did was to obtain a decree merely by supporting the case by false or perjured evidence; for the mere fact that the decree was obtained by false evidence would not be sufficient by itself to have the decree set aside, the case itself must be found to be a fraudulent one. In our opinion, the more satisfactory way would be to send the case back to the lower Appellate Court to have it re-heard and a more definite conclusion of fact arrived at by the learned Judge. Costs will abide the result of the re-hearing by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIII, r. 1 (a)—Order returning memorandum of appeal for presentation to proper Court, whether appealable—Plaint, whether includes memorandum of appeal—Execution of decree—Duty of executing Court.

A memorandum of appeal is not a plaint. [p. 17, col. 1.]

No appeal lies against an order of an Appellate Court directing a memorandum of appeal to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. [p. 17, col. 1.]

A Court executing a decree is bound to give effect to it as it stands [p. 17, col. 1.]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been preferred under the following circumstance. A suit was brought by the appellant for dissolution of partnership and for the taking of partnership accounts. The matter was referred to arbitration, and an award was made which was accepted by the Court and in accordance with which a decree was passed. Under the award the defendants were found entitled to Rs. 6,000 and odd from the plaintiff, and the award directed that they should realise the said amount by sale of the partnership assets. The defendants, who are respondents here, made an application to the Court for execution of the decree which, we may mention, has become final. The application was resisted on the ground that under the terms of the decree the applicants for execution were not entitled to take out execution. This objection was overruled by the Court of first instance and the appellant subsequently paid the amount of the decree and under the terms of the award he obtained possession of the property, namely, partnership buildings and stock-in-trade, etc. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge held that the decree was capable of execution but he was of opinion that no appeal lay to him, and he directed the memorandum of appeal to be returned to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court. In his opinion the value of the suit exceeded Rs. 5,000. From this order returning the memorandum of appeal the present appeal was preferred. In the alternative it was prayed that the application might be treated as one for revision if no appeal lay.

In our opinion no appeal could be preferred to this Court from the order directing the memorandum of appeal to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. Under Order XLIII, rule 1, an appeal lies from an order returning a "plaint," but a "memorandum of appeal" is not a "plaint" and therefore that Order has no application to the present case. It may be an omission on the part of the Legislature, but under the law as it stands we are unable to hold that the word "plaint" includes "the memorandum of appeal". This Court in the case of Nazar Husain v. Kesri Mal (1) held that no appeal lay from an order returning a memorandum of appeal. We see no reason to differ from the view taken in that case. We accordingly hold that this appeal as an appeal is not maintainable. Looking at the case as an application for revision we are of opinion that there are no merits in it, inasmuch as the decree made by the Court awards to the defendants the amount which they sought to recover by execution and which has been paid to them by the applicant. Whether that decree is a right decree or a wrong decree it is now too late to consider. A Court executing a decree is bound to give effect to it as it stands, and the decree in this case does award the amount claimed to the defendants. Therefore the case is without merit and we see no reason to exercise our discretionary powers under the revisional section. We accordingly dismiss the appeal, and decline to take action in revision. The respondents will get their costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAM KAUR V. ACBHRU.

the widow of Banna. The connection between Banna and the plaintiffs-respondents appears from the pedigree-table set forth below :—

The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that it was not proved that the land was the ancestral property of the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court on the other hand held that the land was proved to be the ancestral property of the plaintiffs, and that it was necessary to go into the question whether the exchanges were advantageous or not, as widows could not be trusted to manage the land in which they have a life-interest only. The Court accordingly accepted the appeal and gave plaintiffs the decree asked for. The defendants have come up to this Court on second appeal, and the first point urged on their behalf is that the land is not proved to be ancestral qua the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court has disposed of the question whether the land is ancestral in rather a summary manner. The part of its judgment which concerns this point is as follows :—

"In my opinion the land is clearly ancestral. Theoretically the Courts demand strict proof of ancestral nature of land. Practically they are ordinarily satisfied with the absence of proof to the contrary."

In my opinion this view of the law is erroneous. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case reported as Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (1) have laid it down in clear terms that "The onus of proving that the property alienated was not self acquired in the hands of the last male owner was on the plaintiff who could not under the circumstances derive any assistance from conjectures, however reasonable, in place of positive proof." This Court has enunciated the same rule in many judgments, two of which are reported as Muhammad Umar v. Nawab Din (2) and Ala Singh v. Khark Singh (3); in the latter it was laid down that the burden of proving that a particular property was ancestral lies on the person who claims it as such.

The burden is not discharged by showing that it is not unlikely the common ancestor acquired it himself. In the first Settlement of 1851 the three sons of Nikka, Jassa, Khiwan and Ruldu, were in joint possession of all the land which subsequently came to Banna. In these circumstances it is not unreasonable to presume that they got the land from their father Nikka, but this presumption cannot be extended so as to hold that Nikka acquired the land from his father Bakhta and that Bakhta acquired it from his father Rajada, who is common ancestor of Nikka and of the plaintiffs. The history of the village shews that persons of the Dhandora got along with the representatives of three other tribes purchased the whole of the village for Rs. 500 from the original proprietors. One of the Dhandoras was Nathu who had four sons, one of them being Rajada. Mr Tek Chand on behalf of the respondents urges that there is no evidence to show that any of the land was acquired by purchase or gift and the presumption should be that it was either acquired by Nathu or broken up by his descendants out of the waste lands attached to the village. He asks me to presume, therefore, that the land must have come down from Nathu and his son Rajada. I am unable to draw this presumption. There is nothing to shew how much land Nathu or his son Rajada broke up. The land that Nathu cultivated may have descended to his sons other than Rajada and the land of which Rajada was in possession may have descended to Bhola and Ram Ditta, the ancestors of the plaintiffs, and the land which Nikka left may have been acquired in the first instance by him or by his father. There is certainly no presumption that Nikka's land came down to him from his grandfather. I, therefore, differ from the lower Appellate Court and hold that the onus lay heavily upon the plaintiffs to prove that the land was their ancestral property, and that they have not discharged this onus.

Prior to 1894 Banna was in possession of 2/3rds of the land left by Nikka and Kesar was in possession of the other 1/3rd. When Kesar died in 1894, mutation of his share was effected in favour of Banna who claimed to be an heir, on the ground that he was the adopted son of Ruldu. No one came forward to object to his claim and the land was duly mutated in his name. Mr. Sheo Narain cites Bhagat Singh v. Sher Singh (4) as authority for the proposition that the principle of reversion to the heirs of a donor or appointor is limited to property over which he had not an unrestricted power of disposal, and consequently they cannot succeed to the land of the appointed heir on the latter's death without a male descendant, where such land is not ancestral qua themselves. In accordance with this authority he urges that the land of Banna will not revert to the plaintiffs after the death of the widow and that consequently they cannot control her dealing with the property. Mr. Tek Chand does not dispute the authority of this ruling, but urges that the fact that Banna was allowed to succeed to Kesar's share shews that he must have been the formally adopted son of Ruldu and not merely an heir appointed according to custom. His argument is that Banna, being the formally adopted son of Ruldu, must be regarded just as if he were his natural son, and that this being so the plaintiffs are his heirs, whether the property was ancestral qua them or not. It was, however, never urged in the Courts below that Banna was anything more than an appointed heir of Ruldu and I do not see how the point can be raised now for the first time. The parties are Jats and governed by Customary Law, and there is no reason to suppose that Banna was anything more than an heir appointed according to usual custom. Article 43 of Rattigan's Digest shews that the appointed heir does not acquire the right to succeed to the collateral relatives of the person who appoints him, where no formal adoption has taken place. But the exception under that Article shews that among certain tribes an appointed heir does succeed collaterally. The mere fact that Banna was allowed to succeed to Kesar's share does not, in my opinion, shew that he was the formally adopted son of Ruldu. Banna was in possession of the whole of Nikka's property as the appointed heir of Ruldu, the property was not ancestral qua the plaintiffs, and they have, therefore, no locus standi to control the alienations effected by Banna's widow.

I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the lower Appellate Court restore the order of the first Court dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal accepted.

to entitle the landlord to get back khas possession of the land. [p. 20, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2d Court, Bardwan, dated the 14th July 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 26th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hira Lal Sanyal, for the Appellants. — This appeal is on behalf of the defendants and it arises out of a suit for khas possession of a piece of land lying within the Bardwan Municipality. The tenancy is from year to year. The question for determination is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to get khas possession without the service of a notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. Without a proper notice to quit as required by section 106 the defendants cannot be ejected. See Mahananda Roy v. Sarat Moni Debi (1), Narayan Dasappa v. Ali Saibai (2), Madar Saheb v. Sannabawa Gujranshah (3), Parameshri v. Vittappa Shanbaga (4) and Netrapal Singh v. Kalyan Das (5).

[FLETCHER, J., refers to Basirat Ali Khan v. Manirulla (6).]

One of the terms of the lease is: "The lessor will have right to take khas possession whenever he will require that".

[FLETCHER, J.—On the terms of the contract section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply, and so no notice to quit is necessary.]

The provisions for resumption in leases are not uncommon, and such terms as mentioned in the lease are often found in almost all contracts, and in spite of that reasonable notice to quit is always given. Refers to Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal (7).

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J. This is an appeal by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bardwan, dated the 4th July 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The suit was brought for ejectment. The defendants are the original tenant and the two transferees. No notice to quit was served on the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 under the provisions of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Judge considered that the covenant restricting alienation in the lease was binding and, therefore, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were trespassers and had no interest. It is not necessary for us to go into that question. The case is a perfectly simple one on the terms of the lease. It was a lease to the defendant No. 1 for the purpose of building a pucca house on the land. The lease provided that, if the landlord desired to resume possession of the land, he could do so provided he paid for the value of the buildings; that means the buildings that were to be erected in accordance with the prior provision in the lease. There are no buildings on the land within the meaning of the prior provision of the lease, because they were all swept away by flood. The present buildings are huts and walls not coming within the meaning of the purpose for which the lease was granted. The landlord can, therefore, take possession of the land at any time upon paying compensation, if any. It is said that he cannot take possession without giving notice. That is absurd. The parties must stick to the bargain made and if the defendant No. 1 thought it worth his while to take lease of a piece of land within the limits of the Municipality of Bardwan at a rent of 12 annas a year subject to the provision that the landlord might at any moment re take possession on payment of full compensation for the buildings, then he must stand strictly to that bargain however inconvenient that may be. There are no provisions in the Transfer of Property Act requiring notice to be given in such a case. Those provisions for notice were inserted there to provide for cases where the parties are not regulated by their contracts. It is quite clear that the landlord in this case is entitled to resume possession. The suggested hardship on the defendants in having to deliver possession at any moment is considerably discounted when the fact is taken into consideration that for four years by resisting the plaintiffs' just claim the defendants have managed to maintain possession of this land in the town of Burdwan at a rent of 12 annas per annum contrary to the terms of the lease. I am not disposed, as at present advised, to disagree with the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment, and I agree with the conclusion arrived at by him. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

In order to constitute res judicata the two Courts must be of "concurrent" jurisdiction as regards the pecuniary limits as well as the subject matter of the suit. [p. 22, col 2; p. 23, col 1.]

Apart from any special statutory provision, accounts cannot be adjudicated upon by a Court when no further relief can be granted. Ordinarily a suit for accounts upon a mortgage cannot be maintained by the mortgagor unless he also asks for redemption [p. 23, col. 3; p. 24, col. 1.]

An adjudication which cannot be the basis of any relief is not binding on the parties. [p. 24, col. 1.]

Where on taking the accounts of a usufructuary mortgage it appears that the mortgagee has kept no regular accounts, every reasonable presumption should be made against him. [p. 25, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Suit No. 24 of 1910, dated the 21st July 1912.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants.

Messrs. F. W. Dillon and P. S. Kotwal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Hoshangabad, dismissing a suit for foreclosure, based on a mortgage deed dated the 13th January 1870, executed by the first defendant Ganpat. This defendant died since the filing of this appeal, and his legal representatives have been brought on the record, on their own application, though they do not seem to have any interest left in the mortgaged property, which was purchased at an auction sale in execution of a decree against Ganpat by the 2nd defendant. The document in suit is in part a usufructuary mortgage and in part a deed of conditional sale. The mortgage is not redeemable within twenty-three years, except on terms of a highly penal character therein laid down. In 1870, the mortgagees brought a suit for possession in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner and obtained a decree on the 13th October 1870, and they have been in possession ever since.

The main questions involved in this appeal are whether on a right interpretation of the document, the mortgagees in possession are bound to credit more than Rs. 751 per annum, as stated therein, and if so, what is the state of account between the parties. The parties rely on certain previous litigation as deciding finally the first and to some extent the second part of the question with which we are concerned. There are some minor points for decision in this appeal which need not be noticed at this stage, though they will have to be dealt with in deciding the grounds of appeal.

It appears to us to be necessary to give an outline of the various former suits which are relied on by the parties, as having the force of res judicata. Before proceeding to do so, it is necessary to mention, what is admitted by Counsel on both sides, that suits above the value of Rs. 5,000 could not be entertained either by an Assistant-Commissioner, or by an Extra Assistant Commissioner. Such suits were exclusively cognisable by the Deputy Commissioner who was in these Provinces what is called a Zilla Judge in the old Bengal Regulations and in later enactments, a District Judge.

MUKAND RAM SUKUL v. SHEG NARAIN.

We now proceed to refer to the various suits to which the parties have called our attention in this appeal, as having a material bearing on the case. In 1877 the mortgagor filed a suit in the Court of Mr. Sultan Ali (Suit No. 267 of 1877), an Extra Assistant Commissioner. The plaint in that suit has been eliminated but from the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, in Second Appeal No. 89 of 1879 (Exhibit D-28), it appears that the suit was one for "rendition of accounts of receipts and disbursements on account of Mouza Dhamni," the mortgaged village. This judgment of Mr. Grant (afterwards Sir Charles Grant) was followed by a decree directing that "the defendants shall render to the plaintiff a true statement of the charges and receipts of Mouza Dhamni up to the close of Sambat 1933." In execution of this decree, Mr. Vasudeo Ballal Kher, an Extra Assistant Commissioner, held an inquiry by appointing a Commissioner and the result of that inquiry was stated in the final order (Exhibit D-30) to be that "Rs. 13,041 should be credited to the Ganpatsing for seven years 1927 to 1933 both inclusive." It seems an attempt was made by the mortgagor to realise by execution Rs. 13,041 from the mortgagees but this attempt failed. In Exhibit P-5 Col. Ricketts, Additional Commissioner, notes as follows: "The petitioner is entitled to the benefit of that credit in the accounts between him and Makundram Tulsiram but he cannot take out execution for the amount." No second appeal appears to have been filed from the appellate order of Col. Ricketts. In the meanwhile the mortgagor filed in 1881 a second suit for "rendition of accounts" in the Court of Mr. Priest, an Extra Assistant Commissioner. The claim was decreed (Exhibit D-29), following the previous decree of Sir Charles Grant in 1878. Mr. Priest's decree was for rendition of accounts for the Sambat years 1934 to 1937. It was followed up by execution proceedings before Mr. Williams, Extra Assistant Commissioner (Exhibit D-15). The certified copy of these execution proceedings is somewhat imperfect, as the original is torn in many places. Proceedings against the mortgagees by way of attachment had taken place, treating them as persons guilty of a contempt. Some accounts were filed on behalf of the mortgagees, which, as far as can be made out, were meant to show a loss. Objections were taken but Mr. Williams, who apparently understood the decree as one for "explaining accounts," did not eventually record any findings of his own. In 1885 the mortgagor filed a suit (Suit No. 42 of 1885) for redemption and for Rs. 30,958, alleged to have been recovered by the mortgagees in excess of the mortgage-money. A decree for redemption was passed, conditionally on the mortgagor paying Rs. 32,529-13-6. The judgment in this suit is Exhibit P-4. It was passed by Mr. Vithal Ramchandra, Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was by notification No. 4467, dated the 9th September 1884, invested with the powers of a Deputy Commissioner, under section 16 of Act XIV of 1865, Central Provinces Courts Act.

This judgment was reversed on appeal by Col. Ricketts, who dismissed the suit (Exhibit D-26). The main ground for dismissing the suit was that the mortgage money had not been paid off out of the usufruct. The Appellate Court also remarked that it was not necessary to go deeply into the defendants' account. The result was that the state of accounts between the parties was left open for future decision. Although the appellants in their fifth ground of appeal suggested that the litigation of 1885 had the effect of res judicata, this was abandoned at the hearing by their learned Counsel, and, in our opinion, the fifth ground of appeal is untenable.

The first point for consideration is whether the mortgagees' liability to account for the usufruct is res judicata. Sir Charles Grant's decision was on second appeal from the Court of Mr. Sultan Ali, who in 1877 had powers up to Rs. 1,000 as would appear from a register kept in this Court. In 1881 Mr. Priest also had power to try suits up to the same value. We cannot agree with the Counsel for the appellants that the question of the mortgagees' liability to account for more than Rs. 751 a year was not directly and substantially in issue in the two former suits. But in order to constitute res judicata the two Courts must be of "concurrent jurisdiction as regards the pecuniary limits as well as the subject-matter," as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1). In 1877 there was no suit for a foreclosure known in these Provinces. By the Central Provinces Laws Act (Act XX of 1875), all Bengal Regulations were repealed except certain Regulations declared therein to be in force. These included Regulation II of 1798 and Regulation XVII of 1806, as they stood with the later amendments made up to 1875. A mortgagee, desirous of taking foreclosure proceedings, had to apply to the Zilla Judge, that is, the Deputy Commissioner, and this after the year of grace had to be followed up, where necessary, by a suit for possession. In our opinion we have to test the competency of the Court, with reference to the analogue of a suit for foreclosure in those days. Neither Mr. Sultan Ali nor Mr. Priest could have tried a suit for possession of the mortgaged property, the principal amount secured by which alone is Rs. 14,000. Nor could these officers have entertained the application under Regulation XVII of 1806. Even if a suit for foreclosure could have been brought in those days, neither of these Courts could have tried it, having regard to the pecuniary limits of their jurisdiction. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the question of the mortgagees' liability is not res judicata by reason of the two previous suits.

We have, therefore, to determine this question upon an interpretation of the mortgage deed. The document makes an estimate of the income on the basis of the jamabandis of the previous year, allows for certain expenditure including Government revenue, and the balance of Rs. 751 is agreed to be credited every year towards the mortgage debt. It will be observed that Rs. 751 is less than the interest payable under the document. It is not expressly stated that the excess interest will be personally paid by the mortgagor. As pointed out by the Judicial Commissioner in the former suit, there is no express covenant entitling the mortgagees to appropriate anything above this figure, if actually realised, except where the excess is due to improvements made by them. The parties must be taken to have known that the assets will increase within the period of twenty-three years, during which the mortgage was practically irredeemable. In our opinion the one-sided bargain pleaded by the mortgagees cannot be presumed but must be made out by clear and unambiguous stipulations in the deed, especially as the mortgagees were dealing with an illiterate rustic. We hold then that the mortgagees are accountable for the usufruct actually realised.

We have now to consider whether the finding arrived at in Exhibit D-30 by Mr. Vasudeo Ballal Kher (an officer with powers up to Rs. 5,000) is final and binding on the parties. The lower Court has mistaken Mr. Kher for Mr. Vithalrao, in part of its judgment. Mr. Kher in execution of Sir Charles Grant's decree found that Rs. 13,041 should be credited to Ganpatsingh for the first seven years' profits. The defendant No. 2 has filed a statement which would go to show that on this finding, even if credit is given in later years for Rs. 751 only, the mortgage debt has been satisfied. We have not tested this statement, as we have come to the conclusion that the finding is ultra vires and is also not res judicata. We are inclined to think that the decree of this Court did not authorise an adjudication by the Court of first instance. What was probably meant was that the mortgagees should explain their accounts by filing extracts from their books. The judgment of this Court (Exhibit D 28) recognises that the suit was not "one for accounts, in the sense of one for money due after examination of accounts. It was simply for an account as such and without any further relief". Apart from a special Statute, such as the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879), it does not appear that accounts can be adjudicated upon by a Court, when no further relief can be granted. The Bengal Regulations, as introduced here by Act XX of 1875, did not authorise such a suit. In Hari v. Lakshman (2) Westropp, C. J., says, "ordinarily a suit for an account upon a mortgage cannot be maintained by the mortgagor unless he asks also for redemption". It seems to us that an adjudication which cannot be the basis of any relief is not binding on the parties. A declaratory decree declaring Rs. 13,041 as the credit would be one beyond the pecuniary limits of Mr. Kher. For reasons given in paragraph 5 of our judgment, we hold that this finding is not res judicata.

We may notice a ruling of this Court to which no reference has been made at the Bar. In the case of Kalooram v. Ramkishan (3) Stevens, J. C., held that in a suit for accounts the Court trying the suit does not lose its jurisdiction merely because the amount found due after enquiry happens to exceed the limit of the jurisdiction of the Court. [Cf. Olpherts v. Arjundas (4).] We think this decision cannot be extended to the case where only a mere declaration, if anything, can be granted by way of relief. If the plaintiff chooses to bring his suit in a Court with limited powers, all that can be declared—even if it were proper to make such a declaration—is that at least Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 5,000, as the case may be, should be credited to the plaintiff. More than that amount is not in that Court's power to declare.

We can find no admission by the plaintiffs that they actually realised Rs. 13,041 in the first seven years. These plaintiffs no doubt start their accounts with the findings of Mr. Vithalrao in 1885 (Exhibit P.4). This finding is based on the finding of Mr. Kher in Exhibit D.30. Practically the plaintiffs adopt it with certain variations. If the plaintiffs are not entitled to introduce their own variation, they ought not to be held bound by the finding of Mr. Kher, by reason of their having partially adopted it as the basis of the suit.

The lower Court has held that under the terms of the mortgage the plaintiffs can only foreclose in respect of the principal, the interest not being a charge on the property (according to the lower Court). This conclusion is deduced from the following passages in the mortgage-deed: "In case I fail to repay the balance at the stipulated time, the whole of the Mouza together with the air land will stand as sold to you on Miti Jaith Badi Punwa 1949 in lieu of the principal amount of the bond. You should then consider this mortgage deed as an absolute sale-deed. The amount of compound interest which will remain due by me will be paid separately." It appears to us that the parties were not contemplating foreclosure proceedings at all. They had in their mind the contingency of a deed of conditional sale executing itself and becoming absolute. In 1870 it would have been somewhat difficult to say whether a right of redemption was left to the mortgagor after the stipulated period. It would have been not easy to say whether the Bengal Regulations or the spirit of those Regulations applied to the Central Provinces. It was in 1873 that their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokuldoss v. Kriparam (5) decided the question in favour of the mortgagor. We note that it is nobody's case that the conditional sale became absolute in Sambat 1949. The clause then on which the District Judge relies is void, on the ground that notwithstanding the contract a right of redemption remained in view of the fact that either the Bengal Regulations were in force or the spirit of the Regulations was being given effect to by the Courts in the Central Provinces. The document is silent as to what should be the amount for which foreclosure is to take place. But the document clearly says that if the mortgagor redeemed he must pay the principal and interest. The interest, therefore, is a charge on the property and the plaintiffs are entitled to foreclose the whole of the mortgage debt, including interest.

There are certain judgments filed in the case where the first plaintiff was sued by the predecessors-in-title of the 2nd and 3rd plaintiffs for the profits of their share. The findings arrived at in these suits are not binding on the defendants being res inter alias. For want of mutuality the defendants cannot rely on them as against the plaintiffs. Nor can the admissions made by one set of plaintiffs in such a suit against the others be said to be admissions by the mortgagees as such. In our opinion, these judgments must be excluded from our consideration.

The lower Court seems to think that the plaintiffs are responsible for the extinction of sir rights. Under the mortgage-deed, the mortgagees were not bound to cultivate them. They were at liberty to lease them out to tenants. By Act XVII of 1889 which received the Governor-General's assent on the 29th October 1889 and came into force at once, sir rights were extinguished if the sir land was unoccupied by the proprietor on the 29th October 1889 and the land had been leased to tenants for the previous six years "without an express preservation of his sir rights." The mortgagees could not anticipate this legislation and they were entitled to lease out the sir land.

We have now to determine the amount due to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have either kept no accounts or are suppressing them. We are inclined to agree with the District Judge that the latter is the more probable hypothesis. In two previous suits they were directed to render accounts. Assuming that the plaintiffs did not at first know that it was their duty to keep accounts, we consider that they should have started keeping them after the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner in 1878. No explanation has been offered as to why accounts in later years were not kept, or having been kept not produced. The assets in later years must have been very large compared with the estimate made in 1870. It is not possible for the defendants to give evidence regarding the usufruct. The village papers only give the rental demand. Miscellaneous sources of legitimate income are not shown in them. Oral evidence on such matters can scarcely be satisfactory. We think in these circumstances every reasonable presumption should be made against the plaintiffs. Following the decision of Sir Richard Couch in Baboo Kullyan Dass v. Baboo Sheo Nundun Pershad Singh (6), we set off interest against profits and hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to anything more than the principal amount of Rs 14,000. There will be the usual foreclosure decree giving six months' time for payment. Each party should bear his costs in both Courts.

Before closing this judgment, we would notice that Ganpat's son Dattu appeared in person before us and suggested that his father was eccentric. It is not possible to entertain such a plea now. One of the appellants is dead and no application has yet been made to bring his legal representatives on the record. The case is analogous to that provided for by Order XLI, rule 4. The decree of the lower Court will be reversed as against all the plaintiffs, though the decree of this Court will be in the name of the two surviving plaintiffs.

Let the decree be drawn up on the lines indicated in this judgment.

A turn of worship at a temple is not an interest in immovable property. Therefore, a suit to enforce a mortgage of a turn of worship is not governed by Article 132 of the Limitation Act but by Article 120. [p. 27, col. .]

A question of limitation can be raised in second appeal even where it has not been set up as a defence in any of the lower Courts [p. 26, col. 2.]

NARASINGHA BANA GOSWAMI v. PROLHODMAN TEVARI.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunoda Charan Sen (with him Babu Khitish Chandra Neogy), for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage of a pala or turn of worship. The mortgage-bond was executed on 29th October 1902; the due date mentioned in the bond for payment is 30th April 1903. Rs. 25 was paid as interest on 12th October 1905. The present suit was brought on 15th April 1915, i.e., 10 years after the payment of the interest.

The pala or turn of worship is not an immoveable property, therefore, 12 years' limitation would not apply but 6 years' limitation would apply. Therefore the suit is barred by time. In the lower Court the question of limitation was not argued, though an issue was raised on it. I can raise the question of limitation now on the authorities of this Court.

[CHITTY, J.—You have to show that 6 years' limitation would apply and Article 132, Limitation Act, does not cover it.]

It would come under Article 120, where no other Article applies.

Pala is moveable property. See Jato Kar v. Makund Deb (1).

The next point is that a pala is not transferable, and even if it is transferable, an immemorial custom of transferability of these palas should be proved. I rely on Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Halidar (2).

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack (with him Babu Surjya Kumar Guha), for the Respondent.—The suit would come under Article 132. Under authorities extending over 30 years the shebaiti right has been held to be immoveable property.

[CHITTY, J.—The case in Jato Kar v. Makund Deb (1) is against you.]

In both the lower Courts the case proceeded upon the assumption that 12 years' limitation would apply and the case was tried on that footing, and the facts were, therefore, not investigated. There may not have been any payment after 1905 but there may have been acknowledgments. What was actually mortgaged was the shebaiti right and the shebaiti right is immoveable property.

[CHITTY, J.—The shebaiti right may be immoveable property, but here the turn of worship was mortgaged.]

In Jato Kar v. Makund Deb (1) there was no question of limitation at all.

[CHITTY, J.—Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (3) is against you.]

Babu Gunoda Charan Sen was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce a mortgage of a pala or turn of worship owned and held by the defendant at the temple of the deity Dhaneswari in a $2\frac{1}{2}$ anna share. The mortgage was dated 29th October 1902, the due date for payment being 30th April 1903. The plaintiff in his plaint alleged that Rs. 25 had been paid as interest on 12th October 1905. The suit was filed on 15th April 1915. The question of payment of interest was not gone into by the first Court inasmuch as 13th and 14th April 1915 were holidays. The suit was, therefore, within time if the period of limitation be taken as 12 years. It seems to have been assumed in both the Courts below that the period of limitation would be 12 years, so that in the District Judge's Court the question of limitation was not touched upon. In the grounds of appeal, however, to this Court which have been filed by the defendant this question was distinctly raised. The seventh ground is that the suit is barred by limitation upon the pleadings, inasmuch as the turn of worship is not immoveable property. With regard to the objection that this point was not raised in the Courts below we need only refer to the provisions of section 3 of the Limitation Act, which requires the Court to take notice of a question of limitation even though it has not been set up as a defence. The question of limitation depends on whether a turn of worship is to be regarded as immoveable or moveable property. On this point the authorities of this Court are clear, and there cannot be any longer doubt upon it. In the case of Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (3) it was held that a suit to enforce the right to the worship of an idol was governed by Article 118 of Act IX of 1871 (the Limitation Act then in force) and that not having been preferred within 6 years it was barred by lapse of time. In the case of Jato Kar v. Makund Deb (1) the point was not one of limitation but of attestation of a usufructuary mortgage bond of a turn of worship under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was there held that a turn of worship is not an interest in immovable property. That being so, it follows that this suit is not governed by Article 132 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act but by Article 120. The suit having been filed long after 6 years had expired, even if the period be taken as running from the payment of interest in October 1905, it is out of time. The appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed, but, under the circumstances, without costs.

(3) 4 C. 683; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 434.

LALJI SAHU v. LACHMI NARAIN SINGH.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 8, 9—Appearance, what amounts to—Plaintiff present in Court but not prosecuting case—Dismissal for default—Restoration, application for.

A party may appear in two ways, either by person or by Pleader. If he is not appearing in person, the mere fact that he is standing in Court does not amount to an appearance within the real meaning of the word. [p. 27, col. 2; p. 28, col. 1.]

On a case being called on, the parties appeared in Court but the plaintiff did not prosecute the case. The Court dismissed the suit for the plaintiff's default. The plaintiff then applied for restoration of the suit, but the Court now held that the suit was not dismissed for default and that, therefore, it had no jurisdiction to restore it:

Held, that the order dismissing the suit was an order made under Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the Court was required to deal with the matter under Order IX, rule 9. [p. 28, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the Munsif of Jamui, dated the 16th June 1917.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

The applicant before us was a plaintiff in a suit for a declaration that an entry in a Record of Rights was incorrect. The case was instituted on the 28th of January 1916. On the 26th February 1917 an order was recorded in the order-sheet:—

"The plaintiff appears on call but does not prosecute the case. Defendant is ready. Ordered that the suit be dismissed for plaintiff's default with costs to defendant."

On the 24th March 1917 an application was made for restoration of the case under Order IX, rule 9. The learned Munsif, who had himself recorded that the case was dismissed for the plaintiff's default on the 26th February 1917, recorded on the 16th June 1917 that it was not dismissed for default and that, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to make any order restoring it. The plaintiff, therefore, applies to this Court in revision asking us to set aside the order made on the 16th June 1917.

It is contended on his behalf that the plaintiff's appearance and refusal to prosecute amounted to a non-appearance, and that the learned Munsif on that date rightly recorded the matter as a case of default, and that, therefore, the learned Munsif was bound by law to take up, on the plaintiff's application, the question whether under Order IX, rule 9, it should be restored. By the opposite party it is contended that Order IX, rule 9, being appealable, this Court has no power to interfere in revision. It is obvious that there is no order under Order IX, rule 9, against which an appeal would lie. What the Munsif has actually done is to refuse to exercise jurisdiction in the matter at all. We are, therefore, only concerned with the question whether in fact the order made on the 26th of February was an order under Order IX, rule 8. We are of opinion that the view taken in the case of Gopala Row v. Maria Susoya Pillai (1) is correct. A party may appear in two ways, either by person or by Pleader. If he is not appearing in person, the mere fact that he is standing in Court does not amount to an appearance within the real meaning of the word. It could not be suggested for instance that if when a case was called on, a litigant stood up at the back of the Court and applied for a few minutes' time to bring his Pleader he would be appearing in the true meaning of the word. We are aware that a different view was taken in Esmail Ebrahim v Haji Jan Mahomed Haji Mahomed (2), but are of opinion that the Madras decision should be followed. The Calcutta cases seem to have gone still further, that even when both plaintiff and his Pleader are present in Court, if the Pleader declines to proceed with the case there is in fact no appearance. It is sufficient for us to say that where the plaintiff is not appearing in person, and his Pleader is absent, the presence of the plaintiff in Court is not an appearance. We hold that the order of the 26th February 1917 was an order made under Order IX, rule 8, and that the learned Munsif was required to deal with the matter under Order IX, rule 3. He will now proceed to do so.

(1) 30 M. 274; 17 M. L. J. 225.

SHAMRAO v. SATYA BHAWU BAI.

Case sent back.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 35 (4), 91—
Tenant right, whether can be willed away Ouster of true tenant by devisee—Suit by tenant to recover possession Limitation—Surrender, implied—Payment of rent on behalf of tenant

S, a co-sharer of a village, gave a lease of the ordinary tenant right of his sir fields to R., another co-sharer, for 149 years. A sum of Rs. 1,490 was paid in advance by way of rent for the period of the lease. R. died leaving a Will, by which he bequeathed all his property to his mother A., on whose death R's widow brought a suit for possession of the holding on the ground that her husband had no right to will away the holding and that notwithstanding the bequest she remained the ordinary tenant of the holding:

Held, 1) that R had no right to will away the tenant right; [p. 29, col. 1.]

2) that section 91 of the C. P. Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case as the ouster, if any, of the plaintiff from the holding was not at the instance of the landlord; [p. 29, col. 1.]

3) that there had been no implied surrender under section 35 (4) of the C. P. Tenancy Act, inasmuch as the payment of rent in advance must be taken to have been on behalf of the true tenant. [p. 29, col. 1.]

A mere non-cultivation of a holding by or on behalf of a tenant is not in itself sufficient to constitute an implied surrender. [p. 29, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 276 of 1915, dated the 26 October 1915.

Mr. M. R. Ditt, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gharpure, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Certain sir land held by one Shamrao, who was a co-sharer in the village of Babulgaon, was leased for 149 years to another co-sharer Ramrao. This was on the 4th April 1903. It is clear that the lease was not a proprietary lease but a lease of the ordinary tenant right. Ramrao died in 1907, leaving a Will by which he purported to bequeath all his property to his mother Musammât Ahalyabai. She, it would seem, was recorded as the ordinary tenant of the holding. She died in 1913 and the plaintiff, who is the widow of Ramrao, brings a suit for possession of the holding, on the ground that her deceased husband had no power to will away the ordinary tenant right and that notwithstanding the bequest to her mother in law, she remained in law the ordinary tenant of the field in dispute. The facts of the case are practically admitted and the only question that remains for decision is whether lapse of time stands in her way. It is urged in the first place that Ahalyabai by reason of her adverse possession became a fresh stock of descent and that the plaintiff is not necessarily heir to her mother-in-law's stridhan property. As, however, Ahalyabai was only in possession from 1907 to 1913, she could not acquire by the ordinary law of prescription a stridhan title to the property. It may, however, be noticed that as she left no issue, the heir to the stridhan property would be her husband's sapinda and admittedly Ahalyabai was the heir of her husband. This disposes of the first two grounds of appeal.

It is urged again that Ahalyabai was recognised by the proprietary body as the ordinary tenant of these fields. She thereby became an ordinary tenant from whom descent is again to be traced. It is not altogether clear how the proprietary body recognised Ahalyabai as tenant. Under the terms of the patta executed in 1903 a sum of Rs. 1,490 was paid in advance for the rent of 149 years. So there was no receipt of rent to be granted by the landlord, nor is it indicated in the argument at the Bar in what other manner Ahalyabai was recognised as a tenant to the exclusion of the present plaintiff who was living in the same house with her mother-in-law.

The ouster, if any, by Ahalyabai was admittedly not at the instance of the landlord. Therefore section 94 of the Tenancy Act will not apply. There remains the question whether section 35, clause 4, of the Tenancy Act is inapplicable to the case. I think it would have been applicable but for the fact that the rent is paid in advance for 149 years. This must be regarded as a payment on behalf of the person legally entitled to the ordinary tenant right.

It is settled law in these Provinces that a tenant right cannot be willed away. Therefore, rent paid in advance must be deemed in law to be a payment on behalf of the true tenant, that is, the present plaintiff. One condition essential for the application of the rule of implied surrender laid down under section 35, clause (4), is wanting in this case, i. e., there has been a payment on behalf of the real tenant. A mere non cultivation by or on behalf of the tenant is not in itself sufficient to constitute an implied surrender.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. I allow full Pleader's fee in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

BOCHAI MAHTON—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR
—APPELLANT

ISRI JAJI—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Execution—Attachment by consent, effect of—Estoppel—Judgment-debtor, whether can object to sale—Order directing occupancy holding to be sold—Appeal, whether lies.

The primary object of an attachment is that pending the sale the right of the judgment-debtor in the property shall be kept intact for the benefit of any possible purchaser [p. 31, col. 2.]

Consent to attachment means only that the owner of the property attached accepts the limitation put upon his right to alienate the property pending the attachment. [p. 31, col. 2.]

Plaintiff obtained an ex parte money decree against the defendant. The latter applied for a re-hearing of the case and pending the re-hearing consented to the attachment of an occupancy holding belonging to him. The case was again decreed against the defendant and the plaintiff applied to have the decree executed by sale of the attached holding. The defendant objected that the holding was not transferable and that he had no saleable interest therein. The Munsif held that the holding could not be sold but that the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor could be sold. On appeal the District Judge held that the defendant having consented to the attachment was estopped from objecting to the sale:

Held, (1) that the Munsif's order was appealable: [p. 31, col. 2.]

(2) that it was idle for the Munsif to put up to sale the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor when the whole question before him was whether the judgment-debtor had any right, title or interest in the holding at all; [p. 31, cols. 1 & 2.]

(3) that the defendant was not estopped from objecting to the sale by the fact that he had consented to the attachment [p. 31, col. 2.]

Second appeal against an order of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 9th June 1917, affirming that of the Additional Munsif, Darbhanga, dated the 14th March 1917.

FACTS.—Respondent obtained an ex parte decree for money against the appellant. Appellant thereafter applied to set aside the ex parte decree. Respondent consented to re-hearing being allowed if appellant's occupancy holding was attached before judgment. This was consented to by appellant, whereupon the Court made an order for attachment before judgment and the ex parte decree was set aside and the suit restored to its original number. Appellant,

however, again defaulted and ex parte decree was again passed against him. In execution of this decree respondent advertised the holding for sale. The appellant objected to the sale, on the ground that the holding was not saleable because there was no custom in the village of transferability of occupancy holdings without the consent of the landlord. On the 14th of March 1917 the learned Munsif made the following order: "The defendant consented to the kasht land in question to be attached in this very suit. There is no evidence of transferability of occupancy holdings. So the holding itself cannot be sold. But the right, title and interest of judgment-debtor will be sold.....Let the sale take place accordingly." That very day the sale was held. On the 5th of April 1917 the appellant applied to the learned Munsif to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 90, and section 47, Civil Procedure Code. He also appealed to the District Judge against the order of the Munsif ordering the sale. On the 9th June 1917 the District Judge dismissed the appeal, holding that the appellant's consent to attachment estopped him from objecting to the sale. On the 30th of June 1917 the Munsif dismissed the application under Order XXI, rule 90, and section 47, Civil Procedure Code, for default. On the 3rd of July 1917 the present appeal was filed in the High Court against the order of the District Judge passed on appeal. During the pendency of the High Court appeal the sale was confirmed on the 7th of July 1917. On the 9th July 1917 appellant applied under Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, to have the order of the Munsif dismissing his application under Order XXI, rule 90, and section 47, Civil Procedure Code, set aside. This was also rejected. Thereafter appellant's application to have delivery of possession to the respondent stayed pending the disposal of this appeal was rejected by Mullick and Roe, JJ., on the 17th of August 1917.

Mr. Hasan Jan, for the Respondent, raised preliminary objections to the hearing of the appeal.—The order appealed from is only preliminary order dismissing the appellant's objection to the transferability of the holding. It is not a "decree" within the definition of the term in the Code. The present second appeal is, therefore, incompetent. Moreover, the very day the order appealed from was passed, the sale was held. After the sale the appellant applied to set aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 90, and section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and in his application stated that as there was no custom of transferability the sale was illegal. That application was dismissed for default and the sale was confirmed. Thereafter the appellant applied to have the order dismissing his application under Order XXI, rule 90, and section 47, Civil Procedure Code, set aside under Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. This application was also dismissed. No appeal has been filed against the sale or against the subsequent orders dismissing the applications under Order XXI, rule 90, section 47, and Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. The sale has, therefore, become final and any order that may be passed in this appeal cannot affect it. The present appeal is, therefore, infructuous and untenable.

[Their Lordships intimated that they would hear the appeal on the merits before deciding the preliminary objections.]

Mr. Sivanarain Bose (for Mr. Sharoshi Charan Mitra), for the Appellant, contended that the consent to the attachment could not operate as estoppel.

Mr. Hasan Jan, for the Respondent.—Consent to attachment implied that the property was saleable. There was no object in having the attachment if the respondent did not wish to sell the holding in pursuance of that attachment. The appellant must have been aware of this intention on the respondent's part. In spite of this the appellant agreed to the attachment. The appellant must, therefore, be taken to have waived his objection to the intended sale. Moreover, the act of the appellant in agreeing to the attachment induced in the mind of the respondent a belief that the holding was saleable and that belief induced the respondent to agree to have the ex parte decree set aside: he thought he had sufficient security for the realisation of his dues. The appellant was benefited thereby, the ex parte decree having been set aside. The appellant is, therefore, estopped from contending that the holding is not transferable.

BOCHAI MAHTON v. ISRI JAJI.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—(January 9th, 1918).—In this case the respondent before us held a money decree obtained ex parte against the appellant. The appellant had applied for a re-hearing of his case and consented pending the re-hearing to an attachment of an occupancy holding which, it is now alleged, was not transferable by custom. On the case being again decreed against the appellant, the respondent applied to have the decree executed by sale of the attached holding. The appellant objected on the ground that he had no saleable interest in the holding. The learned Munsif dealt with this objection in the following words:—"The defendant consented to the kasht land in question to be attached in this very suit. There is no evidence of transferability of occupancy holding. So the holding itself cannot be sold. But the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor will be sold." On appeal to the District Court the learned Judge found in effect that the appellant having consented to the attachment* was estopped from objecting to the sale. He, therefore, directed that the holding be put up to sale. The date of his order being the 30th June 1917, an appeal was filed to this Court on the 3rd July 1917. It appears that pending the appeal to the District Judge the property was actually sold on the 14th March 1917. On the 30th June 1917 an order was made by the learned Munsif refusing a further objection to the sale that the valuation had been wrongly made and on the 7th July the sale was confirmed.

The judgment-debtor now appeals to this Court. It is contended, firstly, that the order of the Munsif is not appealable. This, so far as the Calcutta Court was concerned, was definitely decided in Majed Hossein v. Raghubur Chowdhry (1), Gahar Khalipa Bipari v. Kasi Muddi Jamadar (2); and in Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain Pershad (3) it was assumed that an appeal would lie against an order such as the one before us. Upon the merits of the case we are of opinion that it was idle for the Court of the Munsif to put up to sale the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor when the whole issue before him was—Has the judgment-debtor any right, title and interest at all? It was merely an unnecessary postponement of a certain litigation to allow the property to go up for sale with the question undecided, and in regard to the order made by the learned Judge we cannot conceive how consent to attachment can amount to estoppel of the objection to sale. Consent to attachment means only that the owner of the property attached accepts the limitation put upon his right to alienate the property pending the attachment. The learned Vakil for the respondent argues that the only possible object of attaching the property was that it might ultimately be sold. But in this suggestion he has omitted to note the fact that the primary object of an attachment is that pending the sale the right of the judgment debtor therein shall be maintained intact for the benefit of any possible purchaser. We cannot see that any estoppel has arisen in the case. It is necessary that the question whether the judgment-debtor had any right, title and interest in the property should be investigated before the sale takes place.

We, therefore, remand the case for a decision upon this issue—Is there in the village in which this holding is situate any custom whereby such a holding is transferable? The record should be returned with the finding of this issue before the first March. It is contended as a last resort by the respondent that any order we may pass upon this appeal will be infructuous inasmuch as the sale has already been effected. On analogy with the case of Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain Pershad (3) we are not at present inclined to take that view. The matter will, however, be considered when the issue returns from the Court below.

On remand the learned District Judge found that "there is a custom in the locality according to which holdings are transferred without reference to the landlords, the purchasers subsequently obtaining recognition from the landlords by paying a salami."

The appeal was then heard by Roe and Jwala Prasad, JJ., on 12th of June 1918.

JAIRAM v. GOPIKISAN.

Mr. Sharoshi Charan Mitra, for the Appellant.—The finding submitted by the learned District Judge is in my favour inasmuch as it has been found that a salami is paid by the purchaser for recognition of the purchase by the landlord. It had been held in a series of cases that payment of salami implied that the landlord's consent was necessary.

No custom has been made out in this case.

[Roe, J.—The question is whether the salami is merely a fee levied by the landlord for substituting the names of the purchasers in his registers or paid for obtaining the landlord's sanction to the validity of the sale. If it is merely a mutation-fee, payment of it cannot show that there is no custom].

I submit it is paid for obtaining the landlord's consent to the sale.

[Mr. Hasan Jan, for the Respondent.—The evidence is that the salami is a fixed sum of Re. 1 for sale deed. The amount of the salami is wholly immaterial if the landlord has reserved it as the price of his recognition of the purchase.]

The respondent was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—(June 12th, 1918).—On the facts found by the learned District Judge we have no doubt that there does exist a custom of transfer in this village, the salami paid in each case being merely a mutation-fee. The appeal is dismissed with costs both of this hearing and of the hearing upon which the case was remanded.

Appeal dismissed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 25, 26.

43—Surrender of occupancy holding for consideration—Heir of tenant placed in possession—Failure of consideration—Landlord, whether can recover money paid by him—Provision restraining heir from making claim, validity of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 65.

Section 36 of the C. P. Tenancy Act is only exhaustive as to what the claimant is liable to pay and does not deal with any remedy the landlord may have against the tenant who surrenders his holding for valuable consideration, and certainly does not say that he has no remedy. [p 34, col. 2.]

When an occupancy tenant surrenders his holding for consideration under section 35 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and his nearest heir is put in possession of the holding by a Revenue Officer acting under section 36 (1) of the Act, the landlord can recover from the surrendering tenant the consideration he has paid less the amount he has received under sub-section (1) of section 36. [p. 2, col. 2; p. 34, col. 2.]

A surrender of an occupancy holding for a consideration is not a transfer in contravention of the provisions of section 46 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. [p 34, cols. 1 & 2.]

A deed of surrender of an occupancy holding provided that if any one set up a claim to the fields surrendered, the tenants would be responsible for costs incurred by the landlord in defending the fields against such claims. The surrender was set aside at the instance of the heirs of the tenants.

Held, that the heirs were legally entitled to make the claim, and the agreement to prevent them making a claim was of such nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of the C. P. Tenancy Act and was, therefore, unlawful under section 23 of the Contract Act and that the landlord could not, therefore, recover the costs incurred by him in the revenue proceedings in defending the surrender against the heirs. [p. 33, col. 2; p. 34, col. 1.]

Mr. W. V. Gharpure, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main question that arises in this case is one which does not appear to have come before this Court before. It is this. When an occupancy tenant surrenders his holding for consideration under section 35 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and his nearest heir is placed in possession of the holding by a Revenue Officer under section 36 (1) of the Act, can the landlord recover from the surrendering tenant the consideration he has paid less the amount paid to the landlord under sub-section (1) of section 36? In this case the defendants were the occupancy tenants of an occupancy holding and the plaintiffs are the landlords. The defendants surrendered the holding to the landlords in 1911 by a deed of surrender Exhibit P-1 for a consideration of Rs. 1,500. Of this amount Rs. 900 were stated to be received in cash and Rs. 600 were stated to be due on bonds and for grain debt. The deed of surrender recites that the land was in bad condition and that the tenants could not get sufficient profits from it to pay the rent without incurring expenditure for improvements beyond their means. It was also stated that the tenants had other lands for which the whole of their plough bullocks were required. The 1st defendant Jairam was the recorded tenant and the other two defendants are his sons. After the surrender the wives of Jairam applied under section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act for possession of the holding. The Deputy Commissioner rejected the application, on the ground that it was really that of the surrendering tenant as the three applicants were his wives. On appeal the Commissioner ordered as follows:—

JAIRAM v. GOPIKISAN.

"The Deputy Commissioner has summarily dismissed their claim on the ground that the application is that of the surrendering tenant. I have little doubt that they have been put up by the original tenant, their husband, but as section 36 (1) now stands, they are undoubtedly persons who would be entitled to inherit his right in the holding in the event of his death without nearer heirs. The order of the lower Court must, therefore, be set aside and the appellants will be allowed to have the transfer set aside on payment of arrears of rent and expenses of cultivation. What that payment should be has not been decided. The case is, therefore, remanded to the lower Court for the disposal of this point."

The landlords made a second appeal to the Financial Commissioner, whose order runs as follows:—

"The only point to be decided is whether a widow can succeed to the holding of an occupancy tenant on his death under section 46 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, failing other heirs. It is admitted that she does, and if so, she can apply to set aside a surrender under section 36 of the Act. If no nearer heirs apply, all such heirs are assumed to be dead, and the widow can take the holding back. This is always the interpretation placed on the section and I am not prepared to depart from it. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed."

The meaning and effect of sub-section (4) of section 36 of the Tenancy Act has been fully discussed by the Financial Commissioner in his order, dated the 22nd August 1916, in the case of Shankar v. Hamal, published at page 239 of Volume I of the C. P. Revenue Manual. With the views expressed by the learned Financial Commissioner I respectfully concur. It appears from his order that it had been previously considered that the fact that consideration had passed was conclusive evidence that the surrender was not bona fide and was made with the object of evading the provisions of section 45. The learned Financial Commissioner ruled that this was not a correct view, and the instructions to Revenue Officers have been modified in accordance with the ruling of the Financial Commissioner. The order of the Financial Commissioner rejecting the present plaintiffs' appeal was passed in 1914 and the right of the tenants' heirs to be put in possession was evidently treated as one to which they were entitled as a matter of course because there had been consideration for the surrender. It appears to me extremely probable that if the case had been decided after the above cited ruling of the Financial Commissioner, the decision would have been different.

The deed of surrender contained provisions that the defendants and their heirs would refrain from setting up claims to these fields and that if any one set up a claim, the defendants would be responsible for costs incurred in defending the fields against such claims. The plaintiffs, the landlords, sued for the return of the purchase-money, less the Rs. 154 paid to them under section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act, together with the costs incurred by them in resisting the 1st defendant's wives' claim. They have been given a decree for both purchase-money and interest, and the costs claimed.

In my opinion the appeal of the defendants must succeed so far as it relates to costs incurred by the plaintiffs in the Revenue Courts. It has been found to be a fact that the defendants did instigate Jairam's wives to claim possession. But the wives as heirs were legally entitled to make the claim, and the agreement to prevent the wives making a legal claim was of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and was unlawful under section 23 of the Contract Act. The claim for repayment of the purchase-money is on a different footing. The surrender for consideration was made in circumstances in which both parties knew there might be a failure of consideration by reason of the heirs making a successful claim under section 36 of the Tenancy Act. Under the principles embodied in section 65 of the Contract Act where there is a failure of consideration, the party who has received advantage must make compensation, measured in this case by the amount of the purchase-money, less the deduction mentioned above. It is argued for the appellants that the Revenue Authorities have decided that the surrender was a transfer made with the object of evading the provisions of section 46 of the Tenancy Act within the meaning of section 36 (4), that the contract of transfer was, therefore, against public policy, being made to defeat the provisions of the law, and the decision of the Revenue Authorities is final under section 95. But all that is really meant by section 36 (4) is that a surrender which is not illegal cannot be remedied if it would be against the provisions of section 46, if it were not a surrender but a transfer. The Financial Commissioner in the ruling cited says:

"The first point to be noticed is that the fact that there has been some consideration for a surrender does not alter the nature of the transaction, which remains still a surrender and does not thereby become a transfer. This has been decided both by the Judicial Commissioner in civil appeals and by the Chief Commissioner and the Financial Commissioner in revenue cases."

He goes on to say that a surrender should not be considered as bona fide for the purposes of section 36 (5) if its intention was to deprive the heirs of their rights and if its effects would thus be the same, as regards the heirs, as a transfer in contravention of section 46 (3). In view of this ruling, with which I have already said I respectfully concur, it cannot be said that a surrender to the landlord can ever be in actual contravention of the law, though in certain circumstances it may be remedied just as a transfer in contravention of section 46 may be avoided. If the heirs make no application under section 36 the surrender remains good. I am for these reasons of opinion that there has been no decision that the surrender was such as would defeat the law, and the parties are in a position where the consideration offered by one of them has failed. The plaintiffs are thus entitled to get back their purchase-money, less the aforesaid deduction. The above remarks dispose of the first four grounds of appeal.

The 5th ground is to the effect that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, and that section 36 of the Tenancy Act must be looked to for any remedy that the plaintiffs may have. As to this section 36 is only exhaustive as to what the claimant is liable to pay and does not deal with any remedy the landlord may have against a tenant who surrenders for valuable consideration, and certainly does not say he has no such remedy.

The 6th ground relates to interest. There was no agreement for interest, no demand for the refund of the purchase-money is proved and at the time of the surrender both parties were aware that the surrender might be defeated by the heirs. In these circumstances I disallow the claim for interest.

The result is that the amount decreed is reduced to Rs. 1,346. Costs in proportion in all Courts, Decree modified.

(c)—Transfer of occupancy holding—Registration fee, payment of, whether obligatory—Suit to recover fee, maintainability of—Appeal, second, whether lies.

The word "registration" in section 31 of the Orissa Tenancy Act means nothing more than that the landlord should signify his consent to the transfer; and his consent may be either verbal, written or in any way that he thinks proper. [p. 35, col. 2.]

Under section 31 of the Orissa Tenancy Act it is the duty of the transferee of an occupancy holding to apply to the landlord for his consent; and once the landlord gives his consent, the transferee becomes liable to pay the fee prescribed by the Act. If the transferee refuses to pay the fee a suit would lie to recover it, and in that suit a second appeal to the High Court would be competent. [p. 35, col. 2.]

Mr. Bichitrananda Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues the defendant, who is his tenant, as transferee of an occupancy holding, for recovery of the registration fee which the plaintiff alleges is payable to him under section 31 of the Orissa Tenancy Act. The defence put forward by the defendant is that there is no obligation upon a tenant as transferee to register his transfer or to pay the fee prescribed by section 31 of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

The learned Deputy Collector yielded to the argument put forward by the defendant and held that there was no obligation upon the defendant to pay any registration fee to the plaintiff; and consequently that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable.

The learned Judge on appeal took a different view and held that section 31 of the Orissa Tenancy Act created a mandatory duty upon the tenant by way of transfer to apply to the landlord for registration of his transfer within one year from the date of the transfer; and that thereupon the tenant was liable to pay to the landlord a fee equivalent to 25 per cent. of the consideration money or six times the annual rent of the holding. Accordingly the learned Judge reversed the order of the Deputy Collector and remanded the case for hearing on the merits.

The case now comes before us in second appeal, and we have satisfied ourselves that a second appeal lies under this particular Statute. We have listened to a lengthy argument on the construction of section 31. The fee sued for is recoverable under the provisions of section 250 of the Orissa Tenancy Act in the same way as if it were arrears of rent. Clause (e) of section 250 enacts that the provisions of the Act applicable to arrears of rent and suits and proceedings in respect thereof shall apply to anything payable or deliverable in respect of any registration fees prescribed under sections 14, 15, 16 and 31. Section 31 runs as follows:—

"When any occupancy holding or portion of a holding is transferred...the transferee or his successor-in-interest shall within two years from the date of the commencement of this Act or within one year from the date of the transfer, whichever is later, apply to the landlord to whom the rent of the holding or portion is payable for registration...The maximum fee payable on such registration shall be a sum equal to 25 per cent. of the consideration money or to six times the annual rent of the holding or portion thereof, whichever is greater."

This section clearly creates a duty upon the tenant to apply for registration. Now "registration" would seem to be an inappropriate term unless some form or procedure is prescribed as the method by which registration is to be effected. However, this difficulty is got over, inasmuch as it is admitted by the learned Vakil appearing for the appellants before us that registration means in this section nothing more than that the landlord should signify his consent to the transfer; and that his consent may be either verbal, written, or in any way that the landlord thinks proper. It is the duty of the tenant to apply to the landlord for his consent; and once the landlord gives his consent the tenant is clearly liable to pay the fee prescribed by the Act. In this case the landlord has voluntarily consented to a transfer of the tenancy to the defendant and once he has done this, his right to sue arises even though the tenant may not have expressly applied for registration. If the tenant fails to apply for registration within the time prescribed, and the landlord does not consent to the transfer, the tenant loses the protection afforded to a transferee of an occupancy holding by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

This construction of sub-section (1) of section 34 is fortified by sub-sections (2) and (3) of the same section. Sub section (2) says that "if in any case, the landlord accepts the fee authorised by sub section (1), his consent to the transfer and to any distribution of the rent thereby rendered necessary shall be deemed to have been given". Sub section (3) provides that if the landlord refuses to accept the requisite fee the transferee or his successor may deposit such fee with the Collector, whereupon the landlord shall be deemed to have consented and the transfer to have been registered.

We have no doubt whatsoever that this action is maintainable and that the learned Judge was right in setting aside the order of the learned Deputy Collector and ordering a remand. This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law - Custom - Maintenance, suit for, by widow—Widow bound to reside in appointed residence—Absence due to just and reasonable cause, whether disentitles widow.

In defence to a suit for maintenance by a Hindu widow, it was alleged that by a special family custom the widow was bound to reside in a residence appointed by the head of the family and that by reason of her absence from such residence she had forfeited her right to maintenance.

Held, that the custom, even if it were assumed to be established, did not apply to a case of absence from the appointed residence due to just and reasonable causes. [p. 37, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The question that is raised in these appeals is whether Swarna Manjari Dei, the respondent in the first appeal, and her daughter, the respondent in the second appeal, are entitled to maintenance as of right from the appellant, who is the brother-in-law of the first named respondent.

On the 7th February 1905, Swarna Manjari Dei married Pitambar Deo, the Raja of Aul, who died on the 21st March of the same year, the appellant being his successor in the Raj. At the date of her husband's death Swarna Manjari Dei was enclave, and she was ultimately delivered of a child on the 23rd November 1905, who is the respondent in the second appeal. In May 1905, the widow ceased to reside in the appellant's Nahar at Aul Rajbari and she claims that she is, notwithstanding this fact, entitled to be maintained by him. In order to establish that right, she instituted the first of the two actions which have given rise to this appeal.

The second suit was brought by her infant daughter seeking similar relief.

These actions were tried together, and the Subordinate Judge who heard them made two decrees granting maintenance in each case. The High Court on appeal affirmed this judgment in principle, but by two decrees varied the amounts of maintenance allowed by the Subordinate Judge. From each of these decrees the appellant has appealed, his appeals being consolidated by order of the Board.

The real defence to the actions and the point argued in the appeal is this: that Killa Aul is an impartible Raj, succession to which is regulated by the Law of the Mitakshara as modified by special family customs which have the force of law, and it is said that the special family custom applicable is of such a character that unless the widow resides, after the death of her husband, where she is directed to reside by the Raja, she forfeits her right to maintenance. That contention is based upon certain answers that were given to questions that were put in 1814 to the Rajas and Chiefs of the Regulation and Tributary Mahals of Orissa by the Superintendent. These questions and answers are embodied in a treatise called "Pachis Sawal," or "25 questions." The answer upon which the appellant relies is an answer to a question which runs in this form: "After the demise of a Raja and his son succeeding him, what are the sources from which the ex-Raja's Ranis and brothers and also brothers of the new Raja derive their maintenance and what are their respective rights and the positions they hold?" The answer to that is:—

"They receive food and clothing, and remain in subordination to the Raja. They have no rights."

It is the contention on the part of the appellant that the meaning of this is that the receipt of food and clothing is dependent and consequent upon subordination to the Raja, and refusing to live at the residence which he appoints is an act of insubordination which forfeits the right to maintenance. Their Lordships are not prepared to determine, because they think it is unnecessary, what the true meaning of that answer may be, because even assuming that it bears the interpretation for which the appellant contends, that does not, in their opinion, determine this appeal in his favour, because both Courts have found that the refusal of Swarna Manjari Dei to reside is a refusal which was based on reasonable grounds. It is unnecessary to define what those grounds are, and unnecessary to examine the evidence which was brought forward in their support. It is sufficient that she has been supported by the concurrent findings of both Courts in her refusal to reside in the Nahar. Consequently, if the custom is what the appellant asserts it to be, it has no longer any application to the case, for this custom does not, in their Lordships' opinion, deal with the question of an absence from the appointed residence due to just and reasonable causes. If the custom ceases to apply, the Mitakshara Law applies unmodified, and by that Mitakshara Law the widow and her daughter are entitled to maintenance. That maintenance has been assessed by the High Court, and Counsel for the appellant rightly apprehends that the fixing of that maintenance, which is a pure question of discretion, is a matter with which the Board would not interfere. It may, however, be pointed out, lest it be thought that residence away from the palace might throw an unfair burden upon the person upon whom the duty of maintenance was cast, that the question of determining the amount of maintenance is always a question for the discretion of the Court, and such discretion will be exercised having regard to all the circumstances affecting the case.

These appeals must, therefore, fail and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that they be dismissed with costs.

Vendor and purchaser—Vendor, duty of, to protect purchaser's title—Caveat emptor, doctrine of, applicability of.

Where a purchaser's title is impeached in a suit to which the vendor is a party and the latter makes an admission which renders a decision adverse to the purchaser inevitable, and the purchaser thereupon allows the suit to go against him, the vendor cannot subsequently, in a suit by the purchaser to recover the purchase-money from him, turn round and say that the abandonment of the defence by the purchaser which was brought about by his own admission was improvident. In such a case there is a failure of the consideration for the contract of sale without any fault on the part of the purchaser, and the vendor is, therefore, liable to refund the purchase-money. JUDGMENT.

ROZ, J.—The facts of this case being somewhat peculiar need to be set forth in full.

A holding of about sixteen bighas belonged to one Karu Ram who died leaving a widow and a mother named Sampat; he had also a kept woman of the name of Bechni. The widow, as is common in the caste to which Karu Ram belonged, married again and left the village, with the result that her title to the property as Karu's heir was extinguished. That title passed to Sampat the mother. Sampat had a daughter who was married to the defendant Bhattu Ram. Bhattu Ram purchased the property in dispute from Sampat for Rs. 800. He sold it to the plaintiff for Rs. 935, and delivered possession of the property to him. Bechni was brought forward three years later and instituted a suit for recovery of the property on the allegation that she was lawfully married to Karu. In his written statement Bhattu Ram urged that this was entirely untrue and that she was a kept woman. When the parties actually came to trial Bhattu Ram, as the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge shows, admitted in Court that Bechni was the lawfully married wife of Karu. On this admission being made, the plaintiff felt that it was impossible to go on with the case. He, therefore, allowed a decree to be passed against him for restoration of the property to Bechni. The plaintiff then sued Bhattu Ram to recover the amount of the purchase money. The learned Munsif decided that this being a case in which the doctrine of caveat emptor applied, the plaintiff should have been more careful in his investigation as to title. He also held that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the date on which the defendant's liability would run would be the date of the passing of the consideration. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that though the decree in the title suit was not res judicata, it was certainly a weighty piece of evidence against the defendant and "besides it served no useful purpose to adduce any evidence to prove that Musammatt Bechni was not the widow of Karu Ram". He held further that as the consideration had failed, the contract was void and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover all his money, provided that he brought a suit within three years from the date of the failure of the consideration, which might be said to be the date of the decree by which he was ousted from possession. The case came on appeal before a Divisional Bench of this Court and an order was made that there being no finding of fact as to Bechni's title, it was necessary to remand the case for an investigation of that title. A finding of fact has been returned to this Court that Bechni was in fact a concubine and not the wife of Karu Ram and that the suit by which the plaintiff lost possession was wrongly decided. On this finding of fact it is contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that he had done all that was necessary for him to do. He had put the plaintiff into possession of the property, and that if thereafter the plaintiff had been so foolish as to lose that possession by allowing a suit to be decreed against him on an absolutely false claim that was no business of the defendant, and the plaintiff could not recover.

This is not the point of view from which the case should be regarded. There has been a failure of the consideration for the contract and that without any fault on the part of the purchaser. The only possible defence to a claim for damages for this failure of consideration would be that the vendor had no notice of the claim of Bechni or of the intention to admit it, and could have, had he known of it, made better terms than the purchaser. The position of the vendor becomes impossible if, with notice of the adverse claim, he declines or fails to remove or contest it himself. As Mookerjee, J., said in Digambar Das v. Nishibala Debi (1), the case before us is really much stronger than any to be found in the books. Here the vendor was a party to the suit and not only jointly acquiesced in the adverse decision by the original Court but even made in the original Court the admission which rendered that decision inevitable. He cannot successfully now turn round and say that the abandonment of the defence, which took place in his presence in the original Court, was improvident. I was a party to the remand of the case for a finding on the issue whether the title set up by Bechni was a good title, but on further consideration am of opinion that the suit might have been decreed on the pleadings without the taking of any evidence at all.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

IMAM, J.—I am in complete agreement with the decision given by my learned brother. The defendant-appellant conveyed the property to the plaintiff-respondent with assurances of good title. He represented himself to be the exclusive owner and declared it to be pak saf, which is a common expression in vernacular conveying meaning the title to be flawless. His change of front in Bechni's suit clearly shows his collusion with her. Instead of defending the title which he had conveyed to his vendee, he did all that was in his power to destroy it. It will be against the equities of the case to allow him to take advantage of his own fraud. In the circumstances this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff claims that the sale of 7 kanals and 16 marlas effected by Ghasita on 12th June 1915 shall not affect his reversionary rights. The only question is, whether the sale was for consideration and necessity. The details of the sale price, as given in the sale-deed, are:—

	Rs. a. p.
(a) to pay off prior mortgagee...	700 0 0
(b) due on bond, dated 20th June 1912, for Rs. 100, in favour of vendee ...	136 0 0
(c) on bond, dated 4th Sawan 1970 (19th July 1913), for Rs. 80, in favour of Achru Mal ...	97 8 0
(d) on bond, dated 15th July 1913, for Rs. 100, in favour of Abdulla Khan ...	123 0 0
(e) for costs of conveyance ...	24 8 0
(f) due to Dost Mohammad Khan ...	100 0 0
(g) cash paid to vendor ...	319 0 0
Total. ...	1,500 0 0

About item (a) there is no dispute.

The land was already mortgaged with possession for Rs. 700. So it is, as the District Judge points out, a case of sale of the equity of redemption for Rs. 800.

The first Court, after going carefully through each item in turn, held that the only items for which necessity could be held to exist were items (a) and (d) and gave plaintiff a decree accordingly. Even as regards item (d) the first Court seems to hesitate, but says "taking a lenient view of things the item can be considered a just antecedent debt, and allowed."

GANGA RAM V. DEWA SINGH.

The plaintiff did not appeal, but the vendee appealed to the District Judge who has held the alienation to be valid in its entirety and has dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appeals to this Court.

For the vendee-respondent it is urged that the question whether the sale is for necessity is one of fact, and not open to attack in second appeal. But if the District Judge's findings are not based on evidence, or proceed on wrong principles, then I hold that a second appeal does lie.

I will first consider the item of Rs. 319, which was paid before the Sub-Registrar. This sum is spoken of in the sale-deed as wanted for bullocks and household expenses. The vendor has no land of his own left, so it is hard to see why he should have sold off his last bit of land to buy bullocks.

But the learned District Judge says he might well want bullocks in order to cultivate land as a tenant, and so the vendee was perfectly justified in advancing such a sum. But if this alone is to be taken as sufficient proof of consideration, then it is enough for any man to buy land from an agriculturist and, when called on to prove that the latter had any necessity to sell, to point to the entry in the sale-deed "for purchase of bullocks." The facts of each case should be duly considered. It is not always necessary to show that any bullocks were actually bought, but at least, I think, there should be something to support the idea that the vendee had some reason to suppose that bullocks were really needed. In the present case so far from there being anything of the sort we find that the vendor, when questioned as to this item, merely speaks of wanting to buy a she-buffalo. The vendee, too, says the vendor said he wanted to buy a she-buffalo. Now a she-buffalo would not cost anything like Rs. 319. What the household expenses were, or what the vendor was going to do with the she-buffalo had he bought one, is not explained. He could hardly do much cultivation with one she-buffalo, and as for buying the animal for drinking the milk that would appear to be rather a luxury than a necessity in the case of a grown-up man earning Rs. 12 a month as manager for a landowner. As to the household expenses it is not shown that the vendor had wife, child or any one to keep but himself. He had his salary to live on. It is suggested that Dost Mohammad Khan may not have paid him his salary regularly; this, however, has never been stated, and other parts of the defence evidence are directed to show that, far from Dost Mohammad Khan owing money to the vendor, the vendor owed money to Dost Mohammad Khan. I am quite unable to hold that the mere entry in the sale-deed of "bullocks and household expenses" is any sufficient ground for regarding this item as taken for necessity. I note that the sale having taken place as recently as 1915 the vendor and vendee should have remembered more about the matter had the money really been wanted for purchase of bullocks and should not have come out with a silly talk about a she-buffalo.

Next as to the item of Rs. 136. This was due on a bond for Rs. 100 in favour of the vendee. The learned District Judge, noting that the bond speaks of the Rs. 100 as having been taken for personal necessities, passes the item, simply remarking that all of the vendor's land was mortgaged and he had nothing to live upon except what he could earn in Dost Mohammad Khan's service. But was not Rs. 12 enough to keep him? It would not keep him in luxury no doubt, but a man cannot alienate his ancestral land to live in luxury. He has apparently been able to support himself by his own exertions of late, and it is not shown that he could not do so when the bond was executed in June 1912. I cannot regard the mere entry in the bond as any proof of necessity. It is debt due to the vendee himself, and it is for the vendee to show that the debt was for necessity, and I can find nothing which I regard as evidence that any such necessity existed.

The next item is Rs. 97-3-0 due on a bond for Rs. 80, dated 19th July 1913, in favour of Achru Mal. Here the bond is not in favour of the vendee himself but he was the surety and has since paid off Achru Mal, so it is said. So I am unable to see that this really ranks on any higher footing than if the vendee had himself advanced the money in the first place, and so I think it is for him to prove the necessity. Here again we have nothing but the bare entry in the bond that the money is wanted for purchase of a buffalo; nothing to show that such a buffalo was either really needed or purchased.

The next item of Rs. 123 was allowed by the first Court, so it must stand.

The item of Rs. 100 is said to have been borrowed to pay off Dost Mohammad Khan. Here the only evidence is that of Dost Mohammad Khan, who says he was owed Rs. 150 and was offered Rs. 100 by the vendor but refused to accept it. This seems to me to be a very improbable version. I see that in another sale-deed executed by the vendor on the same date there is an item of Rs. 100 taken to pay off Dost Mohammad Khan and for kharch khangi. If the vendor had really borrowed two items of Rs. 100 each for this purpose, why should he, owing Rs. 150 to Dost Mohammad Khan, go to him with Rs. 100 only? Still if the learned District Judge had come to a clear finding that the vendor did owe Rs. 100 to Dost Mohammad Khan, that would be a finding of fact with which I could not interfere in second appeal. But all that the District Judge says is that it is probable that the vendor owed money to Dost Mohammad Khan seeing that he was his agent, and that the vendee was justified in advancing the sum on the vendor's representing that he owed money to Dost Mohammad Khan. Had the vendee made bona fide enquiries and come to the conclusion that the money was due, then no doubt he would have been justified. But it is not shown that any such enquiries were made, and I am not at all satisfied, merely from Dost Mohammed Khan's statement, that any such sum was due. If in addition to getting Rs. 12 per mensem as wages the vendor had really had Rs. 150 from Dost Mohammad Khan, it may well be asked what need he had to borrow Rs. 100 from the vendee in June 1912, and Rs. 80 from Achru Mal and Rs. 100 from Abdulla Khan in July 1913. The District Judge speaks of the vendor as a man who had been gradually drifting into debt, and so far I agree with him, but when he says he can find no evidence of extravagance on the vendor's part I can only remark that I can see no reason apparent for his drifting into debt other than extravagance, and I think the repeated loans are quite sufficient evidence of extravagance.

As to the item of Rs. 42-8-0 for registration expenses the whole sale seems to have been, with the exception of one doubtful item, unwarranted by any just necessity, so this item cannot be allowed.

I accept this appeal and reversing the decree of the District Judge dismissing the suit I restore the decree of the first Court. Costs in the first Court to be as ordered by that Court. The vendee will pay plaintiff's costs in this and in the District Judge's Court.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Authority to adopt given to widow, when can be exercised

There is no limit of time during which a Hindu widow may act upon the authority given to her to adopt a son to her deceased husband [p. 42, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu son, whether natural or adopted, having inherited the property of his deceased father, dies leaving a son, or widow, or any other person as his heir other than the widow of his father, any power to adopt held by his father's widow comes to an end. But this rule does not apply where the son dies leaving no heir other than his father's widow. [p. 44, cols. 1 & 2.]

NARAYAN RAMRAO V. DEBIDAS NARSINGH.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree will help to make this judgment intelligible :—

The family is governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law. Ramrao and Ganesh were members of a joint family. They never divided. Ramrao died of plague on the 29th January 1910 and was followed by Ganesh, a childless widower, on the 30th January 1910. Thus Kashibai was left as the sole survivor of the family and she inherited the estate as the heir of Ganesh, who had become sole owner by right of survivorship on the death of his brother 24 hours before his own demise. On the 1st September 1910, or seven months after the death of her husband, Kashibai adopted the plaintiff Narayan. It is alleged that authority to adopt was expressly given to her by her husband and assented to by Ganesh. These allegations have been controverted and have not yet been tried and decided, the plaintiff's suit having been dismissed on the ground that assuming that such authority and assent existed the adoption is nevertheless invalid, and the plaintiff has no title.

The defendants are persons to whom the estate would go by reversion on the death of Kashibai if the adoption of the plaintiff did not intervene; and upon the ground that they dispute the fact and validity of that adoption, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that he is the adopted son of Ramrao, and entitled to the estate of Ramrao and Ganesh which is in his possession. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit on the ground that the power of Kashibai to adopt had come to an end and become incapable of execution on the date when the adoption was made. In coming to this conclusion the Courts have been guided by the rulings of the Bombay

High Court in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1) and Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (2). The plaintiff has made the present appeal. I have no doubt, after a careful consideration of the law and the arguments made before me, and of the available authorities, that the appeal must succeed, and the case must go back for a decision on the merits.

It seems expedient to go somewhat fully into the law and authorities bearing on the question at issue. It is not necessary to cite any texts of the Hindu Law. It is sufficient to say that it appears to be settled that there is no limit of time during which a Hindu widow may act upon the authority given to adopt a son to her deceased husband. Adoptions made fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, fifty-two, and even seventy-one years after the death of the husband have been supported: Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 151. Nor do the texts contain any express restrictions on the power of adoption in favour of third persons. The Hindu Lawgivers appear to have laid down that a man is as free to adopt a son as to beget one in the ordinary course of nature, provided the process is sanctioned by law. And an adoption by a widow, duly authorized, is recognized as equal in validity with the birth of a posthumous son for all purposes, spiritual and secular, including the inheritance of estate.

But the Privy Council have recognised the necessity of placing a limit upon what may be described as posthumous adoption. Nature places a time limit upon the coming into existence of a posthumous natural son: and the Judicial Committee have introduced a limit to posthumous adoption, in order to avoid the anomaly and injustice and difficulty which would ensue if a devolution of estate were upset by a belated adoption made to a long deceased ancestor. But so far only one set of circumstances has been provided for, and it is not permissible to apply the rule to any case which is not necessarily within the purview thereof.

The first case in which the point arose, was that of Musammat Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (3).

(1) 26 B. 526; 4 Bom. L. R. 315.

(2) 32 B. 499; 10 Bom. L. R. 692.

NARAYAN RAMRAO v. DEBIDAS NARSINGH.

In that case one Gour Kishore died leaving a natural son, Bhowanee, and a widow, Chundrabullee, to the latter of whom authority was given to adopt one or more sons in case Bhowanee died. Not long after his father, Bhowanee died also, leaving a widow, in whom the estate vested as his heir. In course of time the mother-in-law and daughter-in-law fell out, and then Chandrabullee adopted Ram Kishore. The Judicial Committee held the adoption to be invalid as made after the power to adopt had come to an end. Lord Kingsdown (who delivered the judgment of the Board), in discussing the deed of permission to adopt, said:—

"It must be admitted.....that it does not in express terms assign any limits to the period within which the adoption may be made. But it is plain that some limits must be assigned. It might well have been that Bhowanee had left a son, natural born or adopted, and that such son had died himself, leaving a son, and that such son had attained his majority in the lifetime of Chundrabullee Debia. It could hardly have been intended that after the lapse of several successive heirs a son should be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last taker, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied."

Later on, with reference to the extent of Gour Kishore's power to authorize the adoption, Lord Kingsdown observed:—

"The question is, whether the estate of his son being unlimited, and that son having married and left a widow his heir, and that heir having acquired a vested estate in her husband's property as widow, a new heir can be substituted by adoption who is to defeat that estate, and take as an adopted son what a legitimate son of Gour Kishore would not have taken.

"This seems contrary to all reason and to all the principles of Hindu Law, as far as we can collect them."

It so happened that after the above decision Chundrabullee and Bhowanee's widow both died, and Chandrabullee's adoptee, Ramkishore, got into possession of the estate. He was sued for its recovery by a more distant relation, who claimed as the reversionary heir of Bhowanee. It was admitted that if Ramkishore's adoption by Chandrabullee was valid he could not be dispossessed. The Calcutta High Court decided in his favour, interpreting the decision in Musammatt Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (3) to be that though the adoption could not be used to divest Bhowanee's widow of her estate of inheritance it was valid for all other purposes: Puddo Kumaree Debee v. Juggut Kishore Acharjee (4). This erroneous interpretation was corrected by the Judicial Committee on appeal: Padmakumari Debi Chowdhurani v. Court of Wards (5). Their Lordships, construing their own decision in Musammatt Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (3) remarked:—

"The substitution of a new heir for the widow was, no doubt, the question to be decided, and such substitution might have been disallowed, the adoption being held valid for all other purposes, which is the view that the lower Courts have taken of the judgment, but their Lordships do not think that this was intended. They consider the decision to be that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow of Bhowanee, the power of adoption was at an end, and incapable of execution. And if the question had come before them without any previous decision upon it, they would have been of that opinion. The adoption intended by the deed of permission was for the succession to the Zemindari and other property, as well as the performance of religious services and the vesting of the estate in the widow if not in Bhowanee himself, as the son and heir of his father, was a proper limit to the exercise of the power."

Both the above cases were again considered and followed in a subsequent case from Madras, where the facts were exactly similar, except that the widow acted upon an authority from her husband's sapindas given after the death of the natural born son but during the lifetime of the son's widow: Thayammal v. Venkatarama (6). This case in its turn was followed in Tarachurn Chatterji v. Surashchunder Mukerji (7). There has been a rigid adherence in this country to the rule laid down by the Supreme Tribunal in the above cases, as will be apparent from a perusal of the numerous decisions which have since been published, among which I may mention Krishnarav Trimbak Hasobnis v. Shankarrao Vinayak Hasobnis (8), Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1), Maikyannala Bose v. Nanla Kumar Bose (9) and Ativisuyipprakas v. Nidamarty Gangaraju (10), in most of which the earlier authorities will be found collated. The point is not dealt with in any published ruling of this Court.

It will be observed that the doctrine laid down by the Privy Council, in cases where the widow derived her authority to adopt from express sanction given by her husband or by his sapindas, has equally been applied to a widow in Bombay whose authority is usually independent of any such sanction, and though the Calcutta High Court refused to apply it to a Jain widow in Manik Chand Golecha v. Jagat Settarni Pran Kumari Bibi (11) upon the ground that her power of adoption was independent of permission from her husband, the soundness of that decision is open to question (vide Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 148) and with due respect, I am unable to assent to it. In Amulya Charan Seal v. Kali Das Sen (2) the widow of an adopted son has been placed in the same position as the widow of a natural born son. On the vesting in her of her husband's estate any power of adoption by the widow of his adoptive father comes to an end.

It may then be taken as settled that where a Hindu son, whether natural or adopted, having inherited the property of his deceased father, dies leaving a son or widow or any other person as his heir other than the widow of his father, any power to adopt held by his father's widow comes to an end. But it is also settled that this rule does not apply where the son dies leaving no heir other than his father's widow. In Musammatt Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (3) Lord Kingsdown said:—

"If Bhowanee Kishore had died unmarried, his mother, Chundraballee Debia, would have been his heir and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. By exercising the power of adoption, she would have divested no estate but her own, and this would have brought the case within the ordinary rule."

This dictum, even if it be taken as obiter, has never been dissented from. On the contrary it has been expressly adopted as a binding decision: Ram Soonlur Singh v. Surbanee Dossee (13), Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (14), Verabhai Ajubhai v. Bai Hiraba (15), Girdippr v. Girimallappa (16), Venkappa Bapu v. Jivaji Krishna (17).

It is clear from a consideration of all the Privy Council cases that no rule has been laid down to this effect that the mere vesting of the estate of a deceased Hindu in some heir, other than his widow, puts an end to his widow's power to adopt. That is clear from the repeatedly declared validity of an adoption made to replace a deceased son who has died unmarried after inheriting his father's estate. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish that case and the case of a son who died a childless widower, leaving as his only heir a mother possessed of a power to adopt. In some of the Indian judgments and in particular that in Payappi Akkappa Patel v. Appinna (18) this case of an adoption by a mother who has inherited to her son has been regarded as a mere exception to a general rule laid down by the Privy Council. With due respect I am unable to agree with this treatment of the subject. It seems to me clear, not only from a consideration of the whole matter, but from the words of Lord Kingsdown himself, that the case is one within the ordinary rule of Hindu Law to which the special restriction introduced by the Privy Council does not apply. There is no case in which the vesting of the estate in the heir of the husband has been held, ipso facto, to disable his widow from making an adoption to him. It is only where the estate has moved for the second time, so as to vest in some one who is not the widow herself, that the rule has been applied, e. g., where it has vested first in a son and thereafter in his son, or his widow or heir other than his father's widow. The Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (1) was in a case where the husband of the adopting widow predeceased his father, who on his death was succeeded by the son's son who died leaving a widow and son. The adoption was made after the death of all these, when there had been three devolutions of the estate. The case was obviously within the Privy Council restriction.

In Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (2), which has been followed by the Courts below, the following was the genealogical tree:—

Antaji and Sadashiv were joint in food and estate. Sadashiv died in 1876 leaving his widow and two daughters. Antaji died in 1877 a childless widower. Parvati succeeded to the estate, and held it till her death in 1899. A few days before she died she adopted one Pandurang. It was held that the adoption was invalid. The rule was laid down that a Hindu widow who succeeds to an estate not her husband's but as a gotraja sapinda of the last male holder under the rule established by Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (19) and in consequence of the absence of nearer heirs, cannot make a valid adoption. The learned Judges claim to find authority for this decision in the Privy Council cases and in Ram Krishna v. Shamrao (1) and they felt compelled to doubt Amava v. Mahadguda (20) and Payappa Akkapa Patel v. Appanna (18).

The decision undoubtedly supports the view taken by the lower Courts in the present case. Except that Parvati had no authority from her husband, and consent by Antaji to her adoption of a son, and that she had two daughters, the facts were precisely similar to the facts of the present case (assuming for the sake of argument only that Kashibai did receive permission from her husband and the assent of his joint brother). But with due respect, I am unable to find any authority in any of the earlier cases for the very wide rule laid down in Datto Govind v. Pandurang Vinayak (2). There had been no vesting of the estate in any heir of the widow's husband's heir to which alone the Privy Council dictum has been applied. It has not been laid down that a widow's power to adopt is only capable of execution when she inherits as the heir of her husband and in no other case. It is not the nature of her estate but the rights of other persons which constituted the ratio decidendi in the Privy Council case. It was neither the existence of Bhowanee, nor the fact of his marriage, but the vesting of his estate in his widow after his death which deprived Chundrabullee of the power to adopt in Musommat Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowahry (3). If Bhowanee's widow had predeceased him leaving Chundrabullee as his heir, it is difficult to see how her adoption could have been taken out of the ordinary rule applicable to it in case of Bhowanee's death unmarried. Similarly if a Hindu died leaving no son but only a grandson as his heir and such grandson died unmarried or a childless widower, there seems to be no authority for the view that an adoption made by his widow to replace the deceased grandson would be valid. The Privy Council doctrine of limitation of the power to adopt turns upon a second vesting of the the estate and upon nothing else; and where such second vesting is in the widow herself, her power to adopt will not be extinguished.

In the Bombay case last cited the decision was in accordance with Bombay precedents upon another ground altogether, namely this, that the widow was the widow of an undivided co-parcener, and had adopted without the sanction of her husband or of his surviving brother. It was so held by a Full Bench in Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivram Prabhu (21) and there is no decision of the Bombay High Court in conflict with that rule. But so far as it seeks to extend the doctrine in Bhoobun Moyee's case (3) so as to apply it to a widow who has inherited property as a sapinda, I am unable to accept it as correct. If it is correct then no widow of an undivided co-parcener can ever make an adoption, even with the consent of the surviving co-parceners. In the Bombay case Sadashiv could clearly have made an adoption in his lifetime, even though he was joint with Antaji. It is also clear that what he could have done himself he could have got his widow to do for him, namely, to adopt a son in the lifetime of Antaji. How could that power be affected by the death of Antaji unless Antaji left some heir, other than Parvati, in whom the estate vested on his death. A mother who inherits to her son does so as a sapinda, at least in Bombay. As a sapinda different only in degree she inherits to her husband's brother. There is no reason or authority for distinguishing between the two cases with reference to her power to adopt. In the present case Ganesh having died a childless widower, his only chance of spiritual benefit lay in the adoption of a son to Ramrao. It is entirely opposed to the letter and spirit of the Hindu law that Ramrao should be deprived of the spiritual benefit which the adoption of a son would confer on him because his undivided brother died on the day after him. I need not labour the argument. That the Judicial Committee will not extend the doctrine in Bhoobun Moyee's case (3) by any analogy seems clear from the very recent decision in Bachoo Hurkisonadas v. Mankorebai (22).

In that case two Hindu brothers H. and B. constituted a joint family, governed by the Mitakshara law as in force in Bombay, and as such they held large ancestral property. In September 1900 H. died without male issue, but leaving his widow pregnant. In November 1900 B. made a Will by which, inter alia, he directed his widow to adopt a son. B. died in December 1900, and the day after his death H.'s widow gave birth to a son, Bachoo, who became the sole owner of the joint estate. In February 1901 the widow of B. adopted one Nagurdas as son to her deceased husband. It will be observed that on the death of H. his brother B. became sole owner of the estate by the law of survivorship. On B.'s death his widow became owner for a few hours, until disinherited by the birth of Bachoo in whom the estate vested, still by the law of survivorship, because he was already in esse when his father died. The principal question before their Lordships of the Privy Council was whether the adoption made by B.'s widow after Bachoo's birth was valid. They held that it was valid and that it divested Bachoo of half the estate; or rather that Nagurdas became, by virtue of the adoption, jointly entitled with Bachoo to the family property. All the cases from Musammatt Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Chowdhry (3) downwards were quoted to support the argument that the vesting of the estate in Bachoo, and the fact that H. and B. were joint in property, went to invalidate the adoption. But their Lordships held the matter to be concluded by the decision in Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishore Patta Deo (23).

It cannot be disputed that if the present plaintiff had been naturally born as a posthumous son of Ramrao on the 1st September 1910, he would have become the sole owner of the once joint estate of Ramrao Ganesh, and Kashibai would have been divested thereof. Under Hindu Law a valid adoption gives the adoptee all the available rights of a natural born son. By making such adoption Kashibai divested no estate but her own; and previous to the devolution thereof on her it had not vested in any person so as to put an end to her power of adoption under the limitation introduced by the Privy Council. It had vested only in Ganesh, if succession by survivorship can be called a vesting of estate. That such succession did not terminate the power of adoption is clear from the admission made before me that Kashibai, qua widow, could have made a valid adoption in the lifetime of Ganesh. The death of Ganesh could not destroy that power since its only effect was to vest the estate in Kashibai herself. The learned District Judge falls into an elementary error in calling it a "life-estate" and "only a temporary obstacle between the expired full estate of Ganesh and the coming full estate of his reversioners". It has been pointed out repeatedly that a widow is full owner subject to a restricted power of alienation over immoveable property. The learned District Judge held that Kashibai had no power by making an adoption "to jeopardize the estate of Ganesh's reversioners". I am not sure that I quite understand what this means, but it has to be observed that every valid adoption made by a widow extinguishes a reversionary expectancy. There is no dictum of the Privy Council which modifies the Hindu Law of adoption so far as the adoption in the present case is concerned, and if that adoption is valid under that law the plaintiff must succeed.

This appeal is, therefore, allowed. The decrees of the Courts below are reversed, and the case will be sent down for a trial and decision on the merits. The appellant will be given the usual refund certificate. Other costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

CUTTACK CIRCUIT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 8 OF 1917.

December 7, 1917.

*Present:—*Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Atkinson.

KRUPASINDHU ROY—APPELLANT

versus

Mahanta BALBHADRA DAS—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 141, 144, O. II, r. 2—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 188—Restitution, application for, nature of—Restoration of possession—Application, subsequent, for mesne profits, maintainability of—Limitation.

An application for restitution under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code is neither a suit nor an execution proceeding; it is a miscellaneous proceeding to which the rules applicable to execution proceedings do in substance apply. Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to an application for restitution, and such an application is not, therefore, subject to the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Code. [p. 48, col. 2]

Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act prescribes that the period of limitation for making an application for restitution shall be three years from the date when the right to apply accrued. But the Article does not in any way control the period during which mesne profits shall be allowed to accumulate, and whatever the number of years during which the opposite party has been in possession, the applicant is entitled to be compensated in respect of the whole of that period, provided he applies within three years of the date on which the right to relief accrues. [p. 49, col. 2.]

On the 22nd March 1909 plaintiffs got a decree for recovery of possession of some immoveable property. In pursuance of that decree they took possession on the 24th September 1910. The defendant appealed against that decree to the High Court and succeeded in getting it reversed on the 4th June 1913. The defendant then took possession of the property on the 4th of December 1913. On the 2nd of June 1916 the defendant applied, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, for restitution of mesne profits in respect of the property for the period during which the plaintiffs were in possession, namely, from the 24th September 1910 till the 4th December 1913:

Held, (1) that the defendant was not debarred from claiming mesne profits by reason of the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 48, col. 1.]

(2) that the right to apply having accrued to the defendant on the date of the High Court's judgment viz., 4th June 1913, the application was within time and the defendant was, therefore, entitled to mesne profits for the whole of the period from 4th September 1910 to 4th December 1913. [p. 49, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sub-Judge, Cuttack, dated the 7th March 1917.

KRUPASINDHU ROY v. BALBHADRA DAS.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—On the 22nd March 1909, plaintiffs got a decree for recovery of possession of some immoveable property. In pursuance of that decree they took possession on the 24th September 1910. The defendant appealed against that decree to the High Court and succeeded in getting it reversed on the 4th June 1913. The defendant then took possession of the property on the 4th of December 1913. On the 2nd of June 1916 the defendant applied, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, for restitution of mesne profits in respect of the property for the period during which the plaintiffs were in possession, namely, from the 24th September 1910 till the 4th December 1913.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that inasmuch as the defendant in applying for restitution of the property did not apply for restitution of mesne profits, he is now debarred from claiming mesne profits by reason of the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. His view is that when the defendant took possession on the 4th December 1913, he should have insisted upon his right to restitution of mesne profits also and having declined to claim that relief at that time he is, according to the principles of constructive res judicata, no longer competent to claim it by a subsequent proceeding under section 144. The learned Subordinate Judge has accordingly dismissed the defendant's application and against that order, which is a decree under the definition of decree contained in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, the defendant prefers the present appeal before us.

In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge's order cannot be maintained. It is conceded by the learned Vakil, who appears on behalf of plaintiffs before us, that a proceeding, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not a proceeding in execution. This must clearly be so, because the relief which the defendant claims in the present proceeding is not a relief founded upon any decree giving him such relief. It is a relief which used to be granted previous to 1859 under the inherent powers of the Court and which in the subsequent Civil Procedure Codes has been recognised by express statutory provision. The Code of 1852 prescribes it in section 583 and the present Code of 1908 reproduces substantially the provisions of that section in section 144. The proceeding in which the relief is claimed is neither a suit nor an execution proceeding, it is a miscellaneous proceeding to which the rules applicable to execution proceedings do in substance apply. In this connection it is to be noticed that section 583 of the Code of 1852 contains words expressly prescribing that the Court in proceeding to grant relief under that section is to proceed according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits. That Code nowhere stated that the proceeding was an execution proceeding, nor does the present Code prescribe anything to this effect. Although the words above referred to have been omitted from section 144 of the present Code, the law in this respect is still substantially the same. Therefore the question arises whether section 144 of the present Code requires that all the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and therefore also of Order II, rule 2, should be applied to the miscellaneous proceeding before us.

In my opinion the answer is in the negative. It has been held in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (1), following a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir-ullah (2), that section 144 is not applicable to an execution proceeding. And if it is not applicable to an execution proceeding, I fail to see why it should be made applicable to a proceeding which is only of the nature of an execution proceeding.

The learned Vakil for the respondents has strenuously contended that though the proceeding is miscellaneous it is in the nature of an original suit. In my opinion this argument fails, for a suit must always be based on a cause of action. Here the defendant petitioner has no cause of action on which he can claim relief from the plaintiff. If it is urged that the cause of action is a trespass, then the reply is that the plaintiffs were put in possession by a decree of Court and were not trespassers. Nor does the decree of the Appellate Court per se constitute a cause of action. In my opinion the defendant had no cause of action on which he could have based a suit against the plaintiffs, even if the law had not expressly forbidden him to proceed by suit. His only remedy was to apply to the Court to proceed against the plaintiffs in exercise of its special powers. Therefore the rule applicable to several reliefs arising out of the same cause of action cannot be applied here. Finally, even if we were to accede to the learned Vakil's argument that this proceeding is a suit, in my opinion the claim for mesne profits cannot be said to arise from the same cause of action as a claim for recovery of possession and, therefore, Order II, rule 2, is no bar.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 683; 41 C. 1; 18 C. W. N. 343.

(2) 17 A. 10; 5 M. L. J. 3; 22 I. A. 44; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 526; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 393.

BIPRADAS PAL v. MONORAMA DEBI.

We are fortified in the view we take by Somasundaram Pillai v. Chokkalinga Pillai (3). In that case their Lordships of the Madras High Court, following a previous decision of their own, expressly held that Order II, rule 2, of the present Civil Procedure Code does not cover restitution applications.

Therefore, the result is that the learned Subordinate Judge's order holding that the defendant's application was barred by reason of Order II, rule 2, must be set aside.

The learned Vakil for the respondents has taken another ground before us, namely, limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge has not gone into this point, but as it has been taken by the learned Vakil and argued, we will proceed to give our decision on it, which will be binding on the parties.

The learned Vakil contends that the Article applicable to this case is Article 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908, Schedule I, and that as the defendant made his application for restitution on the 2nd June 1916, he can only obtain as mesne profits that amount which became due within three years from that date. In that case the defendant would be entitled only to mesne profits from the 3rd June 1913 to the 4th December 1913. Now Article 181, which is admittedly the Article applicable to the present proceeding, prescribes that the period of limitation for making an application for restitution shall be three years from the date when the right to apply accrued. Here the right to apply accrued on the date of the High Court judgment, namely, 4th June 1913, and the application for restitution, having been made on the 2nd June 1916, was within three years of that date and, therefore, was within time. But Article 181 does not in any way control the period during which the mesne profits shall be allowed to accumulate and whatever the number of years during which the plaintiffs were in possession, the defendant was entitled to be compensated in respect of the whole of that period provided he applied within three years of the date on which the right to relief accrued. Here the defendant will be entitled to such mesne profits as the Subordinate Judge may find to be due for the period from the 4th September 1910 to the 4th December 1913. The result is that the case will go back to the learned Subordinate Judge in order that it may be decided according to law. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Where in the Record of Rights an entry was made in respect of a land that no rent was actually paid for it but that the occupant was not entitled to hold without payment of rent:

Held, that proof of long possession free from payment of rent was sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the land was liable to be assessed to rent. [p. 54, col. 1.]

Held, also, that the mere fact that the land in question, which did not exceed 50 bighas in area, was not shown as Lakheraj in the Parganah Register, prepared under sections 2 and 3 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1800, or in the Kanongo Register or account kept under the provisions of Bengal Regulation I of 1819, read with section 7 of Bengal Regulation V of 1816, or in the General and Mouzawari Register kept under the Bengal Land Registration Act or in the Thak maps and statements of 1852, was not sufficient to prove that the land was the mal land of the Zemindari and as such liable to be assessed to rent. [p. 53 col. 2]

Appeals against the decrees of Mr. Justice Teunon, dated the 1st of June 1914, in Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 620, 622 and 722 of 1912, reversing those of the District Judge of Nadia, dated the 29th of March 1911.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of TEUNON, J.—These four appeals arise out of proceedings under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It appears that on the 2nd October 1899 the defendant-respondent, Mr. Bipradas Pal Chowdhuri, became the purchaser of a Patni Taluq comprising the 33 mouzas of Taraf Santipur, a permanently settled estate bearing No. 474 on the Revenue Roll of the Nadia Collectorate. The purchase was made at a sale held under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act for arrears of rent and after the purchase proceedings were taken under Chapter X of that Act. In respect of the mouzas with which we are now concerned, the Record of Rights was finally published on the 19th April 1909.

In this record the entry in respect of the lands in question is that no rent is actually paid but that the occupants, i.e., the plaintiffs-appellants, are not entitled to hold without payment of rent.

The plaintiffs thereupon instituted these several suits under section 106 of the Act to have it declared that the lands in question are their rent free Brahmattar and that the entries in so far as they state that the lands are liable to be assessed to rent, are incorrect. The decision of the Settlement Officer in their favour has been reversed on appeal by the Special Judge and the plaintiffs now appeal to this Court.

In each suit the case of the plaintiffs was that the lands in question had been granted to their predecessor-in-title by Maharaja Krishna Chandra Roy of Nadia to be held exempt from the payment of revenue, that the grant, being non Badshahi grant in each case of a date prior to the 12th of August 1765, had been duly registered in the manner provided in sections 22 to 25 of Regulation XIX of 1793, and that from the dates of the grants they and their predecessors had been in continuous possession without payment of rent or revenue and that the lands in question were therefore no part of the mal assests of the zemindari and so did not appertain to the Patni purchased by the defendant.

It may be here observed that owing to the recusancy of the Maharaja of Nadia, Taraf Santipur was not permanently settled until the year 1207/1799 or 1800, when it was settled with Maharaja Tej Chandra Roy Bahadur of Burdwan, who created the Patni tenure in or about 1214/1807.

From the Periodical Register or the draft thereof prepared apparently in the year 1202/1795 to 1796 under section 29 of Regulation XIX of 1793, and spoken of in these proceedings as the "Taidad Register", the plaintiffs have in each case produced the extracts referring to the grant on which they rely.

In Appeal No. 620, which relates to plot No. 234 of the Survey and Settlement Papers of mouza Malipota measuring 1 bigha, 12 cottahs, 1 chittack the entry or Taidad No. is 7248, being the record of a grant of 2 bighas "Bastu" in Malipota and of 50 bighas in 3 other villages.

In Appeal No. 621, in which we are concerned with plot No. 2/464 of the Record of Rights, measuring 1 bigha, 3 cottahs, 9 chittacks, the Taided No. is 318, being the entry of a grant of 5 bighas, 5 cottahs in Malipota and of 4 bighas, 18 cottahs in an adjoining village Satpukhuria.

BIPRADAS PAL v. MONORAMA DEBI.

In Appeal No. 622, the area in question, 13 cottahs, 5 chittacks, has been shown in the Record of Rights of Malipota as plot No. 228/451 and the Taidad relied on is No. 5932, which purports to comprise 150 bighas, 16 cottahs in five (5) villages, 28 bighas, 16 cottahs being in Malipota.

Appeal No. 722 relates to plot No. 310 of the Record of Rights of mouza Pumulia, a village adjoining Malipota on the south, and the Taidad is No 2247, the entry of a grant comprising 35 bighas in Pumulia, 18 bighas in Malipota, and 34 bighas in two other villages.

The learned District Judge has found that the plaintiffs have failed to identify the lands in suit with the lands comprised in the Taidads on which they rely, and that they have also failed to show a continuous line of descent (by inheritance or purchase) from the original grantees of the sanads and that they have therefore failed to rebut the presumption arising against them under section 103B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

He has further found that inasmuch as the lands or tenures in question are not shown as Lakheraj in (1) the Perganah Register prepared under sections 2 and 3 of Regulation VIII of 1800, (2) the Kanungo Register or account kept under the provisions of Regulation I of 1819 read with section 7 of Regulation V of 1816, (3) the General and Mouzawar Register kept under the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876) and (4) the Thak maps and statements of the mouzas in question, which have been produced by the defendant, the defendant has succeeded in showing affirmatively that the lands in suit are the mal lands of the zemindari and of the defendants' Patni.

The contentions of the appellants then are (1) that the District Judge has wholly misconceived the probative effect or value of the registers and maps to which he refers, and (2) that he has wholly overlooked the presumption arising from long and uninterrupted possession.

We may consider the several registers one by one.

For translations of extracts from Part II of the Perganah Register I have been referred by the parties to pages

25 to 28 of the paper book in Second Appeals Nos. 1717 and 1719—21 of 1909.

No doubt the intention of Regulation VIII of 1800 (vide Section 2) was that the Perganah Register should be exhaustive in both its parts (Malguzari and Lakheraj). But the preamble and also sections 18 and 19 of the Regulation show plainly that the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1793, and of the corresponding Regulation XXXVII of 1793, applicable to Badshahi grants had not been duly observed, and that the preparation of the Periodical Registers therein prescribed was in arrears. There is no reason to suppose that the work of preparing the Perganah Register which was to supersede the Periodical Register was more punctiliously carried out, and that the Perganah Registers were in fact incomplete is recognised in the Land Registration Act of 1876, see, for instance, the preamble and section 20. Moreover, the 4th clause of section 3 of Regulation VIII of 1800 provides that the entries in the Register or Registers prepared under sections 29 and 30 of Regulation XIX of 1793 or the essential portions of such entries should be repeated in the Perganah Register. The Register itself shows that this was not done, and the only entries in the Lakheraj part appear to be entries of land released as valid Lakheraj as the result of resumption proceedings taken at the instance of Government in or about the years 1840—1843; of the omission of other "Taidads", for instance, the Taidad relied on in the present proceedings, we have no explanation and there is no suggestion in the evidence that any proceedings to have these Taidads declared invalid or for the resumption of the lands comprised therein were at any time taken either by Government, the Zemindar, or the Patnidar.

It follows that the Lakheraj portion of the Perganah Register was never duly prepared, and that the omission from it of the lands or tenures now in question is of no evidentiary value.

The next Register is the so-called Kanungo Register, apparently of the year 1825/1232, and for a translation of this Register I have been referred to the same paper-book, pages 4 to 18. By Regulation V of 1816, applicable to the

BIPRADAS PAL V. MONORAMA DEBI.

District of Cuttack, and some portion of the District of Hidjli, Kanongoes were to be appointed in every Perganah and by the 2nd clause of section 7, the Kanongoes were required "to keep an account of all lands held under rent free tenures, and to report to the Collector all escheats of such lands to Government."

By Regulation I of 1819 the provisions of Regulation V of 1816 were extended to the Province of Bengal in general, and it would seem that under this Regulation a Kanongo was appointed for Perganah Taraf Santi-pur or for the whole district of Nadia, but as to the manner in which he performed the duties laid upon him by the 2nd clause of section 7 of Regulation V we have no information. It is by no means clear that the word "account" implies a register or that the section requires the Kanongo to prepare and maintain a complete register of rent-free tenures. The appointment was intended primarily to facilitate the collection of the public revenue and in the case of lands held rent or revenue free not exceeding 100 bighas in area (vide Regulation XIX of 1793, section 6) the revenue could be benefited only when from failure of heirs or otherwise the tenures escheated or were forfeited to Government. It was sufficient then that the Kanongo should report any such occurrence. To enable him to do this, copies of the register kept at Headquarters would be more appropriate than an independent register. Moreover, the column in the Kanongo's "account" or register headed "name of Lakherajdar as entered in the Sherista of the Zemindar", though this column appears to be blank, possibly suggests that he took notice only of such tenures as the Zemindar had chosen or been induced formally to recognise. It is in any case quite clear that from his "register" or "account" he omitted the great bulk of the grants registered in the Periodical or Taidad Register, and in the absence of any evidence of resumption proceedings, whether from records or from the Intermediate Registers prepared, if they were prepared, under Regulation XIX of 1793, section 33, or Regulation VIII of 1800, section 5, these omissions remain unexplained. In this state of things it appears clear that the omission of the lands or tenures in question from the Kanongo's account is also of no value to the defendant.

We have next the registers of revenue-free lands maintained under Bengal Act VII of 1876, and with regard to these registers it is sufficient to say that the District Judge has wholly misapprehended the provisions of sections 10, 33 and 89 of the said Act. It is not suggested that the grants or tenures in question have ever been up to now the subject of judicial proceedings or of any report to the Board of Revenue or declared valid by competent authority. Obviously, therefore, they could not find a place in the register of revenue-free lands and their omission, therefore, is of no significance.

We then come to the Thak map of 1852 and the statements endorsed thereon.

In this connection I have been referred to the "Thakbust and Khasreh Rules", issued by the Board of Revenue to Commissioners with their Miscellaneous No. 829 of 8th October 1850 and reproduced in Appendix X to James Henry Young's Revenue Handbook published in the year 1855 and also reproduced in part in Appendix B at page 81 of Captain Hirst's Notes on the "Old Revenue Surveys of Bengal." The 10th Rule (vide Young's Handbook) requires that in future the Thakbust is to embrace not merely the village boundaries but also the demarcation of the boundaries of each independent Mahal in the village. Rule 11 then provides that the independent Mahals entitled to distinct entry on the Thakbust map are inter alia "4th, confirmed Lakheraj tenures, i.e., tenures confirmed on trial and tenures not subjected to trial, the title being considered good" and "6th, Blocks of land relinquished under the orders not to assess holdings under 50 bighas."

It may be here observed that except in Appeal No. 622, the Taidads or grants relied on comprise each an area not exceeding 100 bighas, and that in each case the area within Malipota (or Pomulia) is less than 50 bighas. Under the Regulations (vide sections 6, 7, 10 and 11 of Regulation XIX of 1793 and sections 3 and 30 of Regulation II of 1819), the right to resume and recover the revenue assessed on grants not exceeding 100 bighas was with the Zemindar (or Putnidar) and not with Government.

BIPRADAS PAL V. MONORAMA DEBI.

Moreover, the orders of Government, dated 26th January and 28th April 1841 (vide Young's Handbook, page 67), directing the discontinuance of resumption proceedings in the case of grants of less than 50 bighas, extended also to grants exceeding in the aggregate 50 bighas, but made up of parcels of land each of which was less than 50 bighas.

It was never intended that the Thakbust authorities should enter into questions between Zemindars and tenants, and Government could not impose upon Zemindars its opinion as to title or its orders as to grants of small areas.

It is then important to observe how rule 11 of the Thakbust Rules was understood and acted upon by the Thakbust Officers. From the Thak statement we find that a number of questions were put to the agents of the Zemindars and Patnidars, and of these the 2nd runs thus:— 'To which Perganah does the above-mentioned village appertain..... Besides these (a) are there within these boundaries (i.e., the village boundaries) any Bajyapti (i.e., resumed) lands either char or Lakheraj which have not been included in (any) Touzi up to this date, or (b) are there any lands of the above description (i.e., char or Lakheraj) which have been released from the claim of Government for rent (revenue) or (c) is there any Lakheraj land in the village which has been exempted from the payment of Government revenue and the time of resumption and settlement because it is less than 50 bighas, if there be any what is the number of the suit, and date and year of the decree; (d) besides these within these boundaries are there any Lakheraj lands..... covered by a sanad and measuring more than 100 bighas against which no claim by Government has been preferred up to this date.....'.

Of this question or series of questions the portion which I have marked (a) refers to the 3rd class of rule 11, i.e., resumed tenures; the 2nd marked (b), to the tenures confirmed on trial in the 4th class; the 3rd marked (c) to the 6th class, i.e., blocks of land relinquished under the orders not to assess holdings under 50 bighas and the 4th marked (d), apparently to the tenures in the 4th class "not subjected to trial, the title being considered good."

It will be observed that in each case the question refers to Government demands and to lands which had been or (in the case of the 4th) might appropriately have been the subject of litigation with Government. Moreover, where area is considered, the question is as to the area within the village. In the result in the map of Malipota, a plot of land measuring 8 bighas, 8 cottahs released in Suit No. 447 by the order of the special (i.e., resumption) Deputy Collector, dated 24th December 1840, was measured as Lakheraj and delineated in Chak No. 1, and as to the rest the Zemindar's or Patnidar's amla said, as they might be expected to say, that there was no other Lakheraj in the village. No reference was made to the Taidad Register, though there is no suggestion in the evidence that lands comprised in the Taidads had been at any time resumed, and the representatives of the original grantees were not treated as concerned or called upon to sign the Thakbust (vide rule 24) or state their objections. In other words, any lands held as Lakheraj or rent-free which the Zemindar might possibly seek to resume, even those shown in the Kanungo's "account", were included within the limits of the estate.

It follows that in the determination of the questions arising in these present proceedings the omission from the Thakbust maps of any indication of Lakheraj lands (other than lands which had been the subject of litigation) is also of no evidentiary value.

It follows that the District Judge's finding that the defendant has succeeded in proving affirmatively that the lands in question are the mal lands of his Patni is based on no evidence.

The defendant is then left with the presumption arising in his favour from section 103 B (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the fact that the lands are within the ambit of his Patni and of the superior estate.

The 2nd question that arises in these appeals then is whether the plaintiffs have succeeded in rebutting the presumption created by section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned District Judge has found that the plaintiffs have failed to show that the lands in question are comprised within the several grants or Taidads on which the plaintiffs rely. He has also found that they have also failed to trace their descent or succession-in-interest from the original donees. But being apparently under the impression that a Lakheraj title could be established only by production and proof of a grant or title-deed, he has omitted to consider or discuss the evidence of possession and come to any finding as to the duration in each case of the possession of the plaintiffs free from payment of rent. To avoid the necessity of a remand, with the assent of the parties, I, therefore, decided to proceed under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to determine in this Court the necessary issue of fact. For this purpose the whole evidence as to possession in each case has been placed before me.

In Appeal No. 620 two witnesses, one a man of 53 and one a man of 82, were examined, though in a very cursory manner, for the plaintiffs. From their evidence it appears that the plaintiff and her father before her have been in possession at least from 1891, when the plot was purchased in the name of one Pramanik as the Brahmattar property of certain Mukherjees. Moreover the witnesses prove that the homestead plot in question is known as "Lakhi Kanta's homestead" and the Taidad (7248) shows the 2 bighas in Malipota as "Bastu" and one Lakhi Kanta Banerjee as the person in possession at the time (1790-92) when the grant was registered (1795 96).

In Appeal No. 621 the only oral evidence is that of a youngman of 24. Two kabuliyats produced refer to a different and not adjoining village named Fulia. In the deed of sale exhibited, the year 1227 in words and figures has been obviously altered from 1225, yet the stamped paper on which the document is written was sold in 1820 (=1227). Moreover, the first 3 lines are in one ink; the remainder in a different ink; the original 1225 is in the first ink; the altered "seven" and "7" in the latter ink. Clearly this document is a forgery.

In Appeal No. 622 we have 3 witnesses, namely, Dinanath Mukherjee aged 52, Moti Lal Roy aged 75, and Panchu Chamar, a man of 30. All these witnesses speak of the possession by the plaintiff and his ancestors of this Lakheraj homestead for the period to which the memory of each witness extends, in the case of Moti Lal Roy, 50 years. Moreover, the 1st two witnesses prove the descent of the plaintiff from Bhabasankar, one of the persons named in the Taidad (5932) as in possession when the grant was registered. In this case therefore the observation of the District Judge that "there is a total absence of evidence to establish the complete chain from the donees to the present holders" is wholly erroneous.

In Appeal No. 722 Dinanath Mukherjee, 52 years of age, and one of the plaintiffs Gobinda Lal Mukherjee, a man of 41, have been examined. The plaintiff produces a sale-certificate (Exhibit I), by which in 1835 his grandfather Badan Chandra purchased in execution of a decree against one Ram Prasad Bhattacharjee (the original grantee in Taidad 2247 being Ram Kanai Tarkabagis, i.e., Bhattacharjee). He next produces a sub-lease of the year 1279/1872 (Exhibit 2), identifies the garden or orchard now in question with the Lakheraj garden referred to in the sale-certificate and in the sub-lease, and says that it has been in the hands of his family from the year 1835 to the present day. In these statements he is corroborated by the witness Dinanath Mukherjee who speaks of a period of 40 years.

In none of the appeals has the defendant adduced any oral evidence.

On the evidence thus reviewed, I find that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving possession free from payment of rent, in Appeal No. 722 from the year 1835, in Appeal No. 622 for a period of 50 years before suit, and in Appeal No. 620 from the year 1891. In Appeal No. 621 no evidence of possession for any definite period has been given, and in this appeal, therefore, it cannot be said that the presumption arising under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been rebutted. In the other appeals the proved possession free from payment of rent is in my opinion sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the second portion of the entry in the Record of Rights to the effect that the lands are liable to be assessed to rent.

It is then for the defendant to give evidence that the lands in question were at one time mal. As pointed out in the case of Hurryhur Mookhopadhyaya v. Madub Chunder Baboo (1), he may do this by proving by documentary or other evidence that the lands in question formed part of the mal assets of the estate at the Decennial Settlement or at the time when the estate was permanently settled (in this case 1800) or by proving payment of rent at some time since that date. By the production of registers and Thak maps discussed in the first part of the judgment, he has attempted to prove that the lands in question were in 1799-1800 part of the mal assets of the estate. In this attempt, in my opinion, he has failed. He has made no attempt to prove payment of rent at any time. It is said that he could make no such attempt because he is an auction-purchaser. But he has examined no one to explain his difficulties, if any, or even to tell us who the defaulting Patnidars or their predecessors-in-interest were. From the written statements in fact it would seem that the defendant accepted the position that owing to the laches of the previous Patnidars rents in respect of the lands in suit had never been realised. In any case from the positive evidence that the lands in question are and have been held free from payment of rent, and the failure on the part of the defendant to make any attempt to prove payment of rent at any time, we may safely conclude that in respect of the lands in question in the 3 appeals with which I am now dealing no rent has ever been paid either to Zemindar or Patnidar.

I, therefore, hold that the lands in suit in Appeals Nos. 620, 622 and 722 are Lakheraj and no part of the mal assets of the Zemindar or of the defendant's Patni.

I have lastly to notice an objection taken by the respondent in Appeal No. 722. It appears that the appeal was filed within time on the 10th July 1911. On the 1st March 1912 the officer of the Court reported that the Court-fee paid was insufficient, and thereupon, for payment of the deficit, on the 13th day of March 2 days' time was allowed. The deficit was in fact not paid till the 16th, that is one day too late. It is, therefore, contended that the appeal is barred by limitation, but it is open to the Court to enlarge the period and accordingly granting the necessary extension, I accept the payment of the 16th March 1912 as within time.

In the result Appeal No. 621 is dismissed with costs. In Appeals Nos. 620, 622 and 722 the plaintiffs will have in each case a declaration that the lands in suit are rent-free Brahmattar and that the entry to the contrary in the Record of Rights is incorrect. These appeals are accordingly decreed with costs.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We see no reason to differ from Mr. Justice Teunon in the view that he has taken of the rights of the parties in these cases. The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This was a suit brought by the guardian of a minor Kumar Satya

Narain Singh for a declaration that he is the adopted son of Udit Narain Singh, called by courtesy Raja, the last male holder of a large estate about 600 square miles in area known as the Handwa Estate, and for immediate possession of the property. The suit was brought against the Raja's widow Rani Keshobati Kumari, who claims a life-interest in the property and who has been in possession since the Raja's death.

This extract from the genealogy of the family is necessary to show the relationship of the parties:—

The material facts of the case are shortly as follows:

Raja Udit Narain Singh executed a Will on the 7th April 1896 and died three days later. Shortly after his death Ram Charan Singh, father of the defendant No. 2 and head of what is known as the Barkope branch of the family, claimed the succession and on the 23rd April 1897 he filed a suit in which he attacked the Will of the Raja as not genuine and claimed the property as the eldest male member of the family, asserting that as the family was governed by the Mithila Law, the Rani had no right to succeed. About a year after the suit had been instituted, a compromise was arranged between the parties. Under the Will of the Raja his widow had been given the power of adoption and also a certain interest in the property had been reserved to her. It will be necessary to discuss later what this interest was, but in order to effect the compromise it was arranged that the widow should adopt the plaintiff, the grandson of Ram Charan's younger brother Guru Charan who was then dead; and it was further arranged that the Rani was to retain a life-interest in the property. The contest in regard to the genuineness of the Will was dropped and the Rani took out Probate.

On the 8th March 1898 the plaintiff was actually adopted and the two deeds were drawn up embodying the agreement. To one of these deeds Ram Charan Singh, the Rani, the plaintiff's father Hari Prasad, Maha Prasad, the only surviving brother of Ram Charan, and Biswa Nath Singh, the brother of Hari Prasad were parties. The parties to the other deed were the plaintiff's father and mother, Ram Charan and the Rani. In December 1900 the settlement proceedings, which had been going on for some time in the Handwa Estate, were completed, and, after consideration of the Will and the agreement which had been entered into, Mr. McPherson, the Settlement Officer, recorded the Rani as proprietor. Meanwhile the management of the estate was unsatisfactory, several managers and Receivers were appointed and dismissed by the Rani, and finally in 1909 the Court of Wards took charge. They were only in charge for a short time, however, and in 1910 the estate was released. After this there were disputes between the Rani and the plaintiff and an attempt was made to settle these by giving the management to the plaintiff. This arrangement, however, was not a success; the disputes went on and this suit was eventually brought in 1912 on behalf of the plaintiff, who was then a minor, by his guardian.

In the plaint he alleged that by his adoption he had become vested with all the rights of a son born of Raja Udit Narain Singh, that he was entitled to immediate possession and was not bound by the agreement of the 8th March 1898. He also alleged that the tenure was a Ghatwali tenure and that he as the adopted son took the property in his own right. There was an allegation that even if the Rani had a life interest in the estate, she was liable to be removed for waste and mismanagement. The suit was contested by the Rani, who pleaded that she had been recorded as proprietor in the Record of Rights; that the suit was not maintainable; that under the terms of the Will she had a life interest, and that even apart from the Will under the agreement of the 8th March 1898 she was entitled to a life interest. She also contended that the plaintiff had no right as an adopted son, as the adoption was not valid. In regard to the claim as Ghatwal she contended that if the tenure were a Ghatwali tenure, the property had been vested in her as a Ghatwal on the death of her husband and that having become possessed of the property in that right she could not be ousted by the plaintiff. The suit went to trial on the following issues:—

1. Does the plaint disclose any cause of action and is the suit maintainable?

2. Is the suit barred under the special law of limitation provided in Regulation III of 1872?

3. Is it open to the defendant No. 1 to plead that she adopted the plaintiff without power from her husband and is she estopped by her acts and conduct from denying that the plaintiff is the duly adopted son of Raja Udit Narain Singh?

4. If the defendant No. 1 be not estopped as above, is the plaintiff's adoption by her invalid on the ground of want of authority from her husband?

5. Was Udit Narain Singh competent to dispose of or to give any valid directions to the future management of the Ghatwali properties, mentioned as properties Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the Schedule A annexed to the plaint, by his Will?

6. What are the respective rights of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 in the property in suit upon a true construction of the Will of Udit Narain Singh, dated the 7th April 1896?

7. Whether the plaintiff's succession to the aforesaid Ghatwali properties immediately on his adoption could be defeated by an agreement between his natural father and mother and defendant No. 1?

8. Are the agreements dated the 8th March 1898 binding on the plaintiff, in so far as they purport to curtail his rights in any of the properties in suit?

9. Was the defendant No. 1 divested of all right to possession of the estate of her deceased husband either as a Hindu widow or as a legatee under her husband's Will immediately upon the adoption of the plaintiff by the said defendant No. 1, Rani Keshobati Kumari?

10. What are the properties, moveable and immoveable, belonging to the estate left by the said Udit Narain Singh, including subsequent acquisitions?

11. Is the defendant No. 1 wasting and mismanaging the said estate; if so, whether such wasting and mismanaging are sufficient in law to render her liable to removal from its management even if the plaintiff's right be subject to her life-interest in it?

12. Is the defendant No. 1 liable to render accounts to the plaintiff of her management of the said estate from the 8th March 1898? What sum of money, if any, is due by the defendant No. 1, or any of the defendants upon the taking of such accounts?

13. Is the plaintiff entitled to a decree for possession of the said estate by ousting the defendant No. 1?

14. Is the plaintiff entitled to the appointment of a Receiver or to a permanent injunction as prayed for by him?

15. To what relief or reliefs, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

The learned Subordinate Judge has found all the issues in favour of the plaintiff and has decreed the suit. The Rani has appealed.

The first point argued before us is that under the agreement of the 8th March 1898 the Rani was given a life-interest in the property and that the plaintiff is not entitled to resile from that agreement. The portions of the agreement which relate to the matter of life-interest are as follows :—

"And whereas the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri has applied to the parties hereto of the first party to give her their said son Babu Dwarka Nath Singh to be adopted by her in the dattaka form as a son unto the said Raja Udit Narain Singh and herself, but on condition that she the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri shall remain in the possession of the whole of the said property, moveable and immoveable, with all their appurtenances of which the said Raja Udit Narain Singh died possessed as aforesaid and enjoy the rents, issues and profits thereof during the term of her natural life in accordance with the true meaning of the said Will, whereby as the said parties hereto of the first and second parts believe and admit the said Raja Udit Narain Singh intended to give her such life-estate, but whether he so intended or not the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri shall in any case be entitled to remain in possession and to enjoy the rents, issues and profits of the said immoveable property during the term of her natural life.....she shall remain in possession and enjoyment thereof during the term of her natural life in such manner and exercise such powers over the same as the Benares School of the Hindu Law entitled a Hindu widow in the possession of her husband's moveable property to do... That during the lifetime of the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri the said Babu Dwarka Nath Singh shall not, nor shall his male issue, have any sort of title or interest in the estate of the said Raja Udit Narain Singh, except a vested interest in the remainder subject to a life-estate therein of the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri."

I may note here that the name of the plaintiff before adoption was Dwarka Nath Singh. By this agreement then the Rani was given a life-interest in the property. The question is whether the agreement is binding on the plaintiff. It was entered into on behalf of the plaintiff, who was then an infant, by his father as his guardian. A minor can only act through a guardian, and contracts entered into by a guardian are binding on a minor, provided they have been properly entered into and are for his benefit. Now it has been frankly admitted by Mr. Hasan Imam that at the time the agreement was entered into the arrangement must have appeared to the father a most attractive one, and that in entering into the agreement he honestly thought that he was doing the best possible for his son, and it cannot be doubted that any reasonable man would have thought the same, because from being a co-sharer in a minor branch of the family the boy became entitled to this very large estate. It is contended, however, that the arrangement has not in fact turned out to be as advantageous for the minor as it at first sight must have appeared. Mr. Hasan Imam says that there is in the agreement no proper arrangement for maintenance allowance for the minor and that if he had remained in his own family, he could have demanded a partition and would have had an income of about Rs. 5,000 a year. It is exceedingly problematical whether the plaintiff would have got Rs. 5,000 a year because even assuming that the income from the Barkepe estate was as much as it is said to have been, there was, as the evidence shows, an encumbrance of 3½ laes upon the pro-

erty. As it is, the plaintiff is entitled by the agreement to an estate worth over 3 lacs a year subject to the life interest of the Rani. Moreover in the agreement it is provided that "the said Dwarka Nath Singh shall henceforth live with and under the guardianship of the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri as his mother and be supported, maintained, educated and trained in every way befitting his position as the dattaka putra or adopted son of the said Raja Udit Narain Singh and of herself". There is, therefore, no force in the argument that no proper arrangement was made for the maintenance of the minor and there is every reason to believe that even now the plaintiff is in a better position than he would have been if he had been in his own family. This, however, is not the question. The question is, whether at the time the agreement was entered into it was a fair and reasonable agreement which, to any reasonable man, would have appeared for the benefit of the minor, and that it was such an agreement is not only certain but is practically admitted. Nor was this agreement entered into without legal advice, for it was submitted to Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee in Calcutta, and it is certainly binding on the plaintiff unless it is contrary to Hindu Law that such an arrangement should be entered into or for some other reason. Now an adoption once made cannot be unmade, and the question of the binding force of such agreements has often been before the Courts in India. In Bombay such agreements have been held to be binding, Ravji Vinaykrav Jaggannath Shankar Sett v. Lakshmibai (1) and Pirsab Kasimsab Itagi v. Gurappa Basappa Kadigi (2), which is the last case in Bombay on this point. In the case reported as Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (3), however, Lord Macnaghten said: "It is difficult to understand how a declaration by Guman Singh or an agreement by him, if it was an agreement, could prejudice or affect the rights of his son which could only arise when his parental control and authority were determined. The ceremonies of adoption are unimpeached, the deed of adoption is open to no objection, and the second deed is admittedly inoperative. No conditions, therefore, were attached to the adoption. Had it been otherwise, the analogy, such as is presented by the doctrines of the Court of Equity in this country relating to the execution of powers of appointment, to which Mr. Arathoon appealed, would rather suggest that even in that case the adoption would have been valid and the condition void". In that case, however, the agreement was previous to the adoption and was not embodied in the adoption deed or referred to at the time of the adoption, and the suit was not to enforce the agreement but to annul the adoption. This case was referred to in the Full Bench case reported as Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (4), where the whole matter was very fully discussed. In the judgment of Mr. Justice Benson he said: "Then the question in each case would be whether the agreement so made by the natural father should or should not be upheld, and this I take it would depend on whether the agreement in regard to the property was in itself a fair and reasonable one and one which, taken as part of the contract for the adoption, was for the minor's benefit as being a condition on which alone the adoption would be made". Again he says:—"But it would seem that a fair and reasonable disposition of the property is not essentially repugnant to Hindu Law, or the purposes for which the adoption is allowed and is nowhere forbidden by that law. Such dispositions are commonly made and are upheld by the authority of the caste and the consciousness of the people. In these circumstances I think that the Courts ought not to refuse to recognise them as binding on the minor, for whose benefit the adoption coupled with the agreement as to the disposition of the property was really made. It may be assumed that the natural father would not have agreed to the adoption coupled with the disposition of the property, unless it was for the benefit of his son to do so: nor would the adoptive father have taken the son in adoption except on the condition agreed to. The adoption, of course, cannot be set aside and to set aside the condition which was coupled with the adoption, while maintaining the adoption, would require the justification of strong grounds of legal necessity or public policy". This, in spite of the doubt expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhaiya Rubidat Singh v Indar Kunu r (3) which is clearly distinguishable from the other cases referred to, would appear to be the correct view of the law, and in this view the agreement in the present case is binding on the plaintiff. It is contended, however, by Mr. Hasan Imam that the agreement, in so far as it gives a life-interest to the Rani, is in contravention of the terms of the Will and that this being so, it is not binding on the plaintiff. It is necessary to consider the question in some detail. The portion of the Will which deals with the life-interest of the Rani is as follows:—

"Magar ta hin hayat Rani mausufa hakiat mokarrari istimrari wa kul mal mankula wa ghair mankula wa asasul bait waqairah ka intizam wa ikhtiyar kulli hasil rahega".

As I understand it the nearest translation of this is as follows:—

"But as long as the said Rani is alive she shall enjoy the management and she shall have absolute right in the maliki istimrari right and in all moveable and immoveable properties and goods, etc."

On the one hand it is contended by Mr. Dwarka Nath Chakrabarty that this is to be interpreted as giving a life-interest to the Rani. On the other hand it is argued by Mr. Hasan Imam that these words give nothing more than a perpetual power of management. My view of the meaning of the clause is that it gives the Rani a life-interest in the property, but I do not propose to elaborate the point because in my opinion whether this be so or not, the plaintiff is bound by the terms of the agreement.

In the Will there are two portions which are open to different constructions. One of these is this clause which I have quoted, and the other is that portion in which power is given to the Rani to 'adopt a son, that is, a kartaputra according to her own decision and liking.' I deal with this latter clause first. According to the strict interpretation of the word kartaputra, the adoption which the Rani was allowed by the Will was an adoption in the kritrima form. This is an adoption to herself. It is clear, however, from the rest of the Will that the intention of the Raja was not that the Rani should adopt to herself but that she should adopt to him, for in the preamble to the Will he says that his object in making it is "to preserve the property and for preservation of the Raj Gaddi". What he intended then was certainly not an adoption in the kritrima form but an adoption in the dattaka form. Handwa is situated in the Santal Parganas in a very backward part of the country, and we find from the evidence that neither the Raja nor his priests knew the difference between a kartaputra and a dattakaputra, thus in the agreement kartaputra was very properly interpreted as meaning dattakaputra. This interpretation was given after consultation with Counsel in Calcutta and the words of the agreement are: "And whereas the said Raja Udit Narain Singh lived under and was governed by the Benares School of the Hindu Law and the power of adoption hereinbefore mentioned was, as the parties to these presents believe, intended by him to be carried out in the dattaka form, the word kartaputra used in the said Will meaning in the popular acceptance of that term in that part of the country the dattakaputra". On this construction the adoption was actually made in the dattaka form.

At the same time and by the same Counsel the meaning of the clause in the Will which gave an interest to the Rani was considered and in the agreement we find the following words:—

"But on condition that she the said Rani Keshobati Koeri shall remain in the possession of the whole of the said property moveable and immoveable with all the appurtenances of which the said Raja Udit Narain Singh died possessed as aforesaid and enjoy the rents, issues and profits thereof during the term of her natural life in accordance with the true meaning of the said Will, whereby as the said parties hereto of the first and second parts believe and admit the said Raja Udit Narain Singh intended to give her such life-estate, but whether he so intended or not the said Srimati Rani Keshobati Koeri shall in any case be entitled to remain in possession and to enjoy the rents, issues and profits of the said immoveable properties during the term of her natural life."

It was on this construction of the Will that the agreement was made and the plaintiff adopted in the dattaka form. Mr. Hasan Imam contends that this construction is wrong. Even assuming that this is so and putting the case in its most favourable light for the plaintiff, it has to be admitted that there was, at least at the time of the execution of the agreement, a bona fide doubt as to the meaning of these clauses of the Will. The Will was construed by competent legal authority in Calcutta as giving a life-interest to the Rani, and this interpretation was accepted as a condition of the adoption and was incorporated in the agreement which was drawn up. It is not, in my opinion, now open to the plaintiff to contend that this construction was wrong. We have been told that parties cannot be allowed to read into a Will a wrong construction which happens to suit themselves, and we are asked to interpret the Will without reference to the agreement. I agree that parties cannot be allowed to import into a solemn document, such as a Will, a construction which it cannot bear, but I am not prepared to agree that the construction which was put on the Will was wrong, and in any case where there has been a doubt as to the proper construction and where the parties have endeavoured to the best of their ability to discover the proper construction and have entered into an agreement of which this construction is the very basis, it is not open to either of them afterwards to repudiate this construction and ask that the agreement be set aside. What the plaintiff in fact wishes to do in this case is to be allowed to approbate that part of the agreement which construes the Will in his favour and to reprobate that portion which construes the Will as giving the Rani a life-interest. He cannot be allowed to do this and he is, in my opinion, bound by the agreement. This being so, it is hardly necessary to consider the other pleas of the plaintiff. I need only remark that so far as the claim as Ghatwal is concerned, if this is a Ghatwal tenure and if Raja Udit Narain Singh was a Ghatwal, his interest as a Ghatwal became vested in his widow when she took possession of the property and she is not competent to divest herself of this status. It is unnecessary to discuss the question of limitation, though on this ground also the plaintiff's suit for possession must fail.

The only question which remains to be considered is the 11th issue:—"Is the defendant No. 1 wasting and mismanaging the said estate? If so, whether such wasting and mismanaging are sufficient in law to render her liable to removal from its management, even if the plaintiff's right be subject to her life-interest in it". This issue is loosely worded and it is not quite clear whether the Subordinate Judge means legal waste, nor is it very clear what his finding as to waste is. He finds that the Rani has given dar mokarrari leases, has made rent-free Brahmothar grants and that she has caused an area of 309 bighas of khas kamot lands to be converted into raiya lands. He also finds that she has contracted debts. None of these come into the category of legal waste. As to the first two the leases and grants are not binding on the reversioner, as to the conversion of the khas kamot lands into raiya lands there is nothing to show that this is waste as rent will presumably be got from these lands; and in so far as the debts are concerned they are all personal. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has clearly shown that she has mismanaged the property, and this is in fact not denied. She is a pardanashin lady evidently in the hands of dishonest servants and if the estate is to be preserved, a Receiver must be appointed. To this extent only, therefore, I would uphold the Subordinate Judge's decree. In other respects the suit should be dismissed; each party should bear its own costs.

ROE, J.—I agree that the plaintiff is bound by the agreement which settled the dispute between the Rani and the Barkope branch of the Handwa family. The position was that if the Will was valid, the Rani might have adopted any Kshetari boy and barred the Barkope succession for ever. In the Santhal Parganas the practice of the secular law is discouraged and the priests, in their cross examination in the case before us, betray universal and complete ignorance of the scriptural law. The result of this was a Will by which a son was to be adopted in a form which would defeat the testator's own intention and an interest reserved to the adopting mother by a condition, of which the exact interpretation gives rise to a difference of opinion between my learned brother and myself. It was clearly to the interest of the Handwa family as a whole that the Will should be amicably interpreted. In Volume XIV of Halsbury's Laws of England, section 1223, are quoted many cases of good family settlements of disputes arising on the construction of ill-made Wills. The dispute in this case was one between the Lagwan and the Barkope branches of the Handwa family. The plaintiff was before his adoption and is still a member of the Handwa family. He cannot challenge the Handwa family settlement without showing that it was against his interest. Mr. Hasan Imam concedes that the terms of the settlement offered at the time most attractive prospects. Apart from any consideration of the Hindu Law of adoption, this concession ends in my view the question of the position of the plaintiff.

I also agree with the order proposed in regard to the appointment of a Receiver. We are happily relieved of the task of entering in detail into the question of the plaintiff's right to the relief asked for in paragraph 27 (g) of the plaint. Mr. Dwarka Nath Chackerbatty consents to the granting of this relief. I would, therefore, make a decree for the appointment of a Receiver for the preservation and management of the Handwa Estate and custody and control of the documents and moveable properties of that Estate. I would also direct that the Receiver be appointed under the decree of this Court, not under the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and that the Receiver be directly under the control of this Court. This Divisional Bench will consider in Chambers the question who shall be appointed as the Court's Receiver. In conclusion I would direct that in view of the substantial causes of doubt as to the rights of the parties, the costs both of the Rani and of the Kumar be met from the estate in the hands of the Receiver.

I would further order that notice be issued to the Courts of the Santhal Parganas and Bhagalpur that the Handwa Estate is in the hands of a Receiver to be appointed by this Court, and that no attachment of any asset of the estate be made without the sanction of this Court.

*Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 22—
"Aggrieved," meaning of—Application under section—Limitation.*

Where a Receiver in insolvency at the instance of a creditor attaches and takes possession of a property as the property of the insolvent, a third person claiming to be the owner of the property becomes "aggrieved" within the meaning of section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act; so that an application by him under that section should be made within 21 days from the date of the act of the Receiver in taking possession. [p. 63, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the District Judge of the 24 Pergannahs, in Appeal No. 16 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dharendra Nath Mukerjee, for the Petitioner.—The only question involved is one of limitation. The lower Court held that under the proviso to section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the application is barred by limitation.

CHARU CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE v. HEM CHANDRA MOOKERJEE.

Under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the aggrieved party can bring the suit within 21 days from the date of the order of decision of the Court or Receiver. Therefore the 21 days will be counted from the date of the report of the Receiver, and hence I am within time. The question is whether 21 days will be counted from the date of the report or of the act of the Receiver, viz., the actual seizure of my client's property, the boats.

The only Calcutta case in point is Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (1). The definition of aggrieved person is given in Lalji Sahay Singh v. Abdul Gani (2), which has been followed in Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (1).

[TEUNON, J.—Lalji Sahay Singh v. Abdul Gani (2) is not under section 22 of the Insolvency Act.]

Time will be counted not from the act of the Receiver but from the decree or order of the Receiver, but here there is no order of the Receiver.

Babus Karunamoy Bose and Bankim Chandra Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.—Thakur Prasad v. Punno Lal (3) is the case in point and is followed in Mool Chand v. Murari Lal (4). The lower Court, relying upon the case reported as Thakur Prasad v. Punno Lal (3), is right in holding that the application is barred by limitation.

Babu Dharendra Nath Mukherjee in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The present Rule is one issued under the provisions of the proviso to section 46 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. It appears, and it has been found, that at the instance of one of the creditors and after the taking of evidence on the 27th of November 1917 the Receiver appointed in certain insolvency proceedings took possession of certain boats as the property of the insolvent. It has further been found that the attachment and the taking of possession were to the knowledge of the petitioner. Thereafter on the 19th December the petitioner before us made an application to the Court of the Subordinate Judge having jurisdiction in the insolvency proceedings in question, and therein prayed that the Court should reverse the act or order of the Receiver and return the boats to him as being his property. The Subordinate Judge held that under the terms of the proviso to section 22 the application was barred by limitation. On appeal the District Judge confirmed that order.

The argument of the petitioner before us is that limitation should run not from the date of the act of the Receiver in taking possession but from the date, namely, the 14th December, on which he reported his action to the Court. On the facts found in this particular case we are unable to accede to that contention. It is quite clear that the attachment by the Receiver and his taking of possession are acts by which, within the meaning of section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a third person claiming to be the owner was, if the real owner, aggrieved. He should, therefore, have made his application under section 22 within 21 days from that date.

In support of his contention before us the petitioner refers us to the case decided by this Court and reported as Hanseswar Ghosh v. Rakhal Das Ghose (1). But that decision may, we think, be distinguished, as it is quite clear that by the act of the Receiver in the present case the applicant if the true owner was deprived of the possession of his property. In support of the view we take we may further refer to the decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Thakur Prasad v. Punno Lal (3) and a subsequent decision reported as Mool Chand v. Murari Lal (4).

For these reasons we discharge this Rule with costs, one gold mohur, to be paid to the creditor who has appeared and one gold mohur to be paid to the Receiver.

—Retrial - Penal Code Act XLV of 1860, ss. 201, 210.

Where to three charges of criminal misappropriation, alleged to have been committed by the accused within a year, was added another charge of an offence under section 210 of the Penal Code not committed within the same year:

Held, that there was a misjoinder of charges, as the last offence charged did not form one transaction with the other three offences.

Criminal Reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hooghly, dated the 18th October 1917.

Babus Manmathinath Mukherjee, Narendra Kumar Bose and Jatindra Nath Sen, for the Accused.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This case comes before us on a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hooghly under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code. On 23rd July 1917 the accused Rajendra Roy was committed for trial in the Court of Session on three charges of criminal misappropriation committed on different dates in the year 1915. In the Sessions Court on 1st October 1917, an additional charge was added of an offence under section 210, Indian Penal Code, in respect of a sum which was connected with the first of the three charges of criminal misappropriation. At the trial the Jury disagreed, a majority of three being in favour of an acquittal. Disagreeing with that majority and thinking their verdict to be perverse, the Additional Sessions Judge has referred the matter to this Court. On reading the letter of reference it appears to us that there was in this case a misjoinder of charges. In that view, it is unnecessary to go into the merits of the case, as the only fair course will be to direct a retrial of the accused on charges properly framed and properly joined. The three charges of criminal misappropriation related to three separate sums. The accused was the manager appointed by the District Judge of Hooghly of an idol, Brindaban Chandra Thakur, of Guptipara; and was as such manager entrusted with the funds belonging to the idol. It is of portions of these funds that the alleged misappropriations took place. The first item was one of Rs. 1,441-9-3 said to be costs of the High Court decree in Regular Appeal No. 290 of 1909, to which the idol was a party. The second item was of a sum of Rs. 135 said to have been improperly retained by the accused on the 23rd July 1915. The third was one of Rs. 5-12-3 also misappropriated by the accused as such manager between 14th December 1915 and 8th January 1916. These three charges could, no doubt, have been properly tried together in one trial. The added charge was that the accused, on or about 10th December 1914, fraudulently obtained an order from the District Judge of Hooghly for a sum of Rs. 1,841-9-3, which sum was not due to him or which was larger than was due to him from the estate of the idol. The date of this offence, it will be seen, was not within the year within which the three alleged offences of criminal misappropriation fell. We are of opinion that the accused could not legally be tried on this fourth charge along with the three charges of criminal misappropriation. It was not an act forming one transaction with them. It had some relation to one of the three charges of criminal misappropriation but not to the other two; and, in part, it referred to matters not included in any of those three charges, because it appears from the letter of reference that the accused was said to have committed criminal misappropriation of a further sum of Rs. 200 out of the Rs. 1,841-9-3. This being so, we think that the case must go back to the Court of Session for a retrial of the accused. We need not here specify exactly on what charges he should be tried. That will be for the prosecution to consider and the Court to decide. We need only say that they must be charges which can be properly dealt with in one trial. The accused will remain on the bail at present subsisting.

Retrial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145, scope of—Proceedings under s. 145, when should be instituted.

The provisions of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were enacted with the specific intention of definitely settling a quarrel after a fair hearing of each side, and proceedings under section 144 of the Code should not be substituted for proceedings under section 145 in order to evade the provisions of law which require an inquiry into the question of possession with reference to the evidence adduced by the parties. [p. 66, col. 1.]

The use of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace only if it is clear, upon a reading of the Police reports, that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith. Where, however, the facts on the record clearly indicate that a proceeding under section 145 is necessary, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under section 144. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Gaya, dated the 13th January 1918.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We are asked in this case to set aside proceedings under section 144 and to direct that the Deputy Magistrate take proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Government Advocate has put before us the facts of the case and the case-law bearing thereon. The facts are that the Police received information that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace with regard to possession of standing crops in two villages and also with regard to the Mokarrari rights over a considerable area in those villages. A head constable of Police made a report on the 19th December 1917 to his superior officer recommending that orders under section 144 be issued upon both parties. Upon this the Inspector reported that proceedings under section 144 alone were not sufficient in such a case and that action under section 145 should be taken. In the meantime one of the parties had appeared before the Court and had reported to the Magistrate that the enquiry before the Police was going on and had urged that it was advisable that an officer superior to the head constable should be deputed to superintend the investigation and also that suitable action should be taken to prevent a breach of the peace. Upon these reports the learned Magistrate passed orders, purporting to be under section 144, ex parte against both parties, at the same time intimating that he would consider on the date fixed whether proceedings under section 145 should be taken. The question whether proceedings under section 145 should be taken was not further considered. On the date fixed the parties appeared and filed written statements and a mass of documents. Upon a consideration of the written statements and one document on each side out of the mass filed, the learned Magistrate made absolute the order under section 144 against one party and cancelled the order as against the other. There is authority in the case of Parkar Mahton v. Ram Khelwan (1) for the proposition that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to act under section 144 where the facts on the record clearly indicated that procedure under section 145 was necessary. It was held that the words of the latter section left no other course open to the Magistrate than to take proceedings under section 145, when he had information that a dispute existed regarding land within his jurisdiction likely to result in a breach of the peace. The whole case-law bearing on the distinction between proceedings under section 107 and section 145 was clearly set forth in the order of reference to a Full Bench made by Caspersz, J., and Ryves, J. in the case of Emperor v. Abbas (2). The Full Bench were not prepared to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject. All that was said was that there was no conflict between section 107 and section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but that the question whether after proceedings under section 107 had been taken it would be proper for the Magistrate to act under section 145, must depend on the circumstances of each case as it arises. It might be that after an order under section 107 no likelihood of a breach of the peace would continue. There was no question in this case, nor in the decisions quoted in the order of reference, of the Magistrate's powers under section 144, but the decision seems to have been since regarded as justifying Magistrates in declining to take action under section 145 until it has been ascertained that proceedings under section 144 have been insufficient to allay the dispute. Had the matter rested there we should see no reason to interfere. But it has gone further and, as we think, too far. In order to avoid the taking of evidence and the making of a definite order under section 145 a summary procedure under section 144 has been substituted in very many cases in which without possible doubt proceedings under section 145 should have been taken. We have noticed the practice growing in this province. After a series of such cases in Darbhanga, we ascertained that the then Magistrate of that District had issued a circular order to the officers subordinate to him directing them to refuse to take action under section 145 on the ground that the procedure therein involved was tedious and unprofitable. We now find something of the same sort happening in Gaya. One such case from Gaya was recently before the Court in Criminal Revision No. 352 of 1917 [Bansi Singh v. Emperor (3)]. This case comes from Gaya and there is another case from Gaya pending. The matter seems to us to be one of great importance. The provisions of section 145 were enacted with the specific intention of definitely settling a quarrel after a fair hearing of each side. In order that the settlement of the quarrel might be without doubt permanent, it was further enacted that if the decision under section 145 be not contested in the Civil Courts within three years, the party declared to be in possession shall remain in possession for ever. The substitution of proceedings under section 144 for proceedings under section 145 appears to us to have no logical object whatever, save to avoid the labour of taking oral evidence of possession. The learned Government Advocate accepts as incontrovertible the following propositions:—firstly, that the Magistrate is not required to take proceedings under section 145 if he is satisfied that by other methods he can avoid a breach of the peace; secondly, that the use of section 144 is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace only if it is clear, upon a reading of the Police reports, that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith. This is certainly the view taken in Mahadeo Kunwar v. Bisu (4) and Emperor v. Ram Baran Singh (5). There can be no doubt but that in the case before us the dispute between the parties is a genuine dispute, and, as we understand the decision of the Full Bench in Calcutta already quoted, not one which could be settled by an order under section 107 or section 144. In spite of the proceedings under section 144 the dispute still subsists. The Magistrate was required by law in the first instance, and is still required by law, to settle the dispute by an order under section 145 or section 146.

It is suggested by Mr. Khurshed Husnain for the opposite party that our power of superintendence does not extend to a direction to a Magistrate to take action which it is within his discretion to refuse to take. In this connection the case of Permessar Singh v. Kailaspati (6) is quoted. Chamier, C. J., in that case said, at page 340*: "A High Court can and will interfere where there has been a material irregularity which amounts to a refusal to exercise or an usurpation of jurisdiction." We may refer also to the quotation made at page 348* from Blackstone's Commentaries: "It is the peculiar business of the Court to superintend all inferior Tribunals and therein to enforce the due exercise of their judicial and ministerial powers with which the Crown or Legislature have invested them, and this not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence and obviating their denial of justice," and from Bacon's Abridgment: "The superior Courts having a superintendence over all inferior Courts may in all cases of innovation award a prohibition."

When we come to examine the proceedings now before us, it is obvious that they are in reality proceedings under Chapter XII. The notices issued to the parties state that there is a dispute between them regarding land, the boundaries of that land are given, and the parties are given an opportunity to make a statement before the Court on a date fixed. They are ordered not to go near the land meanwhile. The notices are in effect the notices contemplated in the last clauses of section 145 (1) and (4). In response to the notices the parties appeared and filed written statements and documentary evidence precisely in the manner indicated by section 145 (1). But under the pretence that the proceedings were under section 144, the Magistrate did not proceed under the first clause of section 145 (4) but decided, upon summary inspection of the documents before him, that one of the parties should remain in undisturbed possession for two months. It would have been but little less ridiculous to issue a notice in the form required by section 488 of the Code, and deal with it under section 144 on the ground that prompt payment of a maintenance would tend to prevent danger by starvation to human life. In the exercise of our power of superintendence we are required to prohibit this innovation, and by quickening the negligence of the inferior Court to obviate a denial of justice. The Magistrate has issued an order which, having regard to the action taken by the parties upon it, was an effective order under section 145, clause (1), read with the third part of clause (4). He will now proceed to complete the proceedings instituted by this action. Written statements and documentary evidence have been filed. All that is required to be done is to hear such oral evidence as the parties may adduce and make an order under section 145 (6) or under section 146, in accordance with his finding upon the question, which of the parties was in possession upon the date of the notices issued, that is, the 29th December 1917.

Case sent back.

GANPATI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPLICANT
versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110 (f), 117 (3)—Security proceedings—Evidence of general repute, admissibility of.

The provision in section 117 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code must be strictly construed and is, therefore, inapplicable where the charge is under clause (f) of section 110 of the Code. [p. 68, col. 2.]

Clause (f) of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is one of highly special character: evidence of general repute is not sufficient to bring a case within it, but specific acts showing that the accused recklessly disregards the safety of the persons or the property of his neighbours and actually causes danger thereto must be proved. [p. 68, col. 2.]

Criminal application for revision against the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Wardha.

Mr. S. K. Barlingay, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Wardha, binding each of the applicants Ganpati, Jagannath and Udaji down to be of good behaviour for one year in a sum of Rs. 500 with one surety in like sum, on the ground that they are so desperate and dangerous as to render their being at large without security hazardous to the community. Their joint appeal to the District Magistrate was dismissed.

The early history of the case is given in my order of the 20th January 1915 in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1 of 1915, which was an application by Jagannath for transfer of the case from the Court of Mr. G. B. Lothey, the Magistrate who eventually passed the order now sought to be revised. In the concluding paragraph of that order I drew the District Magistrate's special attention to the representation made by the Prosecuting Inspector to the effect that the Police were not prepared to make out a case under section 110 (f), Criminal Procedure Code, and praying that action under section 107 ibid. be substituted. I pointed out that more harm than good might result from a preliminary order demanding proof which the Police were unable to support by adequate evidence. No notice appears to have been taken of that remark. On the contrary in his final order the Sub-Divisional Magistrate gave his reasons for taking action under section 110 (f), rather than under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, and these were endorsed by the District Magistrate in appeal.

The first point raised by the Rule issued to the District Magistrate is that neither the allegations summarised in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's preliminary order under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, nor those of Sub-Inspector Roshan Ali on whose deposition the said order is based, suffice as foundation for a case under section 110 (f) of the Code. In this connection it is necessary to consider the grounds assigned by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in his final order and by the District Magistrate in appeal. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate refers to an oral inquiry made by himself at Sonagaon Bai in the absence of the applicant Jagannath between the 25th and 26th November 1914, on the latter of which days Roshan Ali's deposition was recorded. He then proceeds thus :—

"My oral inquiry had led me to form an opinion that the party of the tenants was the party of violence and that party had driven the Malguzar into the necessity of appointing 2 pardeshis at least for the protection of person and property. It is on this opinion that I took action under section 110 against the 3 accused. Preference was shown to section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, over 107. I think that section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, was best suited to the facts of the case, as petty crimes of mischief and assault had already been committed several times in the village. Habitual mischief is mentioned in 110 (d) and assaults on men and women are offences involving breach of peace and fall under section 110 (e). Clause (f) is a general clause. It includes all other clauses (a) to (e), which are special illustrations or rather specifications of clause (f) and I preferred the general clause (f) in framing my order under section 112 read with section 110, Criminal Procedure Code."

The learned Standing Counsel for the Crown candidly confesses his inability to support this view of clause (f). As a matter of fact, clause (f) is a re-enactment of part of sections 505 and 506 in the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, omitted from the Code of 1882 on account of its vagueness which caused inconvenience in practice. The old section 505 enabled a Magistrate to require security from a person who from evidence of his general character appeared to be by repute "of notoriously bad livelihood" or to be "a dangerous character."

Section 506 was yet more similar in terms to clause (f) of section 110 in the present Code. In section 117 (3) of the present Code it is provided that the fact that a person is an habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise, but it may be taken as settled by authority that this provision must be strictly construed and so is inapplicable where the charge is under clause (f) of section 110; see Kalai Halldar v. Emperor (1), Emperor v. Bidhya Pati (2), Wahid Ali Khan v. Emperor (3) and Muthu Pillai, In re (4). Clause (f) in fact is one of a highly special character : Evidence of general repute is not sufficient to bring a case within it, but specific acts showing that the accused recklessly disregards the safety of the persons or the property of his neighbours and actually causes danger thereto must be proved. In Akhoy Kumar Chatterjee v. Queen-Empress (5) it was held that persons who habitually annoyed fellow-villagers by knocking at their doors at night, throwing brick-bats on their roofs and insulting the modesty of respectable women did not come within the clause, and in Emperor v. Kallu (6) section 107 was pronounced to be more appropriate than section 110 where violence against a particular individual or his partisans was, as in the present case, apprehended.

Turning to the reasons given by the District Magistrate I observe, to begin with, that he goes considerably further than the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in attributing to the applicants certain fires which took place in Sonagaon Bai early in 1912. As to these he writes in paragraph 4 of his appellate judgment:—

"I cannot regard the fires as pure accidents: they were too numerous and followed too closely on acts regarded as hostile to the appellants to be regarded as mere coincidences."

The first took place on the night of the 11th March 1912 at the threshing floor of the Malguzar Yado Rao (P. W. No. 1), the applicant's principal opponent, and destroyed wheat worth some Rs. 2,500 according to the report (Exhibit P-7) taken to the Police by the kotwar on the 13th idem. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate found that the applicants as well as Yado Rao were attending a marriage at Narsala, a distant village, when the fire occurred, but assumed it to have been the work of an incendiary because the threshing floor is remote from the basti and agriculturists take all possible precautions to avoid accidental fires and because Yado Rao had sued Udaji in the preceding January. In this connection Yado Rao's own evidence is important. He deposed that on his way back to Sonagaon Bai from Narsala he was met by a man bringing news of the fire:

"He told me that a heap of wheat was on fire; it was being extinguished but it was not extinguished. I asked him the cause of fire but he could not explain the cause. He did not suggest the way in which fire took place. He said it was inexplicable to him. There were two heaps of wheat. But one only was burnt as the wind was in another direction."

And in cross-examination he said:—

"I had not mentioned the names of any one in reporting the fire of my wheat. I did not tell Police that possibly my servants had negligently caused fire. None told that accused set fire to my wheat but our suspicions go to accused's party."

Now there is no sort of evidence to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the fire was the work of an incendiary at all. The fact that the applicants were far away at the time is manifestly a strong point in favour of their innocence, and it must also be borne in mind that the suit against Udaji was not decided till December 1912. The precautions taken by a well-to-do Malguzar like Yado Rao would doubtless include the posting of a strong guard over the threshing floor and on the 11th March 1912 there was a half moon. The probabilities then are to my mind against incendiarism.

As to the other fires, which took place inside the basti, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in his paragraph V (5) evidently meant to find that they may quite well have been due to accident. On the 16th March 1912 a single house was burnt and on the next day 13 houses, 11 kothas, 5 bangals and a shrine. On the last mentioned occasion a house and kothas belonging to the applicant Udaji were destroyed, a circumstance which cannot but be regarded as telling strongly against the theory that he had any hand in bringing about the conflagration. All the applicants had houses in the basti and, as substantial persons, must know perfectly well that as the District Magistrate has pointed out an entire village may easily be burnt to the ground if a fire starts in dry weather and a high wind. That there was a high wind on the 17th March 1912 is stated by Yado Rao himself.

Apart from the fires, the acts attributed to the applicants or their adherents are distinctly trivial in nature and could not possibly be treated with any show of reason as indicating the doers to be desperate and dangerous to the community.

For the Crown the Standing Counsel has conceded the impossibility of applying clause (f) of section 110. His contention is that clause (e) is applicable and that in any case the order to furnish security should be maintained as one under section 107. The acts here relied on are those described in sub-paragraphs (13), (16), (17), (20) and (24) of paragraph V in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's final order. The first three incidents are all of a petty nature and any violence alleged is said to have been used by Ganpati alone; each is spoken to by one witness only and in 2 at least the real cause of quarrel may have been independent of the split between the 2 factions in the village. Of the two assaults dealt with in paragraph V (20) one occurred in March 1914 and the other some 5 years earlier, while in both Jagannath alone was the offender. In the case of Dajiba (P. W. No. 2) the assault had no sort of connection with Soné-gaon Bai, having taken place on the road between Kapsi and Ambora, the latter being the village where Dajiba lives. Sakhu, P. W. No. 13's affair is an extremely stale one and she expressly stated that she was never molested by either Udaji or Ganpati. The Crown is unable to point out any evidence establishing the employment by the applicants of pardeshis for the purpose of doing violence to Yado Rao and his partisans. Bahena Warthi (D. W. No. 23), who figures as the actual assailant in several of the incidents reported to the Police as stated by Sub Inspector Roshan Ali, does not appear to be a pardeshi at all and at any rate denied siding with either of the opposing parties.

I have read the evidence and consider it quite insufficient to establish against any of the applicants habitual commission, attempt at commission or abetment of commission of offences involving a breach of the peace. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate's decision is evidently based to a considerable extent on what he heard in the village before he recorded Sub-Inspector Roshan Ali's deposition, though there is no express indication of this in his preliminary order, and his final order shows that he started the inquiry proper with a persuasion that the applicants were responsible for the disturbed state of the village and were generally dangerous and desperate, apart from their relations with Yado Rao. As I have said, the recorded evidence is far from establishing the soundness of that preconceived opinion.

The applicants' bonds have already been in force nearly 8 months. Jagannath and Ganpati have left Sonagaon and the risk of collision between them and Yado Rao has, therefore, been greatly diminished. As to Jagannath's departure the Sub-Divisional Magistrate writes:—

"The leaving of the village was a tactical move. It was to create an artificial agitation against the Malguzar and his party."

There appears to be no evidence justifying this suggestion, and it seems to me at least equally probable that Jagannath's motive was that of preventing the occurrence of disputes as far as in him lay. A period of 14 months has elapsed since the applicants appeared in response to the preliminary order, and altogether I am of opinion that even if the appropriate course of proceeding under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, had been taken, any bond which might have been exacted from them would probably have ceased by this time to operate. The order under section 110 (f) cannot be maintained; it is accordingly set aside. The bonds executed will be cancelled and the parties thereto discharged.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (h), 200, 203, 437—Petition of objection, whether complaint—Dismissal, irregular—Revisional jurisdiction of Magistrate, whether can be exercised.

A charged B with house-breaking, and B lodged an information against A for theft of his gun. The Police reported B's case to be false, and B filed a petition of objection asking the Magistrate to make an investigation and to summon the accused. B, in the meantime, was tried on the charge of house-breaking and acquitted, and the Magistrate passed the following order on his petition of objection: "Judgment of counter-case, record and Police report gone through. Enter false." Against this order B made an application to the District Magistrate, who, acting under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, held that it was premature to call the theft case false, and sent the case back to the Magistrate:

Held, (1) that the petition of objection filed by B was a complaint within the meaning of section 4 (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 71, col. 2.]

(2) that the order of the Magistrate entering the theft case as false, was in substance an order under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code dismissing the complaint; [p. 71, col. 2.]

(3) that where the final order is in fact one under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate can be exercised even though there may have been some irregularity on the part of the officer taking cognizance of the complaint lodged under section 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 72, col. 1.]

SADHU CHARAN RAY v. BALEI SEVAIN.

Section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates that where a complaint has in fact been dismissed under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate can be invoked irrespective of the consideration whether the dismissal is legal or illegal. [p. 72, col. 1]

It is absurd to hold that a Magistrate is competent to revise the dismissal of a complaint legally dismissed but that he is not so competent to revise in the case of a complaint illegally dismissed. [p. 72, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—One Amareswar Biswal laid an information before the Police charging one Balei with house-breaking. He alleged that Balei had been caught on the premises with a gun. Balei was put upon his trial upon that charge and was acquitted. His defence in that trial was that he did not go to the katcheri in which Amareswar was living on the night of the occurrence, but that the gun had been forcibly snatched from him by Amareswar as he was passing the katcheri on his way to shoot a crocodile.

After the acquittal of Balei the Sadr Sub Divisional Magistrate of Puri, who had taken cognisance of the information lodged by Balei before the Police, passed the following order: "Judgment of counter-case, record and Police report gone through. Enter false under section 379, Indian Penal Code. No prosecution."

Against that order Balei made an application for revision on the same day, namely, the 17th of October 1917, to the District Magistrate, who acting under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, passed the following judgment:—

"I have heard the judgment in the counter-case. This makes it clearly premature to describe as false the present case. Let a charge sheet be called. To Sub-Divisional Officer for orders."

Amareswar now comes before us in revision and prays that the order of the District Magistrate may be set aside.

The first contention urged by the learned Vakil for the petitioner is that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate of the 17th October 1917. It is urged that the only way in which the District Magistrate could have interfered was to transfer the case to his own file under section 528, Criminal Procedure Code.

Now it appears that after the Police reported Balei's case to be false, Balei filed a petition of objection before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate asking that an investigation might be made and that the offenders might be summoned.

It is clear upon the authorities that this petition was a complaint within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it is also clear upon the authorities that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate declining to put the accused upon their trial and directing that the case might be entered false under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code was in substance an order under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, dismissing the complaint. The learned Vakil, however, contends that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate not having examined Balei when he made his petition of objection on oath in accordance with the terms of section 200, Criminal Procedure Code, the order was not an order of dismissal under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He contends that if it had been a legal dismissal in accordance with the terms of the Criminal Procedure Code, then the District Magistrate would have been competent to interfere under sections 435 and 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but in the case of an illegal dismissal or a dismissal without conforming to the provisions of the Code, the Magistrate has no power to exercise his revisional jurisdiction. Reliance is placed upon the case of Lokenath Patra v. Sanyasi Charan Manna (1). That case, however, is not exactly in point. There the Magistrate ordered the prosecution of a complainant under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, without dismissing his complaint under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Court held that in order to justify a prosecution under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, it was necessary that the dismissal under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be a legal dismissal. That, however, is not the case before us. Here we have to consider whether the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate could have been exercised in a case where, in respect of a complaint lodged under section 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there had been some irregularity on the part of the officer taking cognisance, but where the final order was in fact one under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. As I read section 437, it contemplates that where a complaint has in fact been dismissed under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code irrespective of the consideration whether the dismissal was legal or illegal, the revisional jurisdiction of the Magistrate can be invoked. To hold otherwise would lead to the absurdity that whereas the Magistrate is competent to revise the dismissal of a complaint legally dismissed, he is not so competent to revise in the case of a complaint illegally dismissed. The learned Vakil has also relied upon Moul Singh v. Mahabir Singh (2). In that case after a number of accused persons had been convicted, an application was made by the prosecutor to summon the remaining accused, including three against whom warrants had already been issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The High Court of Calcutta in revision held that the District Magistrate in exercise of his revisional jurisdiction was competent to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate refusing to summon those accused in respect of whom warrants had been issued, but that he was not so competent in respect of those against whom no warrants had been issued. It appears from the judgments of their Lordships that there were facts in that case leading to the inference that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in refusing to summon the accused against whom no warrants had been issued, had not passed any final order of dismissal or discharge.

(1) 30 C. 923; 7 C. W. N. 525.

JAGUJI RAI v. EMPEROR.

In the present case, upon the facts before us, it is quite clear that a final order of dismissal had been passed and, therefore, in our opinion, the learned District Magistrate had full jurisdiction to revise that order in exercise of his powers under section 437.

On the merits, too, we think it is desirable that the charge made by Balei should be investigated now that he has succeeded in defeating the charge made by Amareswar against him in the counter-case. It is true the learned District Magistrate has not given any detailed reasons, but from the fact that the judgment in the counter-case was in favour of Balei it is desirable that Balei's complaint should now be investigated.

The application is rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 112—Notice under s. 112, contents of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to proceed under s. 107.

Section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be read along with section 107 of the Code. [p. 73, col. 1.]

Where a Magistrate of the first class is informed that a person is likely to disturb the public tranquillity without any information being given as to his intent to do wrongful acts and the Magistrate considers the information to have come from a reliable source, he has jurisdiction to make an order under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In such a case it is not necessary to specify in the order any definite acts which the person intends to commit. [p. 73, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Azamgarh.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Applicants.

Mr R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Jaguji Rai and Inderjit Rai have been bound over to keep the peace for a year. They are to furnish each of them a reliable surety for Rs. 100 and to execute a personal bond in the same amount for this purpose. They were bound over by a Magistrate of the first class of Azamgarh. They do not appear to have gone to the District Magistrate and asked him to cancel this bond, as they might have done under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. When a person bound over to keep the peace does not adopt this procedure, I always have considerable doubt as to his general reputation in the district, and it is open to the applicants at any time hereafter to satisfy the District Magistrate that there is no necessity any longer for this bond being kept in existence. They have come to this Court with the contention (1) that the evidence on the record does not justify an order under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, (2) that if they had committed a substantive offence as alleged by some of the witnesses for the prosecution, the proper procedure against them would be to proceed against them for the said offences and not to proceed under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Counsel for the applicants took exception to the notice which had been issued to them under section 112 of the Code. Now section 112 has to be read along with section 107. Section 107 lays down that whenever a Magistrate of the first class is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity, or to do any wrongful act which may occasion a breach of the peace, or disturb the public tranquillity, he may require that person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond. As I read this section, there may be cases in which a Magistrate of the first class is merely informed that a person is likely to disturb the public tranquillity without any information being given as to his intent to do wrongful acts. The Magistrate is responsible for the peace of the district. He acts upon this information and he is required to set forth in writing the substance of the information received. In this case we are not told that the Magistrate has received any information of definite acts intended. Apparently from the information he received he was satisfied that the persons concerning whom the information had been given were likely to commit some act which might occasion a breach of the peace. The reason given for this probability was that they were on terms of enmity with each other. Where the Magistrate can go into further particulars, he should certainly go into them. But it may well be that all the information he receives is that there will be a breach of the public peace, and if he considers that information to come from a reliable source, he has jurisdiction to make the order required by section 112. Anyhow in the present case the matter has gone far beyond the stage of the order under section 112. Certain information was given. The order calling upon the applicants to show cause was duly communicated to them. They questioned the reliability of the information. Evidence was offered and recorded at considerable length. Some of it is hearsay evidence. Some of it is evidence of actual acts, not of a peaceful nature, committed in the past. Some of it is words or expressions which, if true, point to the fact that a breach of the peace would be a probable result unless some strong hand was put upon the persons in question. The evidence of the two Chaukidars, Sheoraj Ahir and Chiraghan, was read to me at full length, and I have glanced at the other evidence given in the case. A perusal of that evidence certainly leaves an impression upon my mind that an idea prevailed in Deohatta that a breach of the peace would take place. I have also glanced through the evidence given to rebut the evidence for the prosecution. It is of a very vague description and some of the witnesses in cross-examination had to admit that they very seldom came to Deohatta, and one who said that no quarrel had taken place had also to confess that he had not been in the village for the last two years. It is not said that the terms are too severe. I see no reason for interfering and dismiss the application.

Application dismissed.

Criminal trial—Complainant's story disbelieved in essential details—Conviction based on part of story, propriety of.

DURRELL v. KUMUD KANTA CHAKRABARTY.

Where a party comes into Court with a story which cannot be believed as to its essential details, it is impossible to rely on a part of the story for the purpose of convicting the accused.

Application against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 27th April 1918, affirming that of the 1st class Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 25th March 1918.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The case for the prosecution was that on the evening of the 5th September last the petitioners Chottoo Singh and Phatali Singh came to the house of one Somar and demanded some milk. Somar refused and thereupon the two petitioners, accompanied by the third petitioner Udho Singh, returned about 9 P.M. and assaulted Somar, his son Borham and his daughter Jagia with lathis. It is also alleged that they snatched away a hasuli which Jagia was wearing and then carried off seven buffaloes belonging to Somar to a pound in a distant village. Somar and Borham both had a number of injuries, which are said to have been caused by lathis, and the evidence in regard to the fracture on the left arm of Somar is that it might have been caused either by a lathi or by a fall.

On the side of the petitioners, Chottoo had a scratch on the left shoulder, which might have been caused by a lathi, and which is said to have been in a region which is pronounced to be dangerous by the Medical Officer.

The Deputy Magistrate, who tried the case, disbelieved the whole story as to the visit to Somar's house early in the evening and the subsequent return of the petitioners for the purpose of assaulting Somar. He found that the story told by the defence was true, namely, that the occurrence took place on the 6th September when Chottoo was driving some buffaloes to the pound, which had trespassed into Chottoo's field. He also found that the three petitioners exceeded the right of private defence in assaulting Somar, Borham and Jagia so severely, although they were in the wrong in attempting to rescue the cattle.

The learned Sessions Judge in appeal has written a very unsatisfactory judgment. He does not come to any finding as to which version is true, and he has affirmed the convictions merely because the complainant and his companions were severely beaten.

In my opinion upon the findings of the trial Court, the conviction cannot be sustained. The complainant comes into Court with a story which is disbelieved in its most essential details, and it is impossible to rely merely upon the injuries inflicted upon Somar and his party to say that the petitioners have committed the offence with which they are charged. The learned Deputy Magistrate seems to think that the petitioners must have exceeded the right of private defence, but he does not say upon what evidence he comes to this conclusion. It may well be that if the story as to the attempted rescue is correct, then the resistance offered by the complainant and his party was such that it was necessary to inflict those injuries in order to secure the retention of the cattle. In any event, it is a recognised principle that where a party comes into Court with a story which cannot be believed as to its essential details, it is impossible to rely on a part of the story for the purpose of convicting the accused.

The convictions and sentences will be set aside and the accused will be released. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 122—Unlawful entry upon Railway premises—Offence, essence of.

The essence of the offence under both the clauses of section 122 of the Railways Act is unlawful entry. Mere unlawful entry makes the offender liable to a fine of Rs. 20 but if after the unlawful entry he refuses to leave the Railway, on being requested to do so, his offence becomes aggravated and he renders himself liable to a fine of Rs. 50. [p. 75, col. 1.]

DURELL v. KUMUD KANTA CHAKRABARTY.

If the original entry is lawful, a subsequent refusal to leave on being requested to do so would not make the original entry unlawful or bring it under clause (2) of section 122 of the Railways Act, which is but an aggravated form of the offence under clause (1). [p. 75, col. 2.]

Reference made by the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 30th October 1917, under section 478, Criminal Procedure Code.

FACTS of the case appear from the following extracts from the report of the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 31st October 1917:—"The petitioner is a Pleader of the Courts here. He was prosecuted for trespass under section 447, Indian Penal Code, and section 122, Railways Act, at the instance of Mr. Bagley, Chief Engineer and Agent of the M. B. Railway. The case for the prosecution was that on the afternoon of July 15th, the petitioner had unlawfully entered upon the Railway and persisted to remain there in spite of being asked to leave. The defence was that the petitioner was not a trespasser as he was going to see Mr. Mukherji, the confidential clerk of Mr. Bagley, who had opened a Business School in the Railway premises with the permission of Mr. Bagley, to consult him regarding the admission of a relation of his into the said Business School. The Deputy Magistrate has convicted the petitioner under section 122 of the Railways Act and has sentenced him to pay a fine of 4 annas.* * * *

"In my opinion the conviction is wrong. The petitioner has been convicted under section 122 of the Railways Act, which runs as follows:—

(1) If a person unlawfully enters upon a Railway he shall be punished, etc.

(2) If a person so entering refuses to leave the Railway on being requested to do so by any Railway servant, etc., he shall be punished, etc.

The essence of the offence under both the clauses of this section is unlawful entry. Mere unlawful entrance makes the offender liable to a fine of Rs. 20. The entrance being unlawful, if the offender refuses to leave on being requested to do so, his offence becomes aggravated and he renders himself liable to a fine of Rs. 50. The word "unlawful" has not been defined in the Act. It has its ordinary meaning, which in the present case is entering against the will or without the permission of the owner. There is no finding that the accused had entered unlawfully. The Deputy Magistrate seems to think that though the entry was lawful, it became unlawful when he refused to leave. The use of the word 'so' in clause 2 makes such a conclusion untenable. It is unlike criminal trespass as defined in section 441, Indian Penal Code. There if a person having lawfully entered unlawfully remains with intent to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit an offence, he is guilty of criminal trespass."

Here under the Railways Act criminal intent has no place. The unlawful entry constitutes the basis of the offence under both the clauses. If the entry was lawful, his refusal to leave on being desired to do so would not make his original entry unlawful nor would make him guilty under clause (2), which is but an aggravated form of the offence under clause (1).

Even conceding that the word unlawful means, as the Deputy Magistrate thinks, "remaining on being asked to leave," the facts as disclosed by the evidence adduced do not justify the conviction. It is clear from Mr. Mukherji's evidence that the petitioner was coming to see him about the admission of his nephew in the Business School which Mr. Mukherji had started in the Railway premises with the permission of Mr. Bagley the Agent. So a person going to see Mr. Mukherji on business in connection with his school must have express or implied permission of Mr. Bagley to come upon the Railway. So the petitioner's going there cannot be said to be unlawful. He was, as he alleges, assaulted on the way by one Mr. Bignold. He was complaining of this to Mr. Novis, an Assistant Engineer of the Railway. Mr. Novis brought to his notice that he was a trespasser and showed him the notice board. The petitioner said that he was not a trespasser and was arguing the matter with Mr. Novis, when he, the latter, peremptorily wanted to know whether he would leave or not. The petitioner accordingly went away (vide Novis' deposition). This does not show that he refused to desist from the trespass, if he had committed any. The conviction is, therefore, wrong in law and is further not borne out by the facts admitted by the prosecution. I would, therefore, recommend that the conviction and sentence be set aside.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we think that the Second Additional Sessions Judge is clearly right and that the conviction and sentence on the accused Kumud Kanta Chakrabarty were wrong. Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144 (4)—District Magistrate, power of, to alter order made by Magistrate subordinate to him, extent of.

Clause (4) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates only a change in the nature of the order made, and not a change in the party against whom it is made. A District Magistrate has, therefore, no power under this clause to set aside an order made by a Magistrate against one party and to substitute therefor a similar order against the other party. [p. 77, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Gaya, dated the 11th January 1918, reversing that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Jahanabad, dated the 4th December 1917.

Mr. Jalgovind Prasad Singh, for the Applicant.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

On the 17th November 1917, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jehanabad acting upon a Police report issued notices upon

Aotar Singh and his party, only requiring them "not to put obstruction with regard to the said kasht land in any way; if you have any objection to make you can do so in this Court on 4th December 1917." The boundaries of the land were then given. On the 4th December 1917, Aotar Singh and his party appeared in Court and the learned Subordinate Magistrate in some fifteen lines disposed of his claims to the land as being a mere pretence, and recorded: "I make the notice under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, absolute against the second party."

Aotar Singh being dissatisfied with this decision took it to the District Magistrate under the 4th clause of section 144. The learned Magistrate, after examining the claims of the parties, came to the conclusion that the claim of Aotar Singh's party was not a mere pretence but was the real truth and that Ganpat Singh had no claim to cut the crop which was in dispute. He, therefore, cancelled the order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and substituted an order of his own, forbidding Ganpat Singh's party to cut the crop.

The proceedings of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer were not, in our opinion, ultra vires. As we said in the case of Kaniz Amina v. Emperor (1) if it is clear upon a perusal of the Police papers that the claim of the disturber of the peace is a mere pretence, a breach of the peace may often be avoided by making it clear to him that the Court will not permit the disturbance which he has wantonly created. In such circumstances it is not expedient that the party entitled to peaceful possession be harassed by proceedings under section 145. In that sense the case as dealt with by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is distinguishable from that of Kaniz Amina's case (1), but the subsequent proceedings of the District Magistrate appear to us to be an even greater innovation than that which we set ourselves to prohibit in the case of Kaniz Amina v. Emperor (1). An order has been made establishing the claim of Aotar Singh's party which had been stigmatised by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as a mere pretence, and keeping Ganpat Singh, who had been held to have a genuine claim, out of possession for two months. The learned Government Advocate has not been able to find any case upon this point, and indeed, we imagine, it would be impossible to find any precedent upon which the proceedings of the District Magistrate could be supported. Clearly clause 4 of section 144 contemplates only a change in the nature of the order made, and not a change in the party against whom it is made. The learned Magistrate's views on this point, as expressed in his letter to the Assistant Registrar dated the 22nd February, conveniently ignore the existence of Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We set aside the order of the District Magistrate against Ganpat's party, as being without jurisdiction. We do not think it necessary to interfere with his order setting aside the Sub-Divisional Officer's order against Aotar Singh's party, for the reason that it was clearly within the Magistrate's jurisdiction to set aside that order if he thought that it was unnecessary or unjust. The position will, therefore, be that both orders are set aside.

We note that on the papers coming back to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate he, on the 20th December, issued notices against both parties restraining them from cutting the disputed crops. On the 3rd January, on it being represented to him by both parties that the paddy had been cut and removed, he was of opinion that no action was called for and the notices issued were cancelled. Had they not been cancelled, we should have been obliged to say that the notices issued on the 20th December 1917 were in no degree distinguishable from notices under section 145, clauses (1) and (4), but inasmuch as the Magistrate has taken action cancelling the proceedings on the ground that no further dispute exists, we may say that the proceedings taken on the 20th December by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate have been ended by an order which might have been made under section 145, clause (5), and that it is not necessary for us to re-open that part of the case.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 447, 497, 511—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 199—Criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery—Complaint by husband, whether necessary—Intent and attempt, distinction between.

Where the object of a trespass is to commit an offence, such offence must be possible on the part of the person to be convicted of the trespass. [p. 79, col. 1.]

An intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment is not the same thing as an attempt to commit such offence. It exists before the attempt is begun. A mere intent is not by itself an offence: therefore, where it is used as essential to bring a particular act within the category of criminal offences, and proof has been given that such an act accompanied by such an intent has been committed, the offence is complete, even though the further act intended may not have been committed or even attempted. [p. 79, col. 1.]

Where an offender enters the premises of his neighbour on his way to the private apartments occupied by that neighbour's wife with intent to commit adultery, the offence of criminal trespass is complete long before the stage of an attempt to commit the adultery is reached. [p. 79, col. 2.]

Therefore, the complaint of the husband is not necessary for proceedings in respect of house-trespass to commit adultery. [p. 79, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Damoh.

ORDER.—This case has been reported by the District Magistrate of Damoh. The complainant Sarjoo Pershad is a Malguzar residing in a village in the Damoh District. He is a Kurmi by caste and 25 years old. His wife Ganeshi (P. W. No. 2) is probably younger, though in the record her age is also put down as 25 years. The accused Dhantua is a Lodhi, 20 years old, who was in the service of Sarjoo Pershad as a ploughman when this case occurred.

On the 2nd September 1915 the complainant went out after supper to attend a reading at the house of a neighbour, leaving at home his wife, his brother and sister-in-law. The two latter slept on the ground floor, and Musammatt Ganeshi upstairs. The accused, as an attendant, had his bed in the front verandah. After the household had retired but before Sarjoo Pershad came home, his brother raised an outcry of thief, which brought Sarjoo Pershad home in time to see the accused running away from the house. The turban of the accused was with his bedding in the verandah, and having obtained possession of it Sarjoo Pershad tied some silver ornaments in one corner of it, reported the case to the Police as one of lurking house trespass with intent to commit theft, and after the Police had refused to take cognizance, filed a complaint to the same effect before a Magistrate. The only witnesses examined for the prosecution were Sarjoo Pershad and Musimmat Ganeshi. The former said that attracted by the cries at his house he hurried there and saw the accused running away, and that he subsequently found the turban of the accused with the ornaments tied in it. Musimmat Ganeshi said that while she slept upstairs she was awakened by a call from her brother-in-law that there was some one in the house, but saw no one herself. She asserted that she had no illicit intimacy with the accused and had not invited him to her room.

The defence of the accused was that he had carried on an intrigue with Ganeshi for two years—that on the night in question he slept as usual on his master's premises in the front verandah downstairs—that after Sarjoo Pershad went out and the household retired to rest, he joined Ganeshi in response to her invitation—that he was detected in the act of sexual intercourse with her by Sarjoo Pershad's brother and sister-in-law, who raised an outcry in consequence of which he ran away—that his turban and other things were at his sleeping place, and the turban was used to bolster up a false charge of theft against him.

The complainant made no attempt to support his story of the turban and ornaments by calling his brother and sister-in-law or any of the persons who, according to his testimony, had assembled at the house before he found the bundle, and the Magistrate held that story to be false and the version given by the accused to be true. The accused pleaded guilty to a charge of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery, an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the Magistrate convicted him under section 451, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one week and to pay a fine of one rupee or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for another week. This was an absurd sentence, and the learned District Magistrate has properly brought the case to the notice of this Court, with the remark that either the Magistrate should have refused to convict the accused at all for want of a complaint of adultery from Ganeshi's husband, or he should have inflicted a heavier sentence.

First as to the legality of the conviction. Section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, enacts that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under section 497 or 498 of the Indian Penal Code except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or, in his absence, by some person who had charge of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed. Accordingly it has been held that a complaint of rape made by the husband of the woman concerned does not give jurisdiction to try a charge of adultery: Empress of India v. Kallu (1), Chemon Garo v. Emperor (2), Bangaru Asari v. Emperor (3). In Emperor v. Khushal Singh (4) at page 106* I wrote: "A husband who brings a charge under section 363, Indian Penal Code, in order to commit which offence, force or deceit is necessary, does not thereby sanction the imputation upon the conduct of his wife which necessarily attaches to a charge under section 498, Indian Penal Code."

It is thus clear that the accused Dhantua could not be tried and convicted for adultery on the complaint made by Sarjoo Pershad in the present case. It is also unquestionable that his trespass inside the house of Sarjoo Pershad is only a criminal offence if it was committed with any of the intents specified in section 441 of the Indian Penal Code. The intent in the present case was adultery and nothing else. The husband has elected not to empower the Magistrate to punish the accused for adultery, and I think it stands to reason that a charge of an attempt to commit adultery would also be governed by section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. Therefore, the question whether the Magistrate could use an uncomplained of adultery or attempted adultery as an essential of the offence of criminal trespass is one that is not altogether free from difficulty. I think, however, that it is correct to say that the complaint of the husband is not necessary for proceedings in respect of house-trespass to commit adultery. It must be remembered that an intent to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment is not the same thing as an attempt to commit such offence. It exists before the attempt is begun. A mere intent is not by itself an offence: therefore where it is used as essential to bring a particular act within the category of criminal offences and proof has been given that such an act accompanied by such an intent has been committed the offence is complete, even though the further act intended may not have been committed or even attempted. No doubt, where the object of a trespass is to commit an offence, such offence must be possible on the part of the person to be convicted of the trespass. In Brij Basi v. Queen-Empress (5) it was held that if the prospective offence is adultery, it must be shown that there was no consent or connivance on the part of the husband of the woman in question; and in Crown v. Sheikh Mungli (6), where the trespass was for adultery on the invitation of the wife, it was held that she could not be legally convicted of abetment of the trespass because she was legally incompetent to abet the adultery as an offence. But in this same case it was rightly held that the trespass and adultery were distinct offences separately punishable; and though, under earlier Codes of Criminal Procedure, a different view at one time prevailed where the intent of the trespass was theft, e. g., Queen v. Tonaokoch (7), it is now accepted that trespass with intent to commit theft, and a theft committed in pursuance of the intent, are distinct offences: Queen-Empress v. Sakharam Bhau (8) and Queen-Empress

v. Zor Singh (9). It is clear that where an offender enters the premises of his neighbour on his way to the private apartments occupied by that neighbour's wife with intent to commit adultery, the offence of criminal trespass is complete long before the stage of an attempt to commit the adultery is reached. It would strain the law considerably to hold that a mere entry by an invited lover into a private part of the house occupied by an adulterously inclined wife would amount to an attempt to commit adultery; but allowing that to be the case, it could not under any circumstances be claimed that the entry through the front gate or into an outer verandah in prosecution of an adulterous intrigue, though a completed trespass, is punishable under sections 511 and 497, Indian Penal Code.

In a case reported as High Court Proceedings, 1st June 1868, No. 795A (10) it was held that the complaint of the husband is not necessary for proceedings in respect of the offence of house-trespass to commit adultery. In another case, reported as High Court Proceedings, 15th November 1869 (11), it was held that the Magistrate had rightly refused, in the absence of a complaint by the husband, to convict for a trespass found to have been committed for the purpose of adultery only. In Crown v. Subz Ali (12) two out of three Judges ruled that a charge of house-trespass with intent to commit adultery can be entertained without a complaint by the husband or the person having the care of the woman. In a case reported as High Court Proceedings, 26th February 1875 (13), where a prisoner had been convicted of house-breaking, his object being to have sexual intercourse with the complainant's wife, it was held that the conviction was valid.

For the above reasons I hold that the conviction of the accused in this case was valid, even though the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused for the prospective offence with intent to commit which he admittedly entered the bed room of the complainant.

I agree with the learned District Magistrate that the sentence was inadequate. It was open to the Magistrate, as soon as he found that the offence alleged by the complainant, namely, lurking house-trespass with intent to commit theft was not proved, to have discharged the accused; and that would have been the most proper course to follow, as was pointed out in High Court Proceedings, 15th November 1869 (11). But the law allowed the Magistrate to frame a charge based on the admissions of the accused, and his procedure to that end must be accepted as valid. I have considered whether I should interfere with the sentence. In the Madras case last referred to the High Court remarked: "the Magistrate was right under the circumstances in refusing to convict on a charge which the husband refused to make."

In the Punjab case Plowden, J., wrote: "In my opinion a purely nominal sentence ought to be passed when, as in this case, the only intent is to commit adultery, and the husband is not prosecuting for adultery." With due respect I am not able to agree with this view wholly, and the dissentient view of Lindsay, J., on this point, who observed that in such cases "it is not only the interests and feelings of the injured husband that are involved but the welfare of the community at large", seem to me to be a more correct appreciation of the matter. Nevertheless the circumstances (1) that the husband made a wilfully false charge of theft in consequence of which the accused might have been discharged; (2) that, except for the admission of the accused, there is unreliable evidence of any trespass whatever, his presence in the outer part of the premises being lawful; and (3) that he is still liable to prosecution for adultery, have decided me not to interfere. I, therefore, return the papers and direct that execution of the sentence, if stayed, be completed.

Interference refused.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Monghyr, dated the 20th July 1917, rejecting an application for a reference to the High Court of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jamui, dated the 30th June 1917.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Muhammad Fakhruddin (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT—The facts found in this case are that the petitioner Soukhi Chand went with a carter to a railway godown, that the carter removed a bag from the godown and that Soukhi Chand accompanied the bag to his house and there took delivery of it. The bag was not goods that had been consigned to Soukhi Chand but consisted of pilferings from a number of bags, consigned to others. On these facts Soukhi Chand and the cartman have been convicted under section 411. The cartman is not before us. Soukhi Chand applies that this conviction and sentence be revised on the ground, firstly, that the manner in which the bag was made up was a pure surmise on the part of the Court below and, secondly, that the property, not having been identified as stolen from a particular person, cannot be held in law to be stolen property. On these two points we can see no reason for interfering with the conviction. The property was in the possession of the railway as bailees until it left the godown. The actually taking it out of the godown was theft, and it is clear that Soukhi Chand and the cartman were jointly guilty of theft. The learned Vakil suggests that this was not a case made against him in the Court below and that he is, therefore, entitled to a retrial. We are of opinion that it is for the Courts below to find the facts and if they convict under a wrong section in a case in which no charge is framed, it is open to the High Court, if necessary, to revise the section under which the conviction has been recorded without any further proceedings. We, therefore, alter the conviction of Soukhi Chand to a conviction under section 380 and direct that the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment be maintained. The petitioner will, therefore, surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of the sentence.

Conviction altered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Habitually bringing false cases in Civil Courts—Evidence of general reputation, admissibility of.

Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to a person who has the reputation of habitually bringing false claims in Civil Courts. Such a person may be punishable under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, but he does not by so doing commit the offence either, if he succeeds, of extortion or, if he fails, of attempting to commit extortion.

Ganeshi v. Empress, 25 P. R. 1884 Cr., followed.

In proceedings against such a person, although evidence of general reputation is admissible, it cannot be allowed to override the findings arrived at by the Civil Courts after trial.

Revision of the order of the District Magistrate in Criminal Appeal No. 29 of 1917 decided on 17th July 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order passed under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There were various charges against the applicant, but the trying Magistrate with extreme fairness has disbelieved most of these allegations. His finding may be summed up in his own language: "The man appears to be a gambler in civil litigation, he has the reputation in his village of being a perjurer, a forger and is notorious for instituting suits against poor illiterate people on false claims."

There is some reference to a criminal case but sufficient details have not been brought out. There is a reference to an application to the Police by P. W. No. 5 which, however, is explained in the deposition of P. W. No. 8, from which it appears that the accused was merely the writer of the application at the instance of other people. The curious feature of the case is that the accused has been successful in most of his claims, and these claims are held to be false claims upon the opinion of villagers. In such proceedings, although evidence of general reputation is admissible, it cannot be allowed to override the findings arrived at by Civil Courts after a trial. As pointed out in Ganeshi v. Empress (1), section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to an accused person who has the reputation of habitually bringing false claims in Civil Courts. Such a person may be punishable under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, but he does not by so doing commit the offence either, if he succeeds, of extortion or, if he fails, of attempting to commit extortion.

Although the period for which the applicant has been bound over has expired, he is entitled to have the order set aside and I accordingly set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, dated the 15th May 1917, and direct the bond for good behaviour to be cancelled.

Order set aside.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 45 OF 1918.

May 27, 1918.

Present: - Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Thornhill.RAM BHAGWAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED —APPELLANTS*versus*

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 298—Trial by Jury—Judge's charge—Duty of Judge—Misdirection and non-direction—Document admitted without objection—Execution, proof of, whether necessary—Failure to draw attention of Jury to presumption arising under Statute—High Court, power of, to weigh evidence after exclusion of inadmissible matter.

Where a document, which is not per se inadmissible, is admitted by the Court in a criminal trial without formal proof of execution, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial to call for formal proof omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards, in appeal, impeach the verdict of the Jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof. [p. 83, col. 2; p. 90, col. 2.]

A parcha slip granted in the course of survey proceedings is not a public document and is not in any way recognised by law. It is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence to prove title or possession. In a criminal trial, however, the Judge is competent to draw the attention of the Jury to the fact that the parcha slip was granted to a particular person as a fact relevant to the question of possession. [p. 83, col. 2.]

The omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the provisions of section 193-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the presumption arising therefrom does not constitute a serious error on the part of the Judge, where the point has been thoroughly discussed by Counsel and the Jury are under no misconception regarding it. [p. 84, col. 1; p. 91, col. 1.]

Where there is no evidence of a particular matter, it would be an error on the part of the Judge to lay down the law to the Jury on that matter, which is not a matter legally and properly before the Jury. [p. 86, col. 2.]

The ability of the Counsel engaged in the defence does not relieve the Judge of his task, which the law imposes upon him, of fully and fairly charging the Jury. At the same time it is reasonable that the Judge should take into account the elaboration and the skill of Counsel. [p. 89, col. 1.]

Per Thornhill, J.—If in a criminal trial evidence has been admitted which should have been rejected, it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict. [p. 91, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge of Patna, dated the 28th February 1918.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, P. C. Manuk and Indu Bhusan Biswas, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The appellants have been convicted under sections 148, 326 and 149, Indian Penal Code, for committing a riot with deadly weapons in Mauza Khairatoli, in prosecution of the common object of which, namely, to assault the prosecutor Jauhar Ali and to forcibly carry away his paddy, severe injuries were caused to Jauhar Ali and one Makdum Bux, who came to his assistance, was killed on the field in dispute, which is said to be plot No. 35 and to be situated to the west of the village and to measure 16 cottahs.

The evidence is that Jauhar Ali, having cut part of the paddy on this plot on Thursday, the 8th November last, and on the morning of the 9th November and stored the same in the house of Makdum Bux, returned to the field about 3 p. m. of that day with four labourers; that after cutting had been resumed the appellants, with a mob numbering 50 or 60 headed by one Indra Dewan and Ram Bhagwan and armed with spears, swords and lathis, came and objected to the cutting on the ground that Indra Dewan had purchased the plot; that they attacked the prosecutor's men and that after killing Makdum Bux out and carried away the remainder of the paddy.

A telegram announcing the riot reached the Sub-Inspector of Phulwari Thana at 11 p. m.

Meanwhile in consequence of information given by Rameswar, one of the Chaukidars of the village, at 6.30 p. m. at the Phulwari Police Station, Sub-Inspector Ali Hosain had deputed Sub-Inspector Kuldip Narain Singh and some constables to proceed to the spot. This Sub-Inspector arrived at the place at 10 p. m. and at 11.45 p. m. recorded the information given by Jauhar Ali.

Sub-Inspector Ali Hosain took up the investigation on the following day with the result that Indra Dewan, his Gomastha Ram Bhagwan and Rafiq, from whose father Jauhar claims to have bought plot No. 35, and 13 others were sent up for trial.

In the Sessions Court the accused, who were defended by Mr. Hasan Imam, declined to give any explanation for the injuries to Jauhar Ali and Makdum Bux, but suggestions were made in cross-examination that the occurrence took place on plot No. 111, which is to the north of the village and in respect of which there is a dispute between Jauhar and Salim on the one side as owners and Indra Dewan on the other who claims as Ijaradar. In support of this reliance was placed on the information given by Rameswar Chaukidar at 6.30 P. M. and by Dalsinger Chaukidar at 7 P. M. The case of the prosecution was that these informations were lodged after the riot in order to make a case for the defence.

The Jury appear to have accepted the case put forward by the prosecution and while acquitting Indra Dewan and seven others, found the appellants before us guilty.

The present appeal is preferred by the appellants on the ground of improper admission of evidence and non-direction and misdirection on the part of the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury.

The complaint on the ground of improper admission of evidence relates to a sale-deed alleged to have been executed on the 27th March 1906 by Amanat Ali, the father of the accused Rafiq, in favour of Jauhar Ali's son Sadrul Huq in respect of plots Nos. 35 and 40. It does not appear that the document was formally proved. It is alleged to have been tendered by the prosecution on the 18th of February in the Sessions Court and marked by the presiding Judge on the 19th. It was referred to by the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury on the 28th of February, on the footing that there was no objection to its admission.

It is contended by Mr. Hasan Imam, who appears for all the appellants before us except Ram Bhagwan, that the document was marked by the Court without his knowledge and consent and that though present at the time of the delivery of the charge to the Jury, he did not notice that the learned Judge was referring to this document. The list of the exhibits contains an entry to the effect that the document was admitted without objection, and it is asserted by the learned Government Advocate who appears on behalf of the Crown that formal proof was waived by the defence. In my opinion it was the duty of the defence to discover between the 18th and the 28th February that the Court had admitted this document and marked it as an exhibit although it had not been formally proved, and the omission to make any objection appears to me to support the allegation that the defence did not consider it worthwhile to demand legal proof. It is unfortunate that during the delivery of the charge, while the Judge was referring to this document for the purpose of drawing an inference as to the possession of Jauhar Ali, no one on behalf of the defence considered it necessary to make any protest. In my opinion the circumstances under which the document was admitted by the Court establish that the accused had sufficient opportunity at the trial to call for formal proof and that having omitted to raise any objection then it is not open to them now, the document not being per se inadmissible, to impeach the verdict of the Jury on the ground of any formal defect.

The second error of law complained of is that as the Record of Rights shows the name of Amanat as the tenant of the plots Nos. 35 and 40, the Sessions Judge should have drawn the Jury's special attention to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which require that the Court shall presume the entry to be correct until the contrary is shown.

It appears that a parcha slip was given to Jauhar Ali showing an entry in his favour, but for some reason or other the finally published Record of Rights was in Amanat's favour. The learned Judge drew the attention of the Jury to the parcha slip and in regard to the Record of Rights the only observation he made was "that no evidence of possession of Rafiq had been given except the finally published record". Now the parcha slip was clearly inadmissible in evidence in proof of the title and possession of Jauhar Ali. It is not a public document and is not in any way recognised by law, but what the learned Sessions Judge appears to have done was to draw the attention of the Jury to the fact that the parcha slip was granted to Jauhar Ali. This he had every right to do. It was a fact relevant to the question of possession. It does not seem that the slip was admitted by the learned Judge as a document of title.

As regards the finally published record, namely, the khatian, it is true that the learned Sessions Judge did not in terms tell the Jury of the presumption raised by the law, but we have been told by the learned Government Advocate that the law was in fact fully explained to the Jury and that the Jury were under no misconception on this point. The case of Brij Behari Singh v. Sheo Sankar Jha (1) was fully discussed by the prosecution in the course of the trial. The judgment of the High Court in that case in clear terms lays down the proposition that a Record of Rights, though not creating or extinguishing any title, is good evidence of possession, which requires to be rebutted and I observe from the cross-examination of Jauhar Ali by Mr. Hasan Imam that Jauhar Ali understood that legal position in this sense. Having regard to the constitution of the Jury, which consisted of the Principal of the Law College at Patna, a non-practising Vakil and three other educated gentlemen, I am satisfied that the omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the provisions of section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not in this case constitute a serious error on the part of the Judge.

The third error as regards the documentary evidence is said to lie in the Judge's not drawing the attention of the Jury to Exhibit 11, which was a decree obtained by Musa, the superior landlord, against Amanat for rent.

It is urged that the Judge should have also drawn attention to the fact that Jauhar had produced no rent receipts, although he had said in his evidence that he had receipts at home. It is also urged that the Judge was wrong in telling the Jury that there was no evidence of Rafiq's possession except the Record of Rights.

Now with regard to Exhibit 11, the document was before the Jury and they were at liberty to draw any inference they liked from it. Jauhar Ali had in his cross-examination said that the decree was a collusive decree between Musa and Amanat and that he had been throughout in possession for 11 years and had been paying rent to Musa. The Jury were aware also that Jauhar Ali had produced no documentary evidence to support his possession except Exhibit 9, the deed of sale. Having regard to the fact that the case was in the hands of so able an Advocate as Mr. Hasan Imam, it does not seem to me that the omissions complained of were of prime importance.

As to the omission to tell the Jury that Rameshwar Chaukidar had in his evidence stated that Amanat Ali's field had come into Rafiq's possession, it appears that Rameshwar Chaukidar's information was based upon hearsay and the learned Judge was right in not treating it as a piece of evidence in favour of the defence.

With regard to the occurrence itself various grounds of non-direction and misdirection have been taken, with which I will now proceed to deal.

Grounds Nos. 8, 13 and 14 relate to the cutting of the paddy which is alleged to have been standing on plot No. 35 on the day of occurrence. The case for the defence as suggested in the cross-examination is that there was no paddy on plot No. 35 and that there was paddy on plot No. 111 and that the occurrence took place on an attempt by Jauhar Ali to cut the latter.

It is urged that the learned Judge should have brought to the attention of the Jury the evidence of Rameshwar Chaukidar, prosecution witness No. 19, to the effect that the paddy of plot No. 35 was cut 4 or 5 days previously. In my opinion the omission was not material. Rameshwar was a thoroughly unreliable witness. He was declared hostile by the prosecution and his evidence in regard to the information laid before the Police was discussed by the Sessions Judge at page 15 of his charge in the paper book.

The learned Sessions Judge also put before the Jury the evidence of prosecution witness No. 21, and discussed the question whether from the appearance of the field it was possible to state with any degree of certainty whether the crop was cut within 2, 3 or 4 days, and he left them to draw their own conclusions.

A similar objection is taken in regard to the Judge's omission to tell the Jury that no paddy was found on the way by which the rioters were alleged to have returned. This is also a minor matter.

RAM BHAGWAN V. EMPEROR.

It is next urged that the Judge should not have told the Jury that the occurrence took place at 4.30 P. M. It seems that what the Judge did tell the Jury was that according to the prosecution story the riot took place at 4.30 P. M. (see page 12 of the charge). He also refers to the fact that in the first information the riot is entered by the Police as having taken place at 4.30 P. M. The learned Judge told the Jury that Janhar Ali and his labourers arrived at 3 P. M. and that according to Janhar Ali the assault took place at 4.30 P. M. He asked the Jury to consider whether or not the cutting of the paddy took place during the interval. In my opinion there was no non-direction or mis-direction in regard to this point.

Grounds Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 18, 25 and 26 relate to the place of occurrence.

It is contended by Mr. Hasan Imam that the Sub-Inspector Kuldip Narain Singh has been guilty of tampering with the diaries and that when he set out from Phulwari at 7 P. M. on the 9th November, he made an entry in his diary to the effect that the occurrence had taken place in a field on the north side of Khairatoli, but that at 11.45 after recording Janhar Ali's statement he made an interpolation by adding the words "in Gahua Khanda." The Sub-Inspector states that what the Chankidar told him was that the place of occurrence was on the north side of Khairatoli in Gahua Khanda. As plot No. 111 is not and plot No. 35 is in Gahua Khanda the interpolation, if it was an interpolation, would to some extent favour the prosecution. In this connection it is not quite clear what the defence is. Is it suggested that the Sub-Inspector went on that night to plot No. 111, and that it was there that he found Janhar Ali and Makdum Bux's corpse and that the Sub-Inspector caused a case to be manufactured on plot No. 35 after removing Janhar Ali and the corpse of Makdum Bux to that plot? Or is it suggested that the Sub-Inspector did not go to plot No. 111 at all but that a false case had been manufactured before the Sub-Inspector arrived and that he was taken to plot No. 35 immediately upon his arrival? In my opinion, the whole evidence was before the Jury and the learned Judge seems to have discussed it in connection with the two informations given by the two Chaukidars and in connection with the suggestion that the riot took place on plot No. 111. The omission to draw the Jury's special attention to the evidence given by Kuldip Narain with regard to the entry in his diary does not appear to me to be serious. The same may be said with regard to the point that the Jury's attention was not called to the fact that in the map prepared for the purpose of this case no mention is made of the fact that blood was found on plot No. 35. The evidence in the case is that there were copious marks of blood on this plot and the condition of the ground was such as to be consistent with the theory put forward by the prosecution. The omission of any entry in the map as to the place where blood was found does not seem to me to be very material.

Then as regards the fact that there was paddy on plot No. 111, it was unnecessary to tell the Jury this, but it is contended that the learned Judge should have asked the Jury to consider why the paddy of plot No. 35 should have been stored in Mukdum Bux's house. The explanation given by Janhar Ali was that this was done because Janhar Ali's house had fallen down. In my opinion it was not necessary to draw the Jury's special attention to this explanation, or to the fact that only 16 bundles were found in Mukdum's house. The explanation may have been false, but it was open to the Jury to believe it or not as they liked.

Then it is contended that the learned Judge in drawing attention to the fact that Mukdum Bux though dead was found lying on a khatia with a pillow under his head should have suggested the inference that the whole case for the prosecution was false.

It is suggested that the placing of a pillow under the head of a dead man is a clear sign of a concocted case. Attention was drawn to this point in cross-examination and the Jury were in full possession of the facts. The evidence is that two pillows were brought, one for Janhar Ali and the other for Makdum Bux, and the person who brought the pillow for Makdum says that if he had known that Makdum was dead he would not have brought it. In my opinion the learned Judge was not guilty of any error in leaving the evidence to the Jury and in omitting to suggest the inference that the occurrence took place on plot No. 111. I find he did make mention of the circumstance about the pillow and there was sufficient compliance with the law in leaving the Jury to draw their own conclusion in these circumstances.

Ground No. 12, which is to the effect that there was an omission in not telling the Jury that the foot-prints on plot No. 35 might have been caused by the reapers, ground No. 15, which relates to an incident connected with a man called Surju Saran, who told the Police during the enquiry that he was inspecting plot No. 111, because that was the place of occurrence, and ground No. 26, which relates to the delay of the Police in inspecting the place of occurrence, have not been pressed before us.

In my opinion, therefore, so far as the above grounds are concerned, the learned Judge has not been guilty of any serious error either of non-direction or misdirection.

But it has been very strongly urged by Mr. Hasan Imam that the learned Judge should have told the Jury in clear terms what the consequences would be of a finding that the occurrence took place not upon plot No. 35, but upon plot No. 111. It is suggested that the Jury may have thought that although the occurrence took place on plot No. 111, still as one man had been killed and another had been severely injured it was immaterial where the occurrence took place. It is contended that the right of private defence would have arisen in regard to plot No. 111, assuming that Indra Dewan was in possession, and therefore the charge that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly could not have been supported.

Now the reply to this is that the case for the prosecution was clear and simple. It was that the occurrence took place on plot No. 35, that Janhar Ali was in possession and that the appellants in trying to take forcible possession of that plot committed the various offences with which they were charged. The accused at no stage of the case raised the explicit defence that a fight took place on plot No. 111, or that there was a right of private defence. The case for the prosecution was that if the Jury refused to believe that the occurrence took place on plot No. 35, then the accused were entitled to an acquittal. There was no alternative case that even if the occurrence was found to have taken place on plot No. 111, the accused would be guilty of one or other of the offences charged. In this connection it is only necessary to draw attention to the case of Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das (2), where their Lordships held that where there was no evidence of a particular matter, it would be an error on the part of the Judge to lay down the law to the Jury on that matter, which was not a matter legally and properly before the Jury, and their Lordships cited with approval the following observations in Jamsheer Sirdar's case (3): "No accused person can at the same time deny committing an act and justify it. The law does not admit of justification by putting forward hypothetical cases. It must be by proof of actual facts." Therefore in this case if there was no direct and legal evidence of the occurrence having taken place on plot No. 111, and in my opinion there was not, the learned Judge was perfectly right in omitting to discuss the consequences of the occurrence having taken place in connection with that plot. In my opinion the Jury were fully aware of the fact that if they found that the occurrence took place in the latter plot, then the accused would be entitled to an acquittal. It becomes immaterial, therefore, to consider Mr. Hasan Imam's further objection that the learned Judge should have discussed in greater detail the contents of Exhibit D, which was a plaint lodged by one Chota Jabbar in respect of plot No. 111 against one Fasiuddin and others. This document was admissible for the purpose of showing that there was a dispute with regard to plot No. 111, but as a matter of fact the learned Sessions Judge has clearly drawn the attention of the Jury to the unsatisfactory evidence given by Janhar Ali in connection with this plot. In some places Janhar Ali has claimed the plot and in others he has not, and the learned Judge has been guilty of no error in respect of this part of the case. The Jury were in full possession of the unsatisfactory nature of Janhar Ali's testimony with regard to his claims in this matter.

It remains to consider grounds Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23, which relate to the alibi set up on behalf of Indra Dewan and Ram Bhagwan. A Vakil named Bimala Charan Sinha deposed that on the 10th November 1917, he appeared for Indra Dewan in a civil suit before the fourth Munsif of Bankipur, that on the previous day both Indra Dewan and Ram Bhagwan came to him at 5 or 5-15 P. M. to consult him about the case, and remained with him till 6-30 P. M. and that he made a note to that effect in his diary of the 9th. Indra Dewan also furnished evidence tending to show that he was in his class at the Bihar National College up to 2-30 P. M. The Jury believed this evidence and acquitted him.

Ram Bhagwan called the Head Comparing Clerk of the Patna District Judge's Court to prove that he must have been present at the Civil Court from 2 to 2-30 and then again at 3-30 P. M. for the purpose of receiving from the Court the copies of two documents for which he had made applications on the 1st November. The evidence in this case showed that both Indra Dewan and Ram Bhagwan were in the habit of riding bicycles, and in his charge the learned Sessions Judge told the Jury after they had themselves visited the scene of occurrence and were able to judge the distance that it was possible to walk from Bankipur to the place of occurrence in 40 minutes. The Jury disbelieved the evidence given on behalf of Ram Bhagwan and found him guilty.

Now the first point that has been made by Mr. Manuk is that the learned Judge should not have treated the evidence of Jung Bahadur Singh, the Head Comparing Clerk, so lightly and he should have discussed it in greater detail and told the Jury that there was no reason for disbelieving this witness. The matter turned upon the two applications for copy filed on the 1st November. It is alleged that a counterfoil is usually given to the applicant with a direction to call on a certain day and that in this case Ram Bhagwan presented his counterfoil to the Head Comparing Clerk on the 9th November between 2 and 2-30 P. M. It is said that the copies were ready on the 7th and 8th and that Ram Bhagwan came himself between 2 and 2-30 and gave a receipt upon the counterfoil for the copies, which he took away with him between 3-30 and 4-30 P. M. In cross-examination the Head Comparing Clerk admitted that if an applicant presented his counterfoil on the 9th July receipted under that date and then went home and did not return till the 20th November and then demanded his copies, the date "9th November" would still remain upon the receipt and also in the endorsement at the back of the copies, which contains a column showing the date on which the copy is delivered to the applicant. The Head Comparing Clerk adds, however, that such a case has never occurred, and Mr. Manuk's complaint is that this qualification should have been specially brought to the notice of the Jury. The learned Judge was evidently under the impression that the whole of the evidence of the witness was inconclusive and that it did not establish definitely and beyond doubt that Ram Bhagwan was actually present at the Civil Court up to 3-30 P. M. I share in that opinion, and I think that having regard to the fact that the witness was examined on the 26th of February and the argument of Counsel was heard on the 28th of February, the somewhat meagre discussion of the witness' evidence did not in the circumstance amount to a misdirection or lead to a miscarriage of justice. Moreover, accepting every word of the Head Comparing Clerk's evidence, it would still be open to Ram Bhagwan to have been at the place of occurrence at 4-30 P. M. on the day in question. It was open to the Jury to believe the witnesses who deposed in favour of Indra Dewan and disbelieve those who deposed in favour of Ram Bhagwan. Mr. Manuk has characterised the finding of the Jury in this respect as perverse. When there was evidence which they could have believed as to the guilt of Ram Bhagwan and when it was open to them to disbelieve the evidence offered by the accused in his defence, I cannot see that the charge of perversity can be supported.

Then our attention has been drawn to a passage in the learned Sessions Judge's charge in which he refers to the circumstance that Bimola Charan Sinha had produced documents in support of his story in Court. The charge as it stands after correction on the 1st March states that the witness had produced documents, but Mr. Manuk says that what the learned Judge told the Jury was that the witness had produced no documents and that the Judge had made this a point of attack against the credibility of the witness. I think we must take the charge as it stands and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we must hold that the Judge told the Jury that there were documents to support the alibi, probably referring to the records produced in the Civil Court on the 10th November.

Mr. Manuk then draws attention to the fact that in the course of his address the Public Prosecutor drew attention to the fact that the Vakil had not produced his personal diary of the 9th in which he said he had entered the hour of Ram Bhagwan's visit. Mr. Manuk strongly characterises the conduct of the prosecution as unfair in not asking the witness immediately to go to his house and to bring the book, and he submits that no conclusion adverse to the defence should be drawn from the non-production of this piece of documentary evidence. In my opinion it was open to the prosecution to make the suggestion that they did, and the defence could even at that late stage have asked the permission of the Court to adduce the evidence in question. The Jury had the evidence of the witnesses before them and they were competent to draw what inferences they liked upon the facts. I do not think it was the duty of the prosecution to stop the trial in order to give the witness an opportunity of producing the diary.

Mr. Manuk next criticizes the charge on the ground that the learned Judge should have brought to the notice of the Jury the fact that in connection with the Salarpur murder case Janhar Ali had implicated Ram Bhagwan.

Now the history of that case is this. A Muhammadan named Naziruddin disappeared about a month before the riot at Khairatoli. He was not in any way connected either with Khairatoli, or with Janhar Ali, but four or five days after his disappearance his father Wajid lodged an information at the Bankipur Police Station saying that Bikam Pargash (father of Ram Bhagwan) and Shankar had probably murdered him. While the Police investigation was going on he met Janhar Ali, who was a stranger to him, in a bread shop in the Civil Court compound at Bankipur and Janhar Ali on hearing him talk about the disappearance of his son said that he had seen Naziruddin being thrown into a canal by some Hindus. It does not appear from the evidence of Abdul Wajid that in this bread shop Janhar Ali named Ram Bhagwan as one of the murderers, but Abdul Wajid states that he went off at once to the Police Station and told the Sub-Inspector what Janhar Ali had told him. Mr. Manuk states that the learned Judge should have told the Jury that Janhar Ali had named Ram Bhagwan in the baker's shop. This does not appear to be the case from Abdul Wajid's evidence, nor does it appear from the evidence of the Sub-Inspector Kuldip Narain, who was in charge of the case. At page 39 of his deposition in this trial Janhar Ali says that Pragash and others were the accused. At page 49 he says that he does not think that Ram Bhagwan's name was mentioned in the baker's shop and that it was Abdul Wajid who gave the name of Pragash. At page 47, however, he states that he recognised Pragash and Ram Bhagwan among the murderers, and Mr. Manuk insists that it was the duty of the learned Judge to bring this statement prominently to the notice of the Jury.

The learned Government Advocate on the other hand suggests that this inclusion of Ram Bhagwan's name was unintentional, that Janhar Ali was giving his evidence in great pain while lying on a charpoy in Court and that he did not in fact implicate Ram Bhagwan at any previous stage of the investigation in the Salarpur murder case.

It is admitted that the Police found no evidence against any one in that case and refused to prosecute. The learned Judge appears to have discussed Janhar Ali's evidence fully (see charge at page 14). At page 18 he asks the Jury to treat the evidence with caution. At page 15 he draws attention to the hostility between the parties as evidenced by the Salarpur murder case, and the only omission of which he can be found guilty is his failure, while telling the Jury that there was hostility with Pragash, also to add that there was hostility with Ram Bhagwan, the son of Pragash. In my opinion the omission to inform the Jury that in one solitary passage in his testimony Jaubar Ali had added the name of Ram Bhagwan does not seem to me to have been an omission of such prime importance as to vitiate the verdict.

This disposes of all the points so ably and forcibly argued before us by Mr. Hasan Imam and by Mr. Manuk.

It is true that the ability of Counsel engaged in the defence does not relieve the Judge of the task which the law imposes upon him of fully and fairly charging the Jury. At the same time it is reasonable that the Judge should take into account the elaboration and the skill of Counsel. On this point a number of authorities have been cited to us in the course of the argument, but it is not necessary to discuss them all. I desire, however, to draw attention to Queen v. Nim Chand Mookerjee (4), in which their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court so far back as 1873 made the following observations:—

"What a Judge says to a Jury on the law is an absolute and binding direction upon them. What he addresses to them upon the facts are only such observations as he thinks it necessary and proper to make in assisting them to arrive at a conclusion upon the evidence, which it is wholly in their province to deal with as they think proper, and the observations which a Judge would make to a Jury upon the facts would be determined by circumstances which must vary, one may almost say, in every case and in every tribunal in the country. They would vary in a very great degree according to the intelligence of the Jury whom the Judge was addressing; they would also vary very much, according as the case had or had not been fully discussed both for and against the prisoners by Counsel prior to his addressing them. Had there been no discussion of a case by Counsel, it would undoubtedly be necessary for the Judge to point out many things which, after the case had been fully discussed on both sides, both for the Crown and for the prisoner, might well seem to him unnecessary. And on the other hand a Judge has very often to caution a Jury against accepting without very careful consideration some of the suggestions that are made to them. When we are called upon to say whether or not the Judge has done his duty in addressing the Jury on the facts, we must look to his summing up as a whole, and see that the case has been fairly laid before them."

In the case of Emperor v. Malgouda (5), upon which Counsel in the present case have relied, their Lordships of the Bombay High Court do not disapprove of the above principles, but they make the reservation that the Judge should not omit matters of prime importance merely because they have been discussed by the Advocate.

In my opinion taking the charge as a whole, it is not open to the imputation of partiality to the Crown. It was impossible for the learned Judge not to make allowance for the ability with which the defence was conducted before him and not to leave to the Jury, who were a body of unusually intelligent men, much that he would not have left to them if they had been less educated or less experienced. The omissions of which the learned Judge has been guilty were not omissions of prime importance in the circumstances of this case and to interfere with the verdict on the grounds urged would be to convert a trial with the aid of a Jury into a trial with the aid of assessors. If the institution of trial by Jury is to be maintained at all and is to flourish in this country, the superior Courts must be jealous to see that nothing is done to weaken the Jury's sense of responsibility in matters of fact, and unless there is clear and unmistakable evidence that the Jury were misled by the Judge into a miscarriage, I think we should decline to interfere. The appeal will be dismissed.

THORNHILL, J. - I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother with which I fully agree. It, therefore, appears unnecessary for me to discuss in detail the various grounds of objection set out in the appellants' petition. They are mostly based on non-direction by the learned Sessions Judge. It must be remembered that 25 witnesses were examined for the prosecution and cross-examined at considerable length. It appears to be assumed that the headings of the charge to the Jury made under section 367, Civil Procedure Code, contain a verbatim account of the Judge's summing up, and it would appear further that the present grounds are made out by comparison of the recorded evidence with the headings of charge and where any evidence might be construed in favour of the accused and mention of it is omitted from, or is not fully referred to in, the headings of charge, objection is taken. The remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Channing Arnold v. Emperor (6) would appear most appropriate: "A charge to a Jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions of law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the Jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the Jury's province."

It is clear from the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and from some of the written statements that a good deal of attention of the defence was concentrated upon showing that the riot did not take place in field No. 35, but may have taken place in field No. 111, or elsewhere. In this respect two grounds of objection relating respectively to the admission of a sale-deed and the presumption arising under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act demand special attention. The prosecution case was that field No. 35 was in possession of the complainant Janhar Ali, while on behalf of the accused it was sought to show that Rafiq, son of Amanat Ali, was in possession. The following extracts relating thereto and taken from one of the headings of the charge have been severely attacked:—

"As to the title to and possession of plot No. 35 the prosecution have produced a sale-deed, Exhibit 9, executed by Amanat Ali in favour of Janhar Ali on 27th March 1906. Janhar Ali was granted the area slip and parcha but in the finally published Record of Rights his name did not appear but the name of Amanat Ali is shown."

..... "No evidence of possession of Rafiq has been given, except in the finally published Record of Rights."

The sale-deed, Exhibit 9, above referred to was produced on the 18th of February and handed over to the officers in charge of Exhibits. It was marked on the 19th. No objection was in fact made to its admission in the Sessions Court. But the learned Counsel who appeared for the accused in that Court states that he was unaware it had ever been made an Exhibit and that he certainly intended to object to it. It is a document which Janhar Ali produced when he alleged possession for the last 10 or 12 years. The objection made is that its execution has not been formally proved and that the Judge in performing the duties prescribed by section 298, Criminal Procedure Code, should have rejected it whether it was or was not objected to by the parties. In my opinion there is a considerable difference between evidence which is inadmissible on account of its inherent nature and evidence, such as the document complained of, which would be admissible on formal proof of its execution. Here the document was innocently admitted on the supposition that formal proof of it was waived. Even assuming that it was wrongly admitted though not objected to, it seems clear from the authorities that it is not the admission of every inadmissible evidence which vitiates trial by Jury and that it is the duty of the Appellate Court first to consider whether the evidence improperly admitted is material and such as is likely to have exercised a prejudicial influence on the minds of the Jury.

Now the sale deed of 1906 could not have proved present possession, and it does not appear to me that, had it been objected to and rejected on the ground that it had not been proved, the case for the defence would have been advanced in face of the abundant evidence of possession given by the witnesses mentioned in the Judge's charge. There is authority to show that if evidence has been admitted, which should have been rejected, it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict, Emperor v. Waman (7). Cases also have been cited indicating where a verdict is vitiated owing to misdirection, the Appellate Court should not go into the facts and substitute its own decision for the verdict of the Jury. In my opinion, the accused have not been prejudiced by the admission of the document in question and the circumstances and fact of its admission do not constitute any material misdirection or error demanding a retrial. It is also urged that notwithstanding how strongly Counsel for the accused may have relied on and explained the entry in the Record of Rights shewing the name of Amanat Ali, father of Rafiq, to have been recorded, it was the bounden duty of the Judge to have drawn the attention of the Jury to the presumption of correctness attached to the entry arising under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It would appear to me, where this presumption was never denied and where no question was raised which the Court was called upon to decide (see section 298, Criminal Procedure Code), it was not incumbent upon the Judge to dwell upon a matter such as this, arising during the course of the trial, unless there was some indication that the Jury misunderstood it or were ignorant as to its effect. The Jury was an unusually intelligent one. They had heard Janhar Ali cross-examined as to the importance of the Record of Rights and his admissions relating thereto. The Jury had likewise the benefit of being addressed by the learned Counsel for the accused on the subject. The tone of the Judge's remarks in his headings of charge seems to me to indicate that he was dealing with a matter, namely, the Record of Rights, the presumption under which was thoroughly appreciated by the Jury he was addressing. To my mind the fact that the learned Judge did not pointedly call the attention of the Jury to the provisions of section 103B did not influence their finding in the least. Mr. Manuk on behalf of Ram Bhagwan, while relying on the joint grounds put forward by all the appellants, further raised objection to the way in which the evidence relating to the alibi pleaded by his client was presented to the Jury. My learned brother has likewise dealt in detail with this. No doubt the Judge might have presented the evidence of the Comparing Clerk in a more amplified form, but considering this witness was one of the last examined and his evidence was, therefore, fresh in the minds of the Jury, I do not think the fact of the Judge exercising his discretion in dealing concisely with his evidence is a good ground for complaint.

In conclusion I would remark that while mindful of the interesting and able arguments of Mr. Hasan Imam and Mr. Manuk on behalf of their clients, a careful examination of the evidence and the headings of the learned Judge's summing up has led me to the opinion that he has well fulfilled the requirements of law and discharged his duty to the Jury. He appears to me to have dealt with all the important and salient features of the case and to have presented them fairly and honestly to the Jury. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182, applicability of—Petition to District Magistrate to unlock house containing false allegations, whether falls within scope of section—Offence, gist of.

Section 182, clause (a), of the Penal Code applies to a case in which it is intended that a public servant should do or omit to do something which he ought to do or omit to do if he knew the true facts, that is, which he would be legally justified in doing or omitting to do if he knew the true facts.

(7) 27 B. 626; 5 Bom L. R. 599.

BIMAL CHANDRA BANERJEE v. TEZ CHANDRA BANERJEE.

Asking a Magistrate to do an act which would be an illegal act even if true facts were stated to him, would not come within the purview of the section.

Accused petitioned the District Magistrate praying that as certain tenants occupying his houses had absconded leaving the houses locked up, the houses might be unlocked to enable him to execute the necessary repairs. His application was sent for compliance and report to the Police, who reported that the allegations contained in the petition were untrue, upon which the District Magistrate sanctioned his prosecution under section 182 of the Penal Code.

Held, that the section was inapplicable to the circumstances of the present case.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhansi.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Manohar, has been convicted under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, under the following circumstances. He submitted a petition to the District Magistrate in which he stated that certain tenants occupying his houses had absconded, leaving the houses locked up, and he prayed that the houses might be unlocked and opened to enable him to execute repairs, as otherwise the houses would fall down when the rains began. The application was sent to the Police for compliance and report. The Sub-Inspector reported that the allegations in the petition were untrue. Thereupon the District Magistrate sanctioned the prosecution of the accused under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, and he was tried and convicted. The question is whether the conviction is legal. Under section 182 a person who gives to a public servant any information which he knows or believes to be false, intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, such public servant to do any of the things mentioned in clause (a) or clause (b) of the section, would be liable to punishment. In this case it is not alleged that clause (b) is applicable. The question is whether clause (a) applies. Under that clause the false information must have been given with the intention or the knowledge that the public servant would do or omit any thing which he ought not to do or omit if the true facts were known to him. In the present case if the true state of facts were known to the District Magistrate, he would not be legally competent to issue the order which he issued or which was asked for. It is equally clear that he would not be competent to make the order if the information given to him was untrue. It seems to me that clause (a) of section 182 applies to a case in which it is intended that a public servant should do or omit to do something which he ought to do or omit to do if he knew the true facts, that is, which he would be legally justified in doing or omitting to do if he knew the true facts. Asking a Magistrate to do an act which would be an illegal act even if true facts were stated to him would not, it seems to me, come within the purview of the section. The information must be information regarding a fact which would induce the Magistrate to do something which he would be legally competent to do if he had been cognizant of the true facts. As I have already stated, if the true facts were before the Magistrate he could not have issued the order which he issued to the Police. By reason of the true facts not being stated he issued an order which he could in no case have issued. Therefore it seems to me that the present case is not a case to which the section applies. I allow the application, set aside the conviction and sentence, and direct that the fine imposed on the applicant, if paid, be refunded.

Application allowed.

Magistrate—Revision—Interference by High Court.

BIMAL CHANDRA BANERJEE v. TEZ CHANDRA BANERJEE.

The accused, a Tahsildar, realised a large sum of money from the tenants of his master at a place M., and being bound to render accounts at a place B. presented there a false account with false entries in his papers, shewing that a much lesser sum than what he had realised was due from him:

Held, that it was doubtful whether the Court at B. would have jurisdiction to try the offence of criminal breach of trust against the accused. [p. 94, col.]

Section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, is imperative and the Court is required to see in every case, in which it is asked to set aside a conviction on the ground that the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, whether there has in fact been a failure of justice. [p. 94, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Alipore.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee (with him Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee), for the Petitioner.—The question is whether the Alipore Court had jurisdiction to try the case. The charge does not specify the place where the alleged misappropriation took place. The whole complaint is that the accused did not disclose that he had received the sum of Rs. 800 from the tenants of Mr. B. Chakerbarty at Magura in the District of Jessore. The petition of complaint further states that having received the money the petitioner went home, resigned the service, and then on the complaints of the tenants he was written to. He then came down and gave a false account, showing that only four annas and two pies were due by him to the complainant. Refers to the provisions of section 181 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Giving of a false account does not show that the money is retained and that does not confer jurisdiction on the Alipore Court to try the case. The Alipore Court should not have tried the case, when the petitioner stated before it that he would be seriously prejudiced in his defence if the trial went on at Alipore instead of at Magura. In fact it was not possible for him to produce all the evidence in support of his case at Alipore which he could produce at Magura. Refers to Simhachalam v. Rati Kanta Laha (1).

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown (with him Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Opposite Party.—The offence was concluded at Bhawanipur within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court. The only defect in the charge is that it does not specify the place where the money was retained. I rely on the provisions of sections 531 and 537, Criminal Procedure Code, which would cure the defect of jurisdiction, if any. Barring a mere statement there is nothing on the record to show that the accused has been in any way prejudiced by the trial having taken place at Alipore. The accused cannot get relief merely on the ground that the Alipore Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case unless he shows to the satisfaction of the Court that he was really prejudiced in his defence. Refers to Kangali Sardar v. Rama Charan (2).

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, in reply.—Both the Courts below proceeded upon the erroneous assumption that the loss ensued at Bhawanipur. Once it is shown that the Court has got no jurisdiction to try the case it is the duty of the prosecution to show that section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, would apply. See also section 256, Criminal Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a Rule was issued at the instance of the petitioner, Bimal Chandra Banerjee, calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence upon him (the petitioner) should not be set aside on the ground that the Alipore Court had no jurisdiction to try the case. The petitioner was a Tahsildar in the employment of Mr. Beyomkesh Chakerberty with reference to Mr. Chakerberty's Jessore estates. The complaint against him was that he had misappropriated a sum of Rs. 800 which he had received by way of selami from tenants on three dates between January and March 1917. The charges, which are in identical terms, mutatis mutandis were that the petitioner at "Gangralia Catchery, Police Station Magura, District Jessore, being a servant in the employment of Mr. B. Chakerberty, in such capacity being entrusted with such and such a sum committed criminal breach of trust with respect to the said amount by criminally misappropriating the same and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 408, Indian Penal Code, within my cognizance". The case was being tried by an Honorary Magistrate with first class powers at Alipore. Proceedings had been commenced against the petitioner before in the Alipore Court on the same charge and he was discharged under section 203 on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction. The District Magistrate, however, on application by the complainant was of a different opinion and directed the present trial. The charges may be objected to on the ground that they are not clear and precise; for instance, if the entrustment and criminal misappropriation took place at Gangralia as alleged in the charge, it is difficult to see how they could fall within the cognizance of the Magistrate at Alipore unless some other words were added as to the place of misappropriation. Section 181 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, provides: "The offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be enquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed." It has been argued here for the Crown that although the moneys were undoubtedly received at Magura, still the accused was bound to account to the complainant at the Sudder Cutchery at Bhawanipore and that he was actually so called upon to account in the month of May 1917. In presenting his account at that time he is said to have made certain entries in the rokar, and to have urged on the strength of those entries that only a small sum of 4 annas 2 pies was due by him to the complainant. It may be doubtful whether this would bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court—whether it could be said that the offence was committed within the limits of that Court's jurisdiction. It is not, however, in our opinion, necessary to discuss that point, because it appears that the case may be decided on the provisions of section 531, Criminal Procedure Code. That section provides: "No finding, sentence or order of any Criminal Court shall be set aside merely on the ground that the enquiry, trial or other proceeding in the course of which it was arrived at or passed, took place in a wrong Sessions division, district, subdivision or other local area, unless it appears that such error has in fact occasioned a failure of justice." That section is imperative and the Court is required to see in every such case whether there has in fact, been a failure of justice. Now in this case the accused undoubtedly demurred at the first opportunity to the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court. He again presented a petition just before the trial before the Honorary Magistrate commenced, in which he stated that he would be seriously prejudiced in his defence if the trial went on at Alipore instead of at Magura and that it would be almost impossible for him to produce all the necessary papers and witnesses from Magura. That was his apprehension when the case was about to commence. But we do not find in his petition here a single statement to show that those apprehensions have been realized in any way whatever. So far as can be seen from the order-sheet, he made no request to the trying Magistrate to summon any witnesses on his behalf from Magura or elsewhere, or to give him facilities for producing papers or documents. He does not appear to have intimated that he wished to call evidence in his defence. In his petition before this Court he does not allege that he did anything of the kind, or that it was refused or that he was in any way prejudiced by the trial having taken place at Alipore. He merely stated that he desired relief from this Court on the ground that the Magistrate of Alipore had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint. In those circumstances, we do not think that we should interfere. It does not appear that the petitioner has been prejudiced in the slightest degree. The Rule is accordingly discharged. The petitioner must surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of his sentence.

Rule discharged.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioners before us have been ordered by the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Bettiah to execute each a bond on their own recognizances for Rs. 100 with two sureties of Rs. 50 each to be of good behaviour for one year. There was an appeal to the District Magistrate, without success.

It appears that proceedings were instituted by the Sub Divisional Magistrate after inspection of a certain locality during his winter tour, in consequence of numerous complaints to the effect that the petitioners were in the habit of committing mischief by letting loose their cattle upon the lands of their neighbours and of using violence if resisted. Now although he recorded a proceeding purporting to be based upon information received from a complainant named Jotil Ahir, it is clear that he was considerably influenced by his own inquiry before he drew up proceedings and that he was really in the position of a prosecutor. He ought not to have, therefore, tried the case himself. Although section 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code, applies only to offences, I think the principle of that section must apply to cases of a miscellaneous character. The principle was applied by a Division Bench of this Court to a proceeding under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, in the case of Ram Asis Singh v. Abdus Samad Barahil, Criminal Revision No. 401 of 1916, and by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in a case under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, in Alimuddin Howaldar v. Emperor (1).

Mr. Lewis, the trying Magistrate, has very candidly observed in his judgment that it was impossible for him to remove from his mind the impression which was produced upon seeing large tracts of land completely devastated by ravages of cattle, and he also states in his explanation that in addition to the 28 witnesses who had deposed before him some 150 others were present and made oral complaints to him. It is clear, therefore, that his finding as to the guilt of the accused was affected by the preliminary local investigation. The order, therefore, calling upon the petitioners to execute bonds must be set aside, but we think that as there was evidence to justify the proceedings there must be a re-trial.

It has been strongly contended that there is no evidence of habitual mischief to bring the petitioners within the operation of section 110 (d), Criminal Procedure Code, nor of any association such as would justify a joint trial, nor any specific finding as to the part which each of the accused took in the acts which have been held to constitute habitual mischief. These are matters, however, which must be the subject of the new trial, which we now direct the Magistrate to hold. The Magistrate, of course, will bear in mind that a joint trial is not permissible unless there is evidence of something in the nature of conspiracy or of concert in respect of the various acts of habitual mischief to which the witnesses have deposed. He must also bear in mind that he cannot use entries in the station diaries or Police reports without legal evidence of the acts alleged. There must also be an investigation as to whether each of the petitioners who have been bound down has taken part in the various acts or otherwise acted in concert.

(1) 29 C. 392; 6 C. W. N. 595.

MARTAND RAO V. EMPEROR.

The learned Government Pleader has contended that the local inquiry made by Mr. Lewis was merely made for the purpose of testing the evidence of witnesses. But that does not appear to be the case. His inquiry was made not with the object of testing the evidence of witnesses who had already deposed before him, but for the purpose of finding out whether or not any proceedings were to be instituted against the accused. That being so, the principle that a Court is free to make a local inquiry for the purpose of understanding the evidence which has been given before him, does not justify the proceedings in this case.

We direct that the order of the Court below be set aside and that the case be re-tried by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate upon whose inquiry the proceedings were started.

If having regard to the fact that the petitioners have already been in jail for sometime, the trying Magistrate is of opinion that no further proceedings are necessary, it will be competent to him to drop the proceedings and to discharge the petitioners. Pending the trial of the petitioners, they will be released on their own recognizances in such sums as the District Magistrate may deem proper.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 125, 434—Order requiring security for good behaviour—District Magistrate, power of, to set aside order—Revision—High Court, interference by.

An order requiring security for good behaviour under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be cancelled by the District Magistrate under section 125 of the Code on the ground that there is no proof of any likelihood of a breach of the peace, and the High Court will refuse to interfere with the order on this ground in revision, unless the District Magistrate has been moved under section 125.

The High Court will on its revisional side interfere only as a Court of last resort under very exceptional circumstances.

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Bhandara, in Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 51 of 1917, dated the 14th February 1918.

Mr. M. Bhawani Shankar Niyogi, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application asking this Court to interfere in revision and set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhandara, passed under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, ordering the applicant to execute a bond for keeping the peace for one year on the grounds that there is no proof of any likelihood of a breach of the peace and that the materials on the record do not justify the order.

Under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, the District Magistrate has the power to cancel the bond on the grounds stated above: Emperor v. Abdur Rahim (1) and Emperor v. Dalli (2). The applicant has not applied to the District Magistrate under the above section, and following the Allahabad ruling cited above I decline to interfere in revision till this has been done. This Court will on its revisional side interfere only as a Court of last resort under very exceptional circumstances: Emperor v. Hussain Shah (3). No sufficient grounds are disclosed for not resorting to the District Magistrate in the first instance. The application is rejected.

JUDGMENT.

No. 1353 OF 1915.

The plaintiffs-appellants, who may be referred to as the Tagore Estate, claim to have purchased at sales in execution of decrees for rent, under the Bengal
Tenancy Act, a Jamma and a Patni
Taluk, and to have taken all necessary steps to set aside encumbrances and to have obtained kabuliyats from the cultivating ryots, and on these grounds to be entitled to rent from those ryots.

These claims are opposed by what may be referred to as Gobinda Babu's Estate, and the contentions set up against them are, so far as we are now concerned, (1) that the sale of the Jamma was not a sale for arrears of rent, so as to affect incumbrances, (2) that necessary steps were not taken to set aside incumbrances within the Pattai Taluk, and (3) that for various reasons the kabuliyats are not binding. As to (1).—The decree in execution of which the sale was held was a decree in a suit brought for rent for the Jamma as a tenure covering twelve annas of the Mouza.
Originally there was such a tenure, but the lower Appellate Court found that long before the suit it had been divided and separate Taluks had been created out of it.
This finding has been attacked in argument before us on two grounds. The first ground is, that it is based partly on a document, Exhibit X, which is not evidence.

As to this, all that the judgment says is that this document, which is a judgment dated 24th March 1859 (not 1858), mentions that two of the shares comprised in the 12 annas were settled separately. Other, and much stronger, reasons, based on other materials, were given for the decision. But we also notice that this document was admitted without objection in the trial Court, and was not objected to in the lower Appellate Court, or in the grounds of appeal in this Court. On the contrary the question raised in the grounds of appeal in this Court is as to how the document should be construed, a question which arises only if the document is evidence.
Had objection been taken to the admission of this document in good time, the party producing it might have given other evidence. As the objection was not taken until arguments were heard in this Court, over three years after the appeal was laid here, it should not be allowed.

The second ground on which this finding was attacked before us was, that in the absence of a finding that the landlord gave his consent in writing to the division of the original tenure, the finding that it was divided cannot stand. The finding is, that it was divided, and that separate estates were created out of it. A principal reason given for this finding is, that even after these separate Taluks had all become

HAR LAL v. BASANT SINGH.

vested in the same persons, the Dashmina family, the Zemindars, in suing for rents, treated them as separate Taluqs. It is true that a Zemindar may collect rents separately from the several different co-sharers who hold a Taluq, without consenting to the splitting up of the Taluq into several different Taluqs. But a Zemindar would hardly bring several separate suits, for rent of several shares of a subordinate Taluq, against the holder of the whole of that Taluq. Having regard to all the facts found and relied upon, we think the finding that separate Taluqs were created is sufficient.

To have the benefits of a sale for arrears of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, there should have been a separate suit in respect of each of the separate Taluqs.

The destruction of valuable incumbrances is a very severe measure, which the law allows only if a certain procedure is strictly followed, and when a party wishes to enforce that severe measure he must show that he has strictly followed the procedure laid down.

As to the Pattai Taluq the lower Appellate Court has held that it has not been proved that notice was served on Aditya Chakravarty, who had purchased a share in it. The question is one solely of fact, but the finding has been assailed on the ground that an entry in the order sheet is sufficient prima facie proof of service of that notice. The lower Appellate Court has given authority for holding that it is not sufficient proof, see Radhay Kier v. Ajodhya Das (1). There is no other evidence, and as pointed out already, there must be strict compliance, and good proof of compliance, with the procedure required by the law, before the severe consequence which the appellants seek to infer can follow.

As to the kabuliyats there are rent suits, in some of which the appellants are plaintiffs as Zemindars, while in the others, the Gobinda Babu's Estate is plaintiff, as holder of the incumbrance which the Zemindar claims to have set aside. The suits were tried together, that justice might be done between all concerned. The ryots cannot be ordered, now that all parties are before the Court, to pay rent both to the Zemindar and to the holder of the subordinate tenures. It may also be noticed that the ryots were in possession before they executed the kabuliyats. They were not admitted to possession by the Zemindar. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

This judgment will govern Appeals Nos. 1378 to 1389 of 1915, which are also dismissed with costs.

The Rules granted in connection with the suits by the Gobinda Babu's Estate are discharged with costs, in each case one gold mohur.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel, requisites of—Suit in Revenue Court to establish occupancy rights—Subsequent suit in Civil Court for possession as owner, maintainability of.

A piece of land, which was originally shamilat, fell on partition to the share of the defendant, who caused a notice of ejectment to be served on the plaintiff who was in possession of the land. The plaintiff brought a suit in the Revenue Court to contest the notice of ejectment, on the ground that he was a tenant with rights of occupancy in the land. The Revenue Court held that he was not an occupancy tenant, and he was consequently ejected. He then brought a suit for possession as owner of the land in the Civil Court.

Held, that inasmuch as the defendant was not caused to shift his position in consequence of anything represented to him by the plaintiff, the requisites necessary to constitute estoppel as defined in section 115 of the Evidence Act did not exist and the plaintiff was not, therefore, estopped from establishing that he was the owner of the land in dispute. [p. 99, cols. 1 & 2.]

In order to bring a case within section 115 of the Evidence Act there must have been, (1) a representation which amounts to an intention of causing or permitting to believe in another; (2) belief on the part of that other; and (3) an action arising out of that belief. [p. 99, col. 1.]

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Trilochan Das Khanna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of—which the present appeal arises are briefly as follows. Plaintiff-appellant sues for possession as owner of the land in suit. It was originally shamilat deh and on partition fell to the share of the defendants-respondents. The latter caused notice of ejectment to be served on the plaintiff under the provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act. Plaintiff then brought a suit in the Revenue Court to contest the notice of ejectment, on the ground that he was a tenant with rights of occupancy in the land. The Revenue Court held that plaintiff was not an occupancy tenant and he was subsequently ejected from the land. The lower Courts have dismissed the present suit, on the ground that plaintiff having pleaded in the Revenue Court that he was an occupancy tenant cannot now allege that he has proprietary rights.

Plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court, and it is urged that plaintiff was not estopped from alleging that he had acquired proprietary rights in the land in suit. It is pointed out that the requisites necessary for an estoppel as defined in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act do not exist. Three things are generally necessary for bringing a case within the scope of section 115, Evidence Act:—

(i) there must have been a representation which amounts to an intention of causing or permitting to believe in another;

(ii) there must have been belief on the part of that other;

(iii) there must have been an action arising out of that belief.

Now, Counsel for the respondents admits that there has been no action on the part of his clients on account of plaintiff's representation that he was a tenant with rights of occupancy. Defendants have not been caused to shift their position in consequence of anything represented to them by the plaintiff. It appears to me, therefore, that there is no estoppel. No authorities have been cited by the lower Appellate Court. Three authorities have been cited by the first Court, Abdullah Khan v. Ghulam Jan (1), Kamal Krishna Kundu v. Kedar Nath Kundu (2) and Ramchandra Shivjiram v. Tama Ragho Mangiya (3). The first and last of these rulings are clearly distinguishable and the second ruling cited appears to be a misquotation.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the lower Courts remand the case for decision on the merits to the Court of first instance. Stamp in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 91—Mortgage—Redemption—Interest in mortgaged property, what is—Perpetual lessee, whether can redeem.

The interest which entitles a person to redeem must be derived directly or indirectly from the mortgagor since the making of the mortgage. In other words, a person may redeem only if he is affected by the mortgage; if he is not affected by it, there is no occasion for his redeeming and he cannot be permitted to do so. [p. 101, col. 1.]

A mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management; but it is not competent to him to grant a lease on unusual terms or to alter the character of the land or to authorise its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he created the mortgage. [p. 101, col. 2.]

The owner of certain malik makbuza plots mortgaged them to the defendant and subsequently granted a perpetual lease thereof to the plaintiff. The defendant obtained a sale decree upon the mortgage, without making the plaintiff a party to the suit, and himself purchased the mortgaged property in the execution sale. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to redeem the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff's lease was contrary to usage and was, therefore, not binding on the defendant; [p. 10, col. 2.]

(2) that the foreclosure and sale in pursuance of the mortgage prejudiced the plaintiff's interest in the mortgaged property and he was, therefore, entitled to redeem it. [p. 101, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 79 of 1914, dated the 26th November 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit (with him Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B.), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. Mitra, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Karim Khan was the owner of a half share of certain malik makbuza plots. On the 4th May 1900 he executed a mortgage in favour of the defendants' predecessor. On the 22nd February 1902 he executed a lease (Exhibit P-1) in favour of the plaintiff. On the 9th February 1909 he executed a document called intkalnama (Exhibit P-2) also in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants obtained a sale decree upon their mortgage in Suit No. 296 of 1911, without making the plaintiff a party, and themselves purchased the property mortgaged in the execution sale. The present suit is for redemption of the mortgage on the basis of the lease and the intkalnama. The first Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem and decreed his claim. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit mainly on the ground that the plaintiff has no right to redeem, under either of the two documents. The plaintiff has, therefore, filed this second appeal.

The lease (Exhibit P-1) is an ordinary agricultural lease, under which the plaintiff is entitled to hold the land, so long as he pays the rent. It is a perpetual lease. In the subsequent document, the parties described the status of the plaintiff as that of an occupancy tenant. The plaintiff, before 1889, would have been an occupancy tenant in Nimar. Under the present law, he is a sub-tenant, and section 60 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act provides that a sub-tenant shall hold on such terms as may be agreed between him and his landlord. Under section 85 of the Tenancy Act, he may be ejected in execution of a decree for an arrear of rent. It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiff, though a permanent sub-tenant, is liable to eviction for non-payment of rent.

The intkalnama recites that a sum of Rs. 100 has been received in advance from the plaintiff and describes the transferor as having malik makbuza rights. It then proceeds to say: "You have already acquired occupancy rights in respect of my share of the aforesaid fields. I have, therefore, been recovering from you Rs. 12.10 every year on account of the rent of the aforesaid fields of my share. In lieu of the aforesaid amount I have transferred to you for 9 years, that is, from Chaith Samvat 1966 to the end of Samvat 1974, whatever right I possess in the said land of recovering rent. Now I will not set up any claim against you in respect of any rent of the aforesaid fields, until the expiry of the above mentioned term. * * * I am responsible for my share of the land revenue during the above-mentioned period, and you shall have no concern whatever with the same."

The appellant's contention is that by the intkalnama he has been made a lessee of the malik makbhuza rights for 9 years. The respondents contend that, under the document, the rent is remitted in consideration of the advance of Rs. 100 and the plaintiff is merely a rent-free sub-tenant for the period. I think the contention of the respondents is sound. The appellant has not made himself responsible to the Government for land revenue. If it were intended to give him proprietary rights for the time being, there would have been an agreement for mutation of names, in accordance with the provisions of section 125 of the Land Revenue Act, 1881. No such mutation has taken place in the appellant's favour, nor has he made himself liable to the penalties prescribed by section 94 for recovery of an arrear of land revenue. For example, he cannot be arrested and imprisoned in a civil jail, nor can his other property be attached and sold to satisfy such arrear. I am of opinion that the parties did not contemplate the creation of any proprietary interest in favour of the plaintiff by either of the two documents.

The question now for decision is whether, under these circumstances, the plaintiff has a right to redeem. His learned Counsel relies upon section 91, clause (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, which runs as follows:—"Besides the mortgagor, any of the following persons may redeem, or institute a suit for redemption of, the mortgaged property:—(a) Any person (other than the mortgagee of the interest sought to be redeemed) having any interest in or charge upon the property."

Now if the plaintiff had a proprietary interest in the property he would undoubtedly be entitled to redeem, but I have held that he is a perpetual sub-tenant within the meaning of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act: "Has he any interest in the property? The true test has been laid down in Dr. Ghosh's learned treatise on the Law of Mortgages, 4th Edition, page 234, as follows:—"The interest which entitles a person to redeem must be derived directly or indirectly from the mortgagor since the making of the mortgage. In other words, a person may redeem only if he is affected by the mortgage; if he is not affected by it, there is no occasion for his redeeming and he is not permitted to do so." In support of this, the learned Doctor cites the case of Girish Chunder Dey v. Juramoni De (1), where Rampini and Sale, JJ., held that a ryot has no such interest.

The mortgage sought to be redeemed shows that the land was ordinarily let to tenants and was in their occupation at the date of the mortgage. Now, but for the passing of Act XVII of 1889, the plaintiff would have been an occupancy tenant in Nimar, and an ordinary tenant elsewhere, and this even if his lease had been for one year. Such fixity of tenure, being the creation of a Statute, and not the result of a contract, would have been binding upon the mortgagees. The occupancy or ordinary tenant in such a case would not have been affected by the sale or foreclosure of the malik mokbuza rights, and the tenant would, therefore, not have been entitled to redeem. But here since the passing of Act XVII of 1889 we have a permanent right as sub-tenant created by contract clearly binding on the mortgagor. The right of a mortgagor in possession to create a lease binding on the mortgagee has been discussed in Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (2). At page 388*, Mookerjee, J., says:—"The true position thus is that the mortgagor in possession may make a lease conformable to usage in the ordinary course of management, for instance, he may create a tenancy from year to year in the case of agricultural lands or from month to month in the case of houses. But it is not competent to the mortgagor to grant a lease on unusual terms, or to alter the character of the land, or to authorize its use in a manner or for a purpose different from the mode in which he himself had used it before he granted the mortgage." The plaintiff's lease in perpetuity was clearly not in conformity with usage, and will, therefore, not be binding upon the mortgagees, and they have already repudiated it by dispossessing the plaintiff. The foreclosure or sale in pursuance of the mortgage will in this case prejudice the plaintiff's interests, and I think he is, therefore, entitled to redeem.

One of the arguments used by Cotton, L. J., in Tarn v. Turner (3) is, that a lessee, whose lease has not been consented to by the mortgagee and is, therefore, not binding on him, may be prejudiced by the action of the mortgagee insisting on his rights as a legal owner of the property. Lopes, L. J., at page 470 says: "The position of the plaintiff (the lessee) is this, that unless he is allowed to redeem, he may be evicted by the defendant (the mortgagee). In these circumstances, has he a right to redeem? I think he has." Fry, L. J., however, in general terms says that a person who claims as lessee under a mortgagor after a mortgage and thereby derives his interest in the equity of redemption, has a right to redeem. In this country we have to interpret the words used in the Transfer of Property Act. Can a person be said to have any interest in the property unless he can be prejudiced by a foreclosure of the mortgage or a sale in pursuance of it? I think not.

In the case of Raghunandan Prasad v. Ambika Singh (4) the perpetual lessee who was allowed to redeem would have been prejudiced if he were not so allowed. In Payr Matathil Appu v. Kovamel Amina (5) Shephard and Best, JJ., say:—"In our opinion the word 'interest' is not necessarily confined to right of ownership, but is sufficiently large to include any minor interest such as that of a tenant or a person having a charge." Although the words used are very general, they should be read with reference to the facts of the case. The tenant there was entitled to possession and could not obtain possession which was with the mortgagee, and under these circumstances, for giving effect to the rights of the tenant, it was necessary that he should be allowed to redeem the prior mortgage. I need not notice the cases where Patnidars in Bengal have been allowed to redeem, for they have "substantial proprietary interests," as pointed out by Pontifex, J., in Kasumunnissa Bibee v. Nilratna Bose (6). The lower Appellate Court lays stress upon the fact that the plaintiff can be ejected for non payment of rent. But I am unable to attach much importance to this, as most leases provide for re-entry by the lessor upon default in payment of rent. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff has a right to redeem.

The lower Appellate Court is entirely wrong in thinking there was an estoppel or res judicata in the case. The defendants had brought Suit No. 938 of 1905 for possession as mortgagees. In this suit the present plaintiff was joined as a party. The lower Appellate Court thinks that the plaintiff did not, in that suit, set up his rights under the lease of 1902. There is nothing to show that he did not. Moreover the judgment in that suit (Exhibit D 1) shows that the plaintiff's claim was for constructive possession and not khas possession. By this I understand it was a suit for proprietary possession and even if the defendant did not set up his lease by way of defence, he was not bound to do so as this would be no answer to the suit, as framed. There is also no foundation for a case of estoppel and no estoppel was pleaded. There was no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to inform the defendants of his exact rights under the lease of 1902, before the latter instituted Suit No. 296 of 1911.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the first Court is restored. The respondents will pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Primarily where a party can show that char land is in fact a re-formation in situ of land identifiable as his own, he is entitled to that land even though it may have been for a period submerged. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Section 4 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation of 1825 as a whole was not intended to apply to lands which had been previously in existence and the property of individuals. Section 5 of the Regulation was intended to apply to such lands. [p. 104, col. 1.]

The expression "small and shallow river" in clause (4) of section 4 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation is used in contra-distinction to the expression "large and navigable" used in clause (3) of the same section. [p. 104, col. 2.]

asked for a decree for possession of land which had accreted under the further bank to the occupancy holdings of the defendants. The learned Munsif, after an enquiry through a Commissioner, was of opinion that the plaintiffs had proved their proprietary right in the lands in suit and, accordingly, gave them a decree for khas possession. The learned Judge was of opinion that, under clause (1) of section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, the defendants had a better claim than the plaintiffs, on the ground that the lands claimed were gradual accretions to the holdings of the defendants. Had we been convinced from the pleadings and the evidence given that the parties thoroughly understood what was required to be proved to establish a claim to alluvial land by gradual accretions, we should have accepted this finding as a finding of fact. We are not so satisfied and are of opinion that the case must be re-tried. The defendants did not in their written statement allege a gradual accretion. They said only that the land had been "thrown up as char." No issue was framed on the manner of the re-formation, and the point was not touched in the judgment of the trial Court.

The case law from the earliest days of the Weekly Reporter to the present day is, that primarily, where a party can show that char land is in fact a re-formation in situ of land identifiable as his own, he is entitled to that land even though it may have been for a period submerged. In order that in this re-trial the true points for decision may be understood, we would refer in the first instance to the following passage in the case of Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1):

"In truth, when the whole words are looked at, not merely of that clause, but of the whole Regulation, it is quite obvious that what the then legislative authority was dealing with was the gain which an individual proprietor might make in this way from that which was part of the public territory, the public domain not usable in the ordinary sense, that is to say, the sea belonging to the State, a public river belonging to the State; this was a gift to an individual whose estate lay upon the river or lay upon the sea, a gift to him of that which, by accretion, became valuable and usable out of that which was in a state of nature neither valuable nor usable."

Their Lordships refer with approval, in the course of their judgment, to the case of Musammam Imam Bandi v. Hurgovind Ghose (2). The following passages in the judgment in the latter case are most significant: "The Judges mistook the nature of the question which they had to try. They conceived that the question was as to alluvial land, in the sense of land gradually gained from the river and which, having no other owner, would belong by way of accretion to the lands of the adjoining proprietor. Whereas the ownership of the adjoining lands, though essential in the consideration of a title founded on accretion, was of little, or no value, in the issue actually joined between these parties.

"The land in dispute was inundated..... became partially dry...and was again inundated and again re-appeared.

"The question then, is, to whom did this land belong before the inundation. Whoever was the owner then remained the owner while it was covered with water and after it became dry."

The doctrine in Lopez's case (1) is stated in the following terms in the case of Radha Proshad Singh v. Ram Commar Singh (3):—

"The doctrine in Lopez's case (1) was doubtless in favour of the defendants in both suits; and if they had in no way lost their rights, would give them a title to the land re-formed upon sites identified by the thakbust proceedings of 1864 as within the boundaries of their original Mouzas, which would prima facie override a title founded on the principle of the acquisition of that land by the proprietor of the northern bank of the Ganges by means of gradual accretion".

The Judicial Committee again in Ritraj Kunwar v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (4) pointed out that the provisions of the second clause of section 4 are in accordance with the English Law, which may be stated to be as follows :—

"All the authorities, ancient and modern, are uniform to the effect that if, by the irruption of the waters of a tidal river, a new channel is formed in the land of a subject,...the right to the soil remains in the owner, so that if at any time there-after the water shall recede, and the river again change its course leaving the new channel dry, the soil becomes again the exclusive property of the owner."

If the whole Regulation be read in the light of these decisions, the scope of sections 4 and 5 becomes at once apparent. The first clause of section 4 deals with lands gained by gradual accretion from the public domain of the river or the sea. The second clause deals with changes made by sudden or violent action of a river. The third clause deals with chars or islands formed in the public domain of the river or the sea. The fourth clause deals with changes made by the action of a river of which both the bed and the water are private property. Section 5 deals with all other changes, and in particular cases of gain by alluvion and dereliction as opposed to gain by gradual accretion. Section 4 as a whole was not intended to apply to lands which had been previously in existence and the property of individuals. Section 5 was intended to apply to such lands.

Assuming that the land in suit falls within the plaintiffs' boundaries, the first issue for determination in a case such as this must be: Is the accretion a true accretion of land not previously in existence or a reformation of land which can be identified as the property of the plaintiffs? It is not sufficient that the plaintiff can show that the accretion is in situ of a river bed which has been settled with him. It is necessary that he should show that the land had previous existence and was re-formed.

The next issue will be: does property in the land still vest in the plaintiffs? [Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1).] "It may well be that it may have been so completely abandoned as to merge again, like any other derelict land, into the public domain, as part of the sea or river of the State, and so liable to the written law as to accretion and annexation."

It will be open to the defendants, the burden of proof being upon them, if these issues are decided in the plaintiffs' favour, to prove a right to the land under the English rules of equity, in accordance with section 5 of the Regulation, as a slow, gradual and imperceptible accretion [Ritraj Kunwar v. Sarfaraz Kunwar (4), Attorney-General for Nigeria v. Holt (5), Baldeo Thakurai v. Ugra Nath Misra (6) and Bhagwan Rai v. Gopi Rai (7)].

If either the first or the second issue is decided against the plaintiffs, the Court will consider whether clause (4) of section 4 of Regulation XI is applicable, and I would remark here that the fact that this river is one of the biggest in Orissa is not conclusive that it would not have been regarded as a small and shallow river by the framers of the Regulation. The terms "small and shallow" are used in distinction to the terms "large and navigable" used in the third clause. I should myself assume (as the framers of the Regulation seem to assume) that where a river is large and navigable its bed would not be settled with a private owner.

These issues need not be regarded as exhaustive. The whole suit should, in my view, be re-tried in the Munsif's Court and it will be open to the parties to frame such issues as they please within the law as explained in this judgment, and to adduce evidence afresh on the issues framed. And whereas the proprietary rights in the lands are to be determined on precisely the same considerations as the subordinate rights, it is expedient that the landlord of the defendants be impleaded and a fresh boundary commission, if he so desires, executed in his presence. I would, therefore, direct that the landlord of Amatpur be joined as a defendant and the whole suit re-tried, and would make no order as to the costs of this Court or of the Courts below incurred up to date. The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are set aside in these terms.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 269 OF 1917.

June 12, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda Kt.JAHIRAL HAQUE AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS*versus*SADAR ALI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—Rent, suit for—Appeal, second, whether lies.

In a suit for rent where the amount claimed does not exceed Rs 100, no special appeal lies to the High Court where the only question decided in the suit is whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties. [p. 106, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Chittagong, dated the 9th November 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Hathazari, dated the 4th January 1916.

FACTS material to this report will appear from the following extract from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This appeal has been preferred by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the decree for rent passed against them and others, and the point for determination is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the appellants and the plaintiffs-respondents.

"The Record of Rights (Exhibit 6) shows that within Taraf Sambhu Ram and under the proprietors Rahamatali and others, the defendant No. 1 and the father of defendant No. 2 and some other persons were recorded as tenants. There is no reliable evidence to prove that the rent lands appertained to Hissas Nos. 3 and 4 and that Rahamatali alone was entitled to get rent for the same from the appellants and others. The oral evidence which consists of the deposition of the plaintiffs' father cannot be relied upon, and there is no other evidence to corroborate him on the above points. In the Record of Rights, Rahamatali and others were mentioned as proprietors and I do not see how the expression can be construed as meaning Rahamatali and his brother and not Girish and others, who admittedly had shares in the Taraf. That rent was realized from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by or on behalf of the plaintiffs and their alleged predecessor Rahamatali is not proved by reliable evidence. The statement of the plaintiffs' father, who is interested in the result of the suit, cannot be believed without corroboration. There are no collection papers to support his deposition. Non-production of the alleged collection papers is not sufficiently accounted for. The plaintiffs' father says that there are witnesses to prove realization of paddy by him from the defendants but none of them has been examined. It is not necessary to decide in the rent suit whether the wakfnama, under which the plaintiffs are alleged to have got the right of Rahamatali, is valid and whether it was acted upon. That Rahamatali alone was the landlord in respect of the rent lands is not proved by reliable evidence. The plaintiffs claim rent as Mutwallis but their names do not appear to have been registered as such.

"The defendant No. 1 and others purchased the shares of Girish and Nanda Lal in the Taraf under a registered Kobala (Exhibit B). The C. S. plots, comprising the lands of the rent sued for, are covered by the above Kobala. It was not likely that the defendant No. 1 paid rent to the plaintiffs for the above lands when he himself was one of the purchasers under the Kobala.

"For the above reasons I find that relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs-respondents and defendants-appellants is not proved by reliable evidence."

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Charu Chander Sen, for the Respondents.—I raise a preliminary objection that this second appeal is not competent under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit was for recovery of arrears of rent, and the finding of the lower Appellate Court is: "I find that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiffs-respondents and the defendants-appellants is not proved by reliable evidence." See Gangadhar Karmakar v. Shekhar Basini Dasya (1), Shilabati Debi v. Roderiques (2), Bhagabati Bewa v. Nund Kumar Chuckerbutty (3). The determination of a question of relationship of landlord and tenant is a finding of fact. See Ram Kanai Dass v. Fakir Chand Dass (4).

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kustgir (with him Babu Tarakeswarnath Mitter), for the Appellants.—The second appeal is competent. The Subordinate Judge has decided a question of title, as will appear from the facts stated in the judgment in appeal. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claimed a title to the rent lands in themselves as purchasers from a co-sharer of the plaintiffs and the Subordinate Judge has given effect to it. Refers to Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi (5).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must be dismissed. No special appeal lies to this Court having regard to the provisions of section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The only question decided in the suit is, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff-appellant Dwarka Prasad to enforce a mortgage executed in his favour by a lady, named Musammatt Kailas Kuar. This lady was the widow of one Ram Bakhsh deceased. She has died and Ram Bakhsh's property has descended to the two defendants Prithipal Singh and Jadu Nath Singh, who were the reversioners. The mortgage was executed on the 9th of March 1911 in favour of the plaintiff to secure a loan of Rs. 500. The plaintiff claimed that this mortgage debt was a charge upon the property in the hands of the defendants and that the defendants were bound to satisfy the same.

Various defences were raised. It was alleged that the deed had not been executed by Musammatt Kailas Kuar. It was also pleaded that even if it had been executed by her she did not understand the purport of the deed; and lastly it was pleaded that in any case there was no legal necessity for the loan advanced to Musammatt Kailas Kuar.

We are no longer concerned with any question of the execution of the deed. It has been proved, and is now admitted, that Musammatt Kailas Kuar did execute the deed in the plaintiff's favour and it has also been found, and the finding is not disputed, that Kailas Kuar, when she executed the deed of mortgage, knew what she was about. The only question which I have to determine is whether in the circumstances disclosed the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The Court of first instance found that the deed had been executed for legal necessity and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. This decision has been reversed in appeal by the District Judge. The view taken by the learned Judge was that there was really no necessity for Musam- mat Kailas Kuar to borrow this money from the plaintiff. According to the Judge Musammāt Kailas Kuar had been left in possession of a comfortable estate which brought in a considerable income, that there was no excuse for her incurring the debt and that consequently the defendants, who are the reversioners, were not responsible for any money which Musammāt Kailas Kuar had borrowed from the plaintiff.

In order to determine this question of legal necessity we have to look to the facts as disclosed by the evidence and there is no difficulty whatever in ascertaining the purpose for which the money was borrowed. It is admitted that the first defendant in this case Prithipal Singh was the lambardar of the whole of the property in which Kailas Kuar's husband had a share. It is proved that at or about the time when this money was borrowed Prithipal Singh was temporarily of unsound mind and that his wife Musammāt Raj Kuar had been appointed his guardian. It is admitted that prior to the execution of the deed Musammāt Raj Kuar had obtained a decree against Musammāt Kailas Kuar for arrears of revenue and that this decree was outstanding at the time the money was borrowed from the plaintiff. It is further admitted that at the date of the deed further arrears of revenue were owing from Musammāt Kailas Kuar and that for the purpose of realising these arrears Musammāt Raj Kuar, as the guardian of her husband the lambardar, had applied to the Deputy Commissioner for attachment of Musammāt Kailas Kuar's property in order that the demand for the arrears of revenue might be satisfied. It is proved that after the execution of this deed the plaintiff himself deposited in Court the money which was required to satisfy the decree. It is also proved that he deposited in the Court of the Deputy-Commissioner the other sum which was owing for revenue and in respect of which Musammāt Kailas Kuar's share in the property had been attached. As a result of these payments the decree was discharged and Kailas Kuar's property was released. In these circumstances there can, I think, be no doubt that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that at the time this money was advanced to Musammāt Kailas Kuar there was a legal necessity for the loan. The observations of the learned Judge in his judgment regarding the circumstances in which Musammāt Kailas Kuar appears to have been extravagant and to have mismanaged the estate of her husband all appear to me to be beside the mark in dealing with the present claim. The plaintiff is a person who has lent money to a widow in possession of her husband's estate; and in these circumstances, unless it is shown that he acted mala fide, he cannot be affected by any mismanagement on the part of the widow, although it may be possible to say that with better management the estate might have been kept free of debt. It is not suggested in any way that the plaintiff here encouraged Musammāt Kailas Kuar in her extravagance, if she was guilty of any. Indeed there is nothing at all to show that the plaintiff had any reason to suppose that Musammāt Kailas Kuar had been living beyond her means. It seems to me, therefore, that the decision of the learned Judge is wrong. Whether it be the case or not that Musammāt Kailas Kuar was living beyond her means, that is not a circumstance which can, in my opinion, affect the rights of the plaintiff. In order to entitle the plaintiff to recover it was for him to show that he had inquired into the necessity for the loan and had satisfied himself, as well as he could, that the lady was acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate, or at least that he was led on reasonable grounds to believe that there was necessity for the alienation. It has been pointed out on behalf of the respondents here that the plaintiff did not go into the witness box and that there is no direct evidence that he made such inquiry as the law demands. That is true. On the other hand there is some evidence to show that representations were made to the plaintiff by the lady's brother who was acting as her general attorney. This man admits that he negotiated the loan on behalf of the lady; and it is idle to suppose that the money was advanced without some inquiry being made. After all it is difficult to see what necessity there could have been for any particular inquiry in the matter, for there can be no doubt that an unsatisfied decree was in existence at the time and that there can equally be no doubt that the plaintiff must have been made aware of the fact that the estate in the hands of the widow had been or was about to be attached by the Deputy Commissioner for arrears of revenue. The necessity for the loan was apparent and indeed the defendants here are hardly in a position to raise the question at all, when we find that one of them was the lambardar and that it was his action in enforcing his claim to recover arrears of revenue which was the immediate cause of the loan being taken. The defendants can certainly not be heard to say that they did not receive these moneys direct from the plaintiff and that the sums were not due on account of arrears of revenue for which Musammatt Kailas Kuar's estate was liable. It certainly is not the law that the lender is bound to ascertain how the necessity for the loan was brought about; and in the absence of any allegation or proof of bad faith on the part of the plaintiff it seems to me that, on the law as laid down in the well-known case of *Hunoomanpersand Panday, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. According to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge out of the sum of Rs. 900 mentioned in the deed Rs. 864-7-3 were actually paid by the plaintiff himself to the lambardar or his representative on account of arrears. The other small sum of Rs. 35 odd seems to have been absorbed principally in the costs of the execution and registration of the deed. As the learned Judge observes, this small sum is negligible for the purpose of this claim. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover this sum of Rs. 900.

There only remains for consideration another point, namely, the rate of interest to be awarded to the plaintiff. It was pleaded in the written statement that the rate of interest was exorbitant and should in any case be reduced. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled this objection and held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover interest at the stipulated rate. The learned Judge in view of his other findings did not touch this question. He merely remarks that it was admitted by the plaintiff, who was the respondent before him, that the high rate of interest was partly due to famine conditions and partly also to the fact that the loan to the widow was a risky proceeding. The plaintiff himself did not go into the witness-box to explain the circumstances in which the rate of interest was fixed at 24 per cent. per annum, compoundable with yearly rests. No doubt the law on the subject of reducing the interest provided by a contract has been laid down in a long series of authorities. The general principle is that unless it can be shown that the plaintiff exercised undue influence within the meaning of that expression as defined in section 16 of the Contract Act, interest can be recovered at the full rate. It seems to me, however, that this general proposition is subject to certain exceptions, and my attention has been drawn to a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council which is to be found reported as Hurro Nath Rai Chowdhri v. Randhir Singh (1). That was also a case in which a creditor brought a suit against the reversioners to recover a sum which had been advanced by him to a Hindu widow while in possession. The bonds in the case before their Lordships stipulated for interest at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum. The learned Judges of the High Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to this high rate of interest, which they reduced to 12 per cent. Before their Lordships the objection was taken that the High Court ought not to have reduced the rate. As to this the observations of their Lordships are to be found at page 315 of the report. They are as follows:—

"Then comes the question—Was 12 per cent. a sufficient rate of interest? The widow was borrowing in a case of necessity. It was for the plaintiff to see whether there was really and fairly a ground of necessity. Was there a necessity to borrow at the rate of 18 per cent? That is a question to which he ought to have applied his mind and if it were unreasonable to suppose that the widow could not borrow the money at a less amount than 18 per cent. he ought not to have charged her at that rate."

It seems to me, therefore, that in view of these observations of their Lordships it was for the plaintiff to explain why he had fixed the rate at 24 per cent per annum compound interest. As the plaintiff did not go into the witness box to give his reasons why this rate was fixed, I consider myself entitled, in accordance with what is laid down in this judgment, to reduce the rate to the rate allowed by their Lordships, namely, 12 per cent.

The result is that I allow the appeal and give the plaintiff a decree of Rs. 200 with simple interest at the rate of 12 per cent. The usual sale decree will be prepared and the period allowed for payment will be six months from the date of this Court's decree. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court below.

Construction of documents—Company's Sicca rupees, whether mean rupees in current coin.

Where in a kabuliyat of 1850 by which a patni taluk was created, the rent reserved was stated to be "Company's Sicca rupees 96":

Held, that as the Calcutta Sicca rupee, though coined by the Company, had never become known as the "Company's Sicca rupee" the expression "Company's Sicca rupees" used in the kabuliyat must be regarded as ambiguous; so that the intention of the parties must be re-ascertained, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, such as the conduct of the parties, the date of the document, the stamp duty paid on the document, and a reference to current coin in a portion of the kabuliyat. [p. 110, col. 2.]

The history and origin of the term 'Sicca rupee' discussed. [p. 110, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 5th April 1916, affirming that of the Munsif of Lalbag, dated the 29th September 1915.

FACTS. The suit was for recovery of arrears of Patni rent. The Patni Taluk was created or confirmed by a Kabuliyat dated 12th Asar 1257, corresponding to 8th July 1850. The rent was stated to be "Company's Sicca Rs. 96". The stamp in the Kabuliyat was of Rs. 3, and it was stated in the body of the Kabuliyat that a stamp of Rs. 1 was paid for the Kabuliyat and a stamp of Rs. 2 for the Nazar. The plaintiffs and their predecessors had been realising rent at the rate of Rs. 96 in current coin. The plaintiffs now sued for Rs. 102 odd, the equivalent of Rs. 96 in Calcutta Sicca coin.

Babu Bipin Behary Ghosh (with him Babu Urukram Das Chackravarti), for the Appellant.—The question is whether the plaintiff should get rent at Rs. 96 in current coin or Rs. 102, the equivalent of Rs. 96 in Sicca coin.

The Kabuliyat was executed in 1850 and Sicca coin ceased to be legal tender from 1st January 1838. The word "Company's Sicca rupees" is ambiguous. There was no such thing as "Company's Sicca rupee" ever current. It must be either "Company rupees" or "Sicca rupees". From the date of the Kabuliyat (1850), which was long after the Sicca rupee ceased to be legal tender, it must be assumed that what was meant by "Company's Sicca rupees" was current coin and not Sicca coin. The stamp attached to the Kabuliyat makes it clear that what was meant was current coin, and not Sicca coin. A stamp of Rs. 3 (Rs. 1 for the Kabuliyat and Rs. 2 for the Nazar, the amount of which was Rs. 120) was attached to the Kabuliyat. If it was intended that rent should be paid in Sicca coin (the equivalent of Rs. 96 in Sicca coin being Rs. 102), the stamp payable would be Rs. 4 under Regulation X of 1829, the stamp law then in force. In the body of the Kabuliyat it is written that a stamp of Rs. 3 is attached, Rs. 1 for the Kabuliyat and Rs. 2 for the Nazar and there Rs. 3, the amount is written in current coin and there is no mention of Sicca coin.

The acceptance of rent from the defendant and his predecessors by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in current coin of Rs. 96 for a very long time shows that what was meant by the term "Company's Sicca rupees" in the Kabuliyat was current coin and not Sicca coin. Moreover, the plaintiffs and their predecessors having accepted rent at the rate of Rs. 96 in current coin, they are not entitled to claim rent at an enhanced rent.

The cases reported as Ram Saran Sing v. Gyan Sing (1), Ram Khelwan Singh v. Kumar Rai (2), Rameshar Koer v. Gobardhan Lal (3), Mir Tapurah Hossein v. Gopi Narayan (4) and Kamaleshwari Pershad v. Kanai Singh (5) do not apply in the present case.

Babu Sajimi Kanta Sinha (with him Babu D. N. Bagchi), for the Respondents. — Though the Kabuliyat is dated 8th July 1850, it appears from the Kabuliyat that the Patni Taluk was created long before that and Sicca coin ceased to be legal tender only in 1838. The plaintiffs were not in possession of the Kabuliyat and through mistake were realising rent at the rate of Rs. 96 in current coin, but they are entitled to claim rent at the rate given by the Kabuliyat converting the Sicca coin into current coin.

When Regulation X of 1829 was passed, the Sicca coin was legal tender. The stamp of Rs. 3 was attached to the Kabuliyat because it was not a new Kabuliyat but only replaced the old Kabuliyat, which was executed long ago and which was lost.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover arrears of Patni rent. The taluk was created or confirmed by a Kabuliyat dated 25th Assar 1257, corresponding with the 8th July 1850. The rent reserved is therein stated to be "Company's Sicca Rs. 96" and the question in controversy is whether the plaintiffs-landlords are entitled to Rs. 96 in current coin or the equivalent in current coin of 96 Sicca rupees.

The word Sikka or Sicca, meaning originally, it would seem, a die or stamp, came next to mean a stamped coin and more particularly the silver coinage of the Kings of Delhi. Lastly 'Sicca rupiya' became the name specifically given to the rupee coined by the East India Company from the year 1773 and bearing inscriptions denoting that it had been struck by King Shah Alam at Murshidabad in the 19th year of his reign. From Acts XVII of 1835 and XIII of 1836 it appears that this rupee being latterly coined only at the mint in Calcutta became known as the Calcutta Sicca rupee. The 1st of the afore-said Acts prohibited the further coinage of the Sicca rupee and introduced the coin to be denominated and thereafter known as "the Company's rupee." Under the second Act Sicca rupee ceased to be legal tender from the 1st of January 1838.

The question then is whether the rupee mentioned in this document of 1850 is the "Calcutta Sicca rupee" or the Company's rupee exclusively current after the year 1837. In the course of the argument we have been referred to the cases reported as Ram Saran Sing v. Gyan Sing (1), Ram Khelwan Singh v. Kumar Rai (2), Rameshar Koer v. Gobardhan Lal (3), Mir Tapurah Hossein v. Gopi Narayan (4) and Kamaleshwari Pershad v. Kanai Singh (5), but these cases do not help us. They merely determine that when the rent is fixed in Sicca rupees, the difference in value between the Sicca rupee and the Company's or current rupee is realisable as part of the rent and is not to be regarded as an Abwab. Here the question is which of the two coins was intended, and the difficulty is caused by the collocation of the two terms 'Company' and 'Sicca'. It does not appear that the 'Sicca' rupee though coined by the Company ever became known as the "Company's Sicca" and the 'Company's' rupee has always borne the special signification given to it by Act XVII of 1835.

The words "Company's Sicca" rupees must, therefore, be regarded as at best ambiguous and to ascertain the true intention of the parties we must look to the surrounding circumstances.

Of the earlier document referred to in the Kabuliyat we have no information and its date has not been ascertained. By the year 1850 Sicca rupee had long ceased to be legal tender. The stamp on the Kabuliyat is Rs. 3. Now if by Rs. 96 had been intended the equivalent of Rs. 96 Sicca in current coin, that is Rs. 102 6-8, then under Regulation X of 1829, (the Stamp Law then in force) Schedule A, Articles 28 to 31, the duty payable was Rs. 4. The reference, therefore, in the penultimate sentence of the Kabuliyat is clearly to

Rs. 96 in current coin. Lastly the principal plaintiff deposes that he succeeded to the property some 25 years before suit, and throughout that period realised Rs. 96 in current coin as the rent annually payable. He further admits that his predecessor also accepted rent at that rate. This course of conduct, the date of the document, the stamp duty paid, and the reference to current coin in the sentence referring to the Stamp Act lead us to the conclusion that in this case the rent annually payable is not the equivalent of 96 Sicca rupees, but is Rs. 96 in current coin.

To the extent thus indicated we decree this appeal and modify the decrees of the Courts below. Parties will have proportionate costs throughout. Interest on costs at 6 per cent.

A claim for the recovery of possession of trust property from a trespasser or from a transferee from a trustee is not within the scope of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a Court trying a suit under that section is not competent to bring before it under rule 3 or rule 10 (2) of Order I of the Code any person who is in possession of trust property either as a trespasser or as a transferee. Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 26th March 1915, sitting on the Original Side, removing defendant No. 1 from the position of Mutwalli and declaring the alienation to defendant No. 2 to be invalid and further declaring the latter to be trustee till the appointment of a new Mutwalli.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the action was brought by four plaintiffs whose names appear upon the record: the second and third are two sons of Abdur Rahman, who is the first defendant, and the first and the fourth are relations of Abdur Rahman, and the second defendant was a man called Gholam Mowlah, who was a purchaser of certain property from the first defendant. The purchase was effected by a deed which is dated the 12th June 1910; I need not read the deed in detail because it has been fully commented upon by Mr. Asghar, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, this morning:—It refers to certain property in Calcutta on a part of which stands a mosque; and Abdur Rahman, the vendor, in the conveyance refers to the fact that this property was his hereditary property, that his father and he himself have, generation after generation, in succession without anybody's objection all along for more than twelve years, been enjoying and possessing the proprietary rights thereof one after another and that no one else has any sort of right or claim thereto. Then he refers to the fact that he has got into necessitous circumstances and must sell. He says, "consequently, there is no other means left but to sell my aforesaid Calcutta properties, subject to the duties and responsibilities of the said mosque, and I cannot sell the same to any other purchaser than a religious Musalman of the Sunni sect. You (i.e., defendant No. 2) are a religious Musalman of the Sunni sect, and believing all my aforesaid statements you became desirous of purchasing the aforesaid property as proposed by me, and having fixed the value thereof at Rs. 3,000 I received from you yesterday," and so on, and he sells the property subject to all the aforesaid conditions, and says, "you, being malik in all my aforesaid rights and titles, shall continue all along to enjoy and possess the same, and shall exercise all sorts of proprietary rights. You shall maintain the mosque according to the custom prevailing and look after the same and shall perform all the acts and observe the festivals that are necessary for the Musalmans of the Sunni sect in connection therewith:" and, he refers to the different prayers, and then to the properties and says, "all these belong to me personally; no one else has any sort of right or claim thereto; you believing all these statements of mine and other statements mentioned above relating to my title agreed to and purchasedshould any one else purchase the aforesaid property from you, he shall also have to carry out the aforesaid conditions in respect of the mosque and you shall not be entitled to sell the aforesaid property to any one else who is not a Musalman of the Sunni sect."

Now, it is said that this was a trust property held by the first defendant Abdur Rahman as trustee, and that he had no right to sell the property in the way he did. The action was brought by the plaintiffs against these two defendants. The first defendant did not appear; two of the plaintiffs, as I have said, are his sons; the other two plaintiffs are his relations. It was apparently proved in evidence that they had very little connection with this mosque, that they did not live in Calcutta; one of them did not live there for fifteen years: and, without saying more, I agree with what the learned Counsel for the second defendant argued yesterday that there is ground for saying that their claim ought to be looked upon with great care. I do not want to say more than that, because I have not heard what Mr. Asghar might have said with regard to that matter in full detail, but there are certain facts, which, if I had been a Judge in the first instance, would have led me to investigate the bona fides of this claim with great care.

Now, the second defendant, it has been found by the learned Judge, was a bona fide purchaser: He made certain enquiries which were detailed to us yesterday by Mr. Das and I am not going to repeat them. The learned Judge said that if the defendant had made certain further enquiries he would, in all probability, have found that this was trust property, and the learned Judge has, therefore, come to the conclusion that the second defendant had what is called in law constructive notice, meaning thereby that if he had made these further enquiries to which the learned Judge refers, which, in his opinion, were reasonable enquiries, he would have found that there was a trust, and inasmuch as he did not make those reasonable enquiries, he must be taken to have been affected with notice. This is what was meant by the words 'constructive notice.' Therefore, that is the position of the parties.

Then, the claim is made and it is admitted under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. Now, the nature of the claim was this: As far as the first defendant Abdur Rahman was concerned, it is alleged that he had committed a breach of the trust by selling the property to the second defendant. It is asked that he should be removed from the position of trustee and that a new trustee should be appointed in his place. I think there were other prayers, but those were the main prayers as far as the first defendant was concerned.

As regards the second defendant, the essence of the claim against him was that he was a trespasser and that the property of which he was in possession under this purchase should be handed over to the new trustee who was to be appointed by the Court. It was in essence, as regards the second defendant, an action in ejectment of the second defendant from that property. It has been admitted by Mr. Asghar, the learned Counsel for the respondents, in the stress of argument that such a claim cannot be made in a suit which is instituted under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, as far as the claim for that relief is concerned, he cannot substantiate the part of the decree which carries out that claim. But he says that the second defendant is really in the position of a trustee, and because he is in the position of a trustee, the plaintiffs were entitled to have him kept before the Court as a party to the proceeding, in order that he may hear the decree which the learned Judge would make against the first defendant and in such a way that the second defendant might be bound by that decree. His argument is, first of all, that this is a trust for two reasons: First, the second defendant had a constructive notice of the trust. The learned Judge has found that he had constructive notice of this particular trust, and for the purpose of my judgment I will assume that this is a correct finding. Then he goes on to say that in addition to that the second defendant performed the duties, which the trustee of that trust would have to perform, and consequently he was a trustee de facto.

Now, I do not agree with the argument upon that point, because it is clear that any duties which he may have performed in connection with the mosque must be attributed to the covenant which he had made in the deed of conveyance of the 12th of June 1910. It is perfectly true that it is found that he had a constructive notice of the trust,—and it is so found because he did not make certain enquiries—but it is also true, as the learned Judge has found as a fact, that he was a bona fide purchaser and he did not in fact know that such a trust existed. Therefore, when we find in the deed that he personally undertook a covenant to the vendor that he would perform certain duties, because, as the vendor says: "I have been looking after and keeping supervision over the same (mosque) and doing all other acts in connection therewith at my own expense... and I cannot sell the property to anybody else than a person who is a religious Musalman of the Sunni sect,...and I would not sell it to you unless you undertake to perform the same kind of duties as I have been performing"—meaning thereby, not as a trustee, but, as he says, 'out of my own pocket and out of my own money,'—it is clear to me that such duties as may have been performed by the defendant No. 2 must be attributed to that personal covenant which he made in that deed, and not to the position of a trustee of this particular trust. Therefore, I do not think that he must be taken as acting as a trustee de facto. The argument which was put forward by Mr. Asghar on this point, therefore, fails.

Then his argument is that if he does not succeed there, he is entitled to bring to his aid Order I, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, which runs as follows: "All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise:" and, the learned Counsel says that under that rule, he is entitled to keep the second defendant before the Court, in order, as I have said before, that he might hear the declaration which would be made by the Court against the first defendant. I think the answer to that argument is the one which was given by Mr. Das yesterday, and it is this: inasmuch as the essence of the relief which was claimed by the plaintiff against the second defendant was ejectment, or, to be strictly accurate, recovery of possession of property, and inasmuch as it is admitted that this claim could not be brought under section 92, I fail to understand how Order I, rule 3, can be applied in aid, because it is only applicable for the purpose of preventing multiplicity of suits: and one way of testing it is this—the concluding words point to it; they are:—"Where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise." Once it is decided that the claim against the second defendant could not be instituted under section 92, it is clear to my mind that it is outside the power of the Judge to make use of Order I, rule 3, for joining the second defendant as a party to the proceedings under that section.

For these reasons, I think that this decree, so far as it affects the second defendant, must be set aside and the appeal, so far as that defendant is concerned, must be allowed with costs both of the Court of first instance and of this appeal. Against the first defendant the decree will stand and will be available to the plaintiffs for what it is worth.

WOODROFFE, J.—In my opinion the case is covered by the decisions in Budrez Dis Mukim v. Chomi Lal Johurry (1) and Bulh Singh Dulhuria v. Niradbiran Roy (2). It has doubtless been held in Sajetur Rija Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohur Dis Baishnav (3) that where there is a claim for administration of a trust which falls within the section, a claim to eject an alienee may be joined with it. But, in my opinion, that claim does not come within the scope of the section and it is open to the charge of misjoinder. That decision has been dissented from in the cases to which I have referred. The decision in Sajedur Raja Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohun Das Baishnav (3), not being a decision under the present Code, is not a decision which is binding upon us. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be decreed.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that this appeal must be allowed and the decree discharged in so far as it affects the appellant.

The suit was, in essence, of a composite nature. As against the first defendant, the alleged trustee, it was framed as one under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and appropriate reliefs were claimed against him. As against the second defendant, the transferee from the first defendant, the suit was in substance one for ejectment. In my judgment in the case of Budh Singh Dudhuria v. Niradbaran Roy (2) I held—on grounds which were fully stated then and need not be repeated now—that suits for recovery of possession of trust properties from third parties, for instance, from trespassers and from transferees from the trustees, were not within the scope of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which has been subsequently replaced by section 92 of the Code of 1908. If I may say so without impropriety, I have heard nothing urged in the course of the elaborate and careful argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondents which has in any way shaken my opinion. That view is in conformity with a long line of decisions in all the Indian High Courts. Amongst the cases in this Court reference may be made to Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (4), Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (1), Ayatannessa Bibi v. Kulper Khalifa (5). Amongst the cases in the Bombay High Court may be mentioned those of Lakshmanadas v. Ganpatrav (6), Vishvanath v. Rambhat (7), Kazi Hassan v. Sagun Balkrishna (8), Ghelabhai v. Uderam (9), Malhar Bhagvant Kulkarni v. Narsinh Krishna Majli (10) and Collector of Poona v. Bai Ohanchaltai (11). In the Allahabad High Court there is a distinct preponderance of judicial opinion in support of the same view, as is indicated by the decisions in Muhammad Abdullah Khan v. Kallu (12), Ghazoffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Husain (13), Jamaluddin v. Muftaba Husain (14) and Dasondhay v. Mohammad Abu Nasar (15). In the High Court of Madras the same view has been taken since 1880, as is clear from the decisions in Strixivasa Ayyangar v. Strinivasa Swami (16), Neti Ruma Jogiah v. Venkatacharulu (17), Chettikulam Prasanna Venkatachala Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (18), Asam Raghovulu Setty v. Pellati Sitamma (19) and Rangayya Naidu v. Chinnasamy Iyer (20). The cases in this Court, which support the contention of the respondents, are, so far as I have been able to investigate, only two, namely, Lutifunnissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi (21) and Sajedur Raja Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohun Das Baishnav (3); from these I respectfully dissent; they do not, in my opinion, give a correct exposition of the true intention of the Legislature in framing section 539 of the Code of 1882 and section 92 of the Code of 1908. I do not feel pressed by the argument based on Order 1, rule 3, and rule 10, sub-rule 2, mentioned in the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Asam Raghavulu Setty v. Pellati Sitamma (19), as they are of no real assistance to the respondents. Once it is held, as I think it must be held, that a suit for ejectment of a trespasser or of a transferee from a trustee is not within the scope of section 92, it follows as a necessary corollary that the Court is not competent to bring before the forum any such person under either of the two rules mentioned.

I am also unable to accept the contention of the respondents that the appellant was in the position of a constructive trustee. No doubt, he undertook to maintain the worship in the mosque; but this was not in furtherance of the trust which the plaintiffs seek to enforce against the first defendant; it was rather, as the Chief Justice has pointed out, in pursuance of the covenant contained in the conveyance from the first defendant to the second defendant.

In my opinion, the decree as against the second defendant cannot possibly be supported and must accordingly be discharged.

Appeal allowed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 52, 60—Mortgage—Redemption, suit for, by some of several mortgagors—Acquisition of portion of equity of redemption by mortgagee pending suit, effect of—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of—Plaintiff, whether can redeem whole property.

Where a mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property, the right of the owner of the other portion of the property to redeem the whole is not absolute. In such a case the right of redemption depends upon the will of the mortgagee. He can insist upon the mortgagor's seeking redemption of the entire mortgage; but if he acquires any portion of the mortgaged estate, he can in that case insist that the plaintiff shall not be allowed to redeem more than his own share of the mortgaged estate. [p. 116, col. 1.]

Where a mortgagee acquires a portion of the mortgaged property, pending a suit for redemption by some of several mortgagors, it cannot be said that by taking such a transfer he affects the rights of the plaintiffs under the decree or order which may be made in the suit. Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act has, therefore, no application to such a case, and the mortgagee can insist upon his right to confine the plaintiffs to a suit for redemption of their share of the mortgaged property only. [p. 116, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 23rd April 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Kaisarganj, dated the 6th February 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for redemption brought by the plaintiff-respondent Jokhan.

In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong and must be reversed.

The facts are very simple. On the 4th of November 1894 one Debi Din mortgaged a 4-annas share in certain immoveable property to one Har Bhajan. The mortgage was a mortgage by conditional sale. The mortgage money was Rs. 50 and the period of the mortgage was ten years. The mortgagee was put in possession, with a stipulation that he was to be allowed to enjoy the fruits of the trees in the groves which were mortgaged and was also to be allowed to appropriate dry timber. It was further agreed that interest on the mortgage money should accrue at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum. Debi Din died about the year 1900 and was succeeded by his two sons, Jokhan and Janki. Jokhan is the plaintiff in the present suit while Janki was impleaded as the defendant No. 3. The mortgagee has also died and is now represented by his son and grandson, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the appellants before me.

Jokhan sued for redemption of the entire mortgage. While the suit was pending the mortgagee-defendants took from Janki a conveyance of his 2-annas share in the mortgaged property and consequently it was urged in the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff was only entitled to redeem his own share. The Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal applied the provisions of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act to the case and held that the transfer made by

RAMADHIN v. JOKHAN.

Janki in favour of the 1st and 2nd defendants was, as he put it, null and void under this section and could not operate to prevent Jokhan claiming redemption of the entire property. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge allowed redemption of the entire 4-annas share upon payment of the principal sum of Rs. 50 plus Rs. 45 by way of interest. He refused to allow any post diem interest.

In appeal here two points are taken on behalf of the mortgagee appellants. It is said in the first place that the Subordinate Judge ought only to have allowed redemption of a 2-annas share and further that post diem interest ought to have been allowed. So far as section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is concerned, I think the Court was wrong in applying it in the present case. By the last clause of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act it is provided that "nothing in the section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except where a mortgagee, or if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of the mortgagor."

It is clear that in a case like the present the right of the owner of a portion of the mortgaged property to redeem the whole is not absolute. The right of redemption depends upon the will of the mortgagee. He can insist upon the mortgagor's seeking redemption of the entire mortgage, but if he acquires any portion of the mortgaged estate, he can in that case insist that the plaintiff shall not be allowed to redeem more than his own share of the mortgaged estate. Consequently, although, as in the present case, the mortgagee may acquire a portion of the equity of redemption pending the suit, it cannot be said that by taking a transfer he affects the right of the plaintiff under the decree or order which may be made in the suit. In other words, the right of the plaintiff not being absolute no case of prejudice can arise and I can see no reason why the mortgagee should not be allowed to take a transfer of a portion of the mortgaged property during the suit, and then insist upon his right to confine the plaintiff to a suit for redemption of his share of the mortgaged property only. If the decree of the lower Appellate Court be allowed to stand, the only result will be that the mortgagee will now be driven to bring a suit for redemption against the plaintiff-respondent for the purpose of obtaining possession of a 2-annas share of the mortgaged property. If the rights of the parties can be finally settled in one suit, there is no point in driving either of them to a second suit.

As for the question of interest the decision of the Subordinate Judge is certainly wrong. There is nothing in the language of the deed to show that it was the intention of the parties that interest should cease to run as soon as the period of the mortgage had expired. On the contrary, the reasonable and proper construction is that both parties intended that interest should continue to accrue up to the time of redemption. The Subordinate Judge seems to think that the mortgagee was not entitled to claim post diem interest, because, if he were, he would gain an advantage by making delay in bringing his suit for foreclosure. The answer to this is that no matter how long the bringing of the foreclosure suit is delayed, all that the mortgagee can get in the event of foreclosure taking place is the property itself, whatever may be the amount of the mortgage debt. On the other hand the plaintiff could easily have stopped the running of interest by bringing his suit immediately after the expiration of the period of the mortgage. The case-law on the subject is very clear and is laid down in a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1).

The result is that I allow the appeal. A fresh decree will be prepared declaring the right of the plaintiff Jokhan to redeem 2 annas share of the property upon payment of one half of the mortgage debt. Interest at the contract rate will be allowed up till the date fixed for payment. The office will prepare a redemption decree in accordance with the terms of Order XXXIV, rule 7, and a period of six months will be allowed to the plaintiff for redemption. In case redemption is not made, the decree will order that the plaintiff's right to redeem will be barred. As regards costs the plaintiff will be allowed proportionate costs

A religious office such as that of a khadim or mutwalli is not capable of being mortgaged. The transfer of such an office is opposed not only to the Muhammadan Law but also to public policy.

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Burdwan, dated the 23rd of December 1915, affirming those of the Munsif, Additional Court at Kalna, dated the 23rd of December 1914.

Mr. K. Ahmel and Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—These two appeals are preferred against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 23rd December 1915, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Kalna. The two cases are these:—In the suit out of which Second Appeal No. 823 arises, the plaintiff sued for a declaration that a religious office along with the endowment that went therewith was not liable to be mortgaged by the person who had at the time been holding the office, and, in the other case, namely, the suit out of which Second Appeal No. 775 arises, the plaintiff sought to enforce a mortgage that had been granted by a former holder of the office. It appears that there is a Muhammadan shrine dedicated to a certain Peer to which the Muhammadans of the District are accustomed to resort for religious purposes; and, for the purposes of the upkeep of what is called the asthana and for the suitable performance of the necessary ceremonies and observances that take place in the shrine, persons are required to be employed and their remunerations for the duties they perform are met by the persons who resort to the place, and apparently the way in which these various khadims or mutwallis are remunerated is by allowing them to appropriate the offerings received during a particular number of days. An office like this is not capable of being mortgaged, whether it is in the Muhammadan religion, or in any other religion. For the performance of these public duties, the officers are remunerated by salaries or other suitable forms of remuneration and these offices are not capable of being mortgaged. In addition to this, in the present case, there is another difficulty, if the office can be sold or brought to sale either by voluntary deed of sale or upon bankruptcy or insolvency, the person who would take charge of this shrine might not belong to the Muhammadan religion and might be a person professing some other religion altogether. That obviously is opposed not only to the Muhammadan religion but also to public policy. I think the learned Judge was quite right, when he came to the conclusion that this office was incapable of being transferred. The present appeals, therefore, fail and must be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 144, 161—Attachment of village for non-payment of jama—Government, whether can levy assessment from rent-free grantee.

A village was settled by the Government with the talukdar and a jama was fixed on the whole of the village. Subsequently, the village was attached under section 144 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code for non-payment of the jama and an assessment was levied under section 160 of the Code. The plaintiffs, who held lands rent-free under the talukdar, contended that they were not liable to pay the assessment:

Held, that the fact that the plaintiffs held lands rent-free from the talukdar did not affect the right of Government to assess the lands, inasmuch as the talukdar had no power to free any lands from liability to pay assessment to the Government. [p. 120, col. 1; p. 121, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 64 of 1914.

The appeal was heard on the 14th December 1916 by Sir Basil Scott, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Heaton, when their Lordships remanded certain issues to the trial Court by the following

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this and the cognate suits are of considerable importance, and they have been disposed of by the learned Judge without any evidence being recorded, although the pleadings indicate that the parties are at issue on various questions of fact. We are of opinion that it is essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits that certain issues of fact should be gone into after evidence has been recorded. We, therefore, frame with the assistance of the Pleaders of the parties the following issues and refer the same for trial to the lower Court, directing that such additional evidence as may be required be taken, and that the Court should try the issues and return the evidence to this Court with its findings and reasons before the commencement of the summer vacation:—

(1) By whom was the attachment levied, and under what section or sections of the Land Revenue Code?

(2) Is the Talukdari Settlement Officer a duly appointed agent of the Collector within the meaning of sections 144, 159 and 160 of the Land Revenue Code?

(3) Whether the attachment was levied on the whole of the village, including the lands in suit, or on a share of it? If the latter, on what share?

(4) Whether the Udhad Jama was fixed on the whole of the village, including the lands in suit, or on a share of it? If the latter, on what share?

(5) Whether the plaintiffs or their predecessors were not merely grantees of the lands in suit from the present Talukdar of Badalpur or his predecessors?

(6) If the plaintiffs or their predecessors were grantees from the Talukdar, whether the grants to them were prior or subsequent to the fixing of the lump assessment?

(7) If the plaintiffs were proved to be such grantees, whether the defendant was entitled to levy a rate on the lands held by them sufficient to make up the deficit in Government revenue as claimed?

(8) Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any, and if so, what relief?

The stay order to continue.

After the finding of the District Judge the appeal was again heard by Beaman and Heaton, JJ.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The plaintiffs are land-holders in the village of Badalpur in the Kaira District and they sued for an injunction to restrain the Collector from acting as he proposes to do by way of levying assessment from them. The Talukdari Settlement Officer gave them notice to this effect dated the 20th May 1913. Their case is that they hold their lands rent-free. The defendant, who originally was the Talukdari Settlement Officer and who has now been replaced by the Collector, maintained that the village of Badalpur had been attached under the powers conferred by section 144 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code and that in virtue of section 160 of that Code he had power to levy assessment on the lands of the plaintiffs. The District Court decided the case in favour of the defendant and the plaintiffs appealed to this Court. The evidence at that stage was so extremely scanty that eventually this Court found itself unable to decide the appeal and remanded eight issues to be determined by the District Judge. Those issues have been found on in a sense adverse to the plaintiffs, who again appear as appellants in this Court.

The first thing we have to determine is the nature of the agreement or settlement for this village of Badalpur. It must have been made in the early part of the last century but there is no document relating to it, and there are no Kabaliyats signed by the Talukdars of the village.

TULLA SOBHARAM PANDYA v. COLLECTOR OF KAIRA.

We have not even an extract from the register of Talukdars. There is mention made of the Mehwasi villages, of which Badalpur is one, in Government official correspondence, from which extracts are filed; of the years 1821 (Exhibits 37-8); 1822 (Exhibit 39); and 1823 (Exhibit 40). Then we have an extract from a Jamabandi statement of 1821-22 (Exhibit 41) and Kalambandi of 1828 (Exhibit 18). We have also general historical knowledge to go by. We know that the settlements or agreements for Mehwasi villages were made with the Mehwasi Chiefs or Heads of the villages and were usually made for the village as a whole in each case and were not made for any particular lands. The payment due for each village was annual, was a fixed lump sum or substantially fixed in amount (there may be small variations from year to year) and was regarded as jama or land revenue, though based on the amount of tribute which the Chief formerly paid and not on an estimate of assessable lands.

The evidence in the case indicates, so far as it goes, that the settlement or agreement for Badalpur was of the normal kind: that it was for the whole village and for a fixed annual payment for which the Mehwasi Chief of the village was responsible. Were it otherwise, there would be definite evidence of it forthcoming, as is to be expected where there is a variation from the normal.

The learned Pleader for the plaintiff-appellant challenged this conclusion, but the only evidence or circumstance in the case on which he could base any argument of value is the Kalambandi, Exhibit 18. This is a statistical statement prepared by the village authorities in reply to a set of questions sent them by some Government officer: the kind of thing that is usual in a newly acquired territory, where the Government desires to inform itself of the condition and resources of the country. It shows amongst other things that only about one-sixth part of the land in the village paid either vaje or vero to the Chief or Talukdar; the other five-sixths paid nothing. This information, though it may be of great value to the plaintiffs in resisting any demand the Talukdars might make on them, has no bearing on the nature of the settlement or agreement between the Government and the Talukdars. The Government recognised the existing or traditional position of the Mehwasi Chiefs provided they paid the annual jama; it was no part of the understanding or of the policy of the Government to concern themselves with the internal arrangements or economy of the Mehwasi villages. This Kalambandi, therefore, is found on examination to be of no value to the plaintiffs, for it does not give any indication of a state of affairs in any way incompatible with the ordinary type of settlement or agreement.

The plaintiffs have also argued that they were the original owners of the village and certain witnesses depose that there is a tradition in the village to that effect. It may be that there is such a tradition, but that it is well-founded there is no reason to suppose and that it has any bearing on the case is not apparent.

Again, the plaintiff argues that he holds and always has held his lands rent-free. That again may be conceded and so long as the management of the village remained with the Talukdar, the plaintiff could not be called on to pay anything. But unfortunately the payment of the jama by the Talukdar became irregular and the village was attached by order of the Collector made under section 144 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Exhibit 49). Thereafter, section 160 of that Code became applicable. This appears to be beyond question. Now, section 160 when applied to a Talukdari village (see section 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1888), runs as follows: "The lands of any village or share of a village so attached shall be unaffected by the acts of the superior holder or of any of the sharers, or by any charges or liabilities subsisting against such lands, or against such superior holders or sharers as are interested therein, so far as the public revenue is concerned, but without prejudice in other respects to the rights of individuals; and the Collector or the agent so appointed shall be entitled to manage the lands attached, and to receive all rents and profits accruing therefrom to the exclusion of the superior holder or any of the sharers thereof; until the Collector restores the said superior holder to the management thereof." This leaves it open to Government to levy the jama from all the lands of the village. Their powers are ample, for section 45 of the Code expressly recognises the right of Government to levy assessment on all lands which are not excepted under the provisions of any special contract with Government or any law for the time being in force. There is neither a special contract nor a law which prohibits Government in the circumstances of this case from levying an assessment on the plaintiffs' lands. This supplies the answer to a further argument urged on behalf of the plaintiffs, which is that they held their lands absolutely rent-free, and no one, not even the Government, can lawfully demand assessment from them. They do not so hold them from the Government: that is clear, for if they did, there would be some Sanad or some record of the matter. If they hold them rent-free from the Talukdar, that does not affect the right of Government to assess the lands; for the Talukdar has no power to free any lands from liability to pay assessment to the Government; only the Government can do that.

The same conclusion, that it is lawful for Government to demand assessment from the plaintiffs, can be reached by a consideration of section 24 of Bombay Act VI of 1885.

In reality there is no great hardship involved to the plaintiffs. The Government will only gather in the agreed jama, which must apparently be light if it is distributed over the village as a whole.

It is unnecessary after this to state in detail the findings on the issues which were sent down. That which is the most important is No. 4: "Whether the Udhad Jama was fixed on the whole of the village, including the lands in suit, or on a share of it? If the latter, on what share?" I find that the Udhad Jama was fixed on the whole of the village and as I have said, it follows from the operation of sections 144 and 160 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code that the Government have the right to levy assessment on the lands of the plaintiffs in this village. Therefore I think that the decree of the District Judge dismissing the plaintiffs' suit should be maintained and that this appeal should be dismissed.

BEAMAN, J.—I have asked my learned brother to deliver the judgment of the Court in this case, because he was a party to the remand order and fully acquainted with the litigation in all its earlier stages. I have only to add in agreement with what has just been said that, in my opinion, there can be no doubt but that the settlement made in the earlier part of the nineteenth century was made with a Rathor Rajput, whom I will call the Talukdar, on behalf of the whole village. Such was the nature generally of all these settlements. Their object was to maintain to some extent at any rate the seigniorial rights and privileges of the petty Chieftains and to recognise them as proprietors of their respective villages subject only to the payment of the Udhad Jama. In such circumstances the Government had no concern with the internal economy of the village. Provided that the Talukdar duly paid the stipulated Udhad Jama, he might, as far as Government was concerned, gratify his pride or generosity by granting as much of village land as he chose rent-free, or upon any other terms that pleased him, to inferior holders; but such grants could never be taken as superseding the paramount obligation of the village as a whole to pay through the recognised Chieftain the jama due to the Government. That is a primary charge, and, in my opinion, it cannot, upon any known theory, be found to have been settled with the Talukdar upon this or that piece of land in the village; but it is settled with the Talukdar upon the village as a whole; the price, that is to say, at which he is to be recognised by the Government as a Chieftain and proprietor of the village. It is possible that at the time that such settlements were made the recognised Talukdar or his predecessor may already have given away much of the village land rent-free to privileged classes, such as Brahmins, Bhats and Charans. That, however, in my opinion, does not affect the principle upon which this case has to be decided. That principle is that, apart from all other considerations and private arrangements within the village itself, the village must contribute the agreed jama to Government. Otherwise we might have the extreme case put by the learned Judge below of the Government consenting to recognise a Chieftain as proprietor of a village upon payment of an annual jama and the Chieftain then giving away every inch of land in the village rent free and declining to pay Government one rupee of the agreed jama. In such a case it is not to be supposed that Government ought to or would recognise such alienations. The Government would then, in my opinion, be entitled to say that since the Talukdar had repudiated his obligations, the village as a whole, failing anyone coming forward to represent it, must certainly be made to pay the Government jama. And that is in effect what has occurred in the present case. The Jama has not been paid, and according to the Kilambandi a very large proportion of the village lands have already been given away and were not in the Talukdar's own estimate liable to contribute to the jama. That, however, was a matter with which Government, as far as I can see, had nothing to do. As soon as the Talukdar declared himself unable to keep his treaty obligations, the Government, in my opinion, had a perfect right to put in force the provisions of sections 144 and 160 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code for the single purpose of obtaining from the village the amount of jama which was due from it. Such a mode of contribution would not press nearly as heavily upon these inferior holders of rent-free lands as would the resumption of the village and the levy of assessment after making revenue survey, and it is quite clear that one or the other of these modes would have to be adopted. It cannot be seriously, I think, argued that Government intended to make free presents of these villages to anyone to whom the Talukdars in a fit of generosity might grant the whole of their lands rent-free. It is upon this principle, I think, that this and all cognate cases must be decided.

I am in entire concurrence with the judgment of my learned brother and the decree he proposes to make.

We treat this and the other six appeals, viz., First Appeals Nos. 233, 234, 235, 236, 238 and 239 of 1915, as consolidated for the purpose of costs, and dismiss them with costs, one set of costs payable by all the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Money-decree for mortgage amount against heirs of mortgagor paid off by one heir, effect of—Charge, redemption of.

A money-decree for the amount of a mortgage-debt obtained against the heirs of the mortgagor was paid off by one of the heirs, the first defendant, who remained in possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the other heirs. Subsequently his creditors obtained decrees against him and attached this property and sold it in execution. One of the other heirs of the mortgagor then sued to redeem the property impleading his co-heirs and the auction-purchasers as parties to the suit:

Held, (1) that the transaction between the first defendant and his co-heirs amounted to a joint charge given by the latter to the former on their joint undivided share of the property in respect of the amount of their share in the debt, and that the plaintiff being one of the co-heirs on whose behalf the joint charge was made was entitled to redeem it; [p. 122, col. 1.]

(2) that the charge was not an interest in the land, and that, therefore, all that the auction-purchasers obtained by their purchase was the share of the 1st defendant in the mortgaged property. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Mr. Naidu, for the Appellant.

Mr. Halkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues to redeem certain land on payment of Rs. 550. The plaintiff and the defendants No. 4, 5 and 6 are the surviving heirs of their deceased widowed mother Ma Si Li, who had mortgaged the land to one Maung Te. Maung Te obtained a money-decree against Ma Si Li's heirs for the amount of the mortgage-debt. The 1st defendant, Tun Gyaw, paid off that debt and with the consent of the heirs remained in possession of the land. Subsequently Tun Gyaw's creditors obtained decrees against him and attached this land and sold it in execution. Maung Myo, 2nd defendant, is the auction-purchaser and the 3rd defendant is apparently purchaser from Maung Myo. The Divisional Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown that Rs. 550 was the amount of the charge. Mr. Naidu for the plaintiff appellant contends that if Tun Gyaw was not a mortgagee he had a charge on the land which the plaintiff is entitled to redeem. Tun Gyaw

was the son-in-law of Ma Si Li and at that time was apparently entitled to a share as a co-heir through his deceased wife. Tun Gyaw was clearly not a mortgagee. The transaction between Tun Gyaw and the co-heirs was oral and amounted to a joint charge given by the other co-heirs to him on their joint undivided share of the land in respect of the amount of their share in the debt. The charge would not be an interest in the land and, therefore, did not pass to the 2nd defendant, who bought 1st defendant's interest in the land. All that the 2nd and 3rd defendants obtained by their respective purchases would be the share of Tun Gyaw, if any, in the land and such share was not subject to the charge. The plaintiff being one of the co-heirs, on whose behalf the joint charge was made, is entitled to redeem it, he having made the other co-heirs parties to the suit. The plaintiff in his plaint asks to redeem by a payment of Rs. 550: he states that Tun Gyaw paid off the mortgage-debt by a payment of Rs. 550; but he does not admit in his plaint that Tun Gyaw was in the position of a co-heir. If Tun Gyaw was entitled (through his wife) to a share in Ma Si Li's estate, he would be liable for a corresponding share of the mortgage-debt; and the charge he would then have would be the amount he advanced for the benefit of the other co-heirs when paying off the mortgage debt, i. e., Rs. 550 less his own share. It must first be ascertained what share (if any) Tun Gyaw had in this land, in order to ascertain what the remainder was which formed the subject-matter of the charge. If Tun Gyaw was not entitled to any share in Ma Si Li's estate, he would have only a charge on the land (Rs. 550), and the 2nd and 3rd defendants would have bought nothing. If Tun Gyaw was entitled to (say) a 1/5th share in Ma Si Li's estate, the charge would be Rs. 440 on an undivided 4/5ths share in the land; and the 2nd and 3rd defendants would have bought an undivided 1/5th share in the land. I would set aside the decree of the Divisional Court and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, to the District Court to try the following issues and to determine the case accordingly:—

(1) What share (if any) had Tun Gyaw in this land?

(2) What was the joint share of the co-heirs of Ma Si Li, other than Tun Gyaw, in this land?

(3) What was the amount of the charge given to Tun Gyaw by such co-heirs on their joint share in this land?

The answers to the 2nd and 3rd issues will depend upon the decision of the 1st issue.

Upon paying off the amount of the charge (to be ascertained under issue 3), the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for possession of the undivided share to be ascertained under issue 2. The share to be ascertained under issue 1 will be the interest which the 2nd defendant bought.

Under Order XXXIV, rule 15, the decree should direct possession to be given to the plaintiff of the undivided share (to be ascertained under 2nd issue) upon his paying into Court the amount of the charge (to be ascertained under the 3rd issue), which amount Tun Gyaw will be at liberty to withdraw.

Costs throughout will abide the final result, i. e., the plaintiff will receive as against the first three defendants a share of his costs in all Courts proportioned to the share of the land of which possession is ultimately decreed to him.

Decree set aside; Case sent back.

Section 9 of the Limitation Act applies to, and makes no exception in favour of, alien enemies who are prevented from suing in consequence of a declaration of war [p. 124, col. 1.]

The suspension of an alien enemy's right to sue is a "disability" within the meaning of the section. [p. 123, col. 2.]

The word "disability" in section 9 of the Limitation Act means want of legal ability. It is different from "inability" to sue. [p. 123, col. 2.]

Statutes of Limitation are in their nature strict and inflexible and are not susceptible of equitable construction. [p. 124, col. 1.]

The Official Liquidator of a Bank cannot be looked upon as an agent of the Bank. He is an officer of the Crown whose rights depend upon the terms of his appointment. [p. 124, col. 2; p. 125, col. 1.]

Section 15 of the Limitation Act relates to injunctions or orders of Court, and not to royal proclamations which prevent the institution of suits by alien enemies. [p. 125, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit which has been instituted by the Official Liquidator on behalf of the plaintiff Bank. The Bank, which is a German Bank, was closed on or about the 4th August 1914 immediately upon the declaration of War between England and Germany. This Liquidator was appointed on the 22nd December 1914, but the terms of appointment did not give him express power to sue. He was by that order authorised "to liquidate the assets", which can hardly be said to include the right to sue, but by an order made on the 1st November 1915 express power was given to him to sue and this suit was instituted on 9th May 1918. It is based on four on-demand promissory notes, one dated 4th June 1914, another dated 11th June 1914 and two notes dated 30th June 1914, and would, therefore, be barred if the ordinary rule of limitation applied. It is argued on behalf of the defendant that time began to run against the plaintiff Bank from the dates of promissory notes, and that under section 9 of the Limitation Act the time having once begun to run the subsequent disability or inability of the plaintiff to sue did not stop it. It is claimed, however, on behalf of the plaintiff Bank that inasmuch as the Bank could not sue after the declaration of war, and also inasmuch as the Official Liquidator could not sue until express power was given to him on the 1st November 1915, the period between 4th August 1914 and 1st November 1915 ought to be allowed to the plaintiff and should be excluded. This raises a novel point so far as this Court is concerned. If section 9 of the Limitation Act is applicable to this case, there can be no question that the suit is barred. The question is, was there a subsequent "disability" or "inability", so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, to sue? The expression "inability" does not occur in the Limitation Act except in this section, and so far as "disability" is concerned section 6 gives certain cases of disability, but there is no definition of the term. "Disability" means want of legal ability. It is different from "inability" to sue, and I think I ought to accept the interpretation which has been put upon these terms in Pooroo Chunder Ghose v. Sassoon (1) and Jivraj v. Babaji (2). It is argued, however, that an alien's right to sue is suspended in consequence of the war and revives on the restoration of peace, and, therefore, it cannot be construed as "disability." I have very carefully considered the matter and find on reference to various cases that the suspension of such right is looked upon as a "disability". In the case of Robinson & Co. v. Mannheim Insurance Co. (3) the learned Judge refers to the "disability of an alien enemy to sue" (page 160).* I also find in Porter v. Freudenberg (4) that the expression "disability" is used in connection with an alien enemy's right to sue. In De Wahl v. Braune (5) Martin, B., speaks of an alien enemy being under "disabilities." In some other cases the expression "personal disability to sue" is used. It, therefore, appears to me that the suspension of the right comes within the meaning of the expression "disability". In Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines Ltd. (6) Lord Davey speaks of the plaintiff's "inability" to sue, but it makes no difference whether it is "disability" or "inability" as section 9 covers both. If that is so, I am constrained to hold that section 9 does apply to a case of this character. Statutes of Limitation are in their nature strict and inflexible and as early as Luchmee Buxh Roy v. Runjeet Ram Panday (7) the Privy Council held that it was not susceptible, of equitable construction. In the case of Mohummud Buhadoor Khan v. Collector of Bareilly (8) a question came up relating to Act IX of 1859 in respect of limitation affecting claims against the property of rebels forfeited to the Crown. The Privy Council held that the Limitation Act could not be construed as implying any saving with regard to persons under disabilities. It was argued that a saving with regard to persons under disabilities must be taken to be by equitable construction implied in the clause which came up for construction. Their Lordships thought it impossible that any Court could add to the Statute that which the Legislature had not done. It was also argued in that case that the disabilities referred to in the General Limitation Act XIV of 1859 ought to be understood as being incorporated in Act IX of 1859, but their Lordships also held against such contention. The result is that section 9 must be construed according to its plain meaning and I cannot either add to it or substitute anything for it. The section, when it was enacted, did not apparently contemplate a case of this character. If it is a case of omission I cannot supply it, it is for the Legislature. I can only construe the Statute as it stands. It makes no exception in the case of alien enemies. In America, however, in some of the State Courts and in the United States Courts an important exception to the rule appears to have been adopted, which although not within the letter is said to be within the spirit of the Statutes of the several States and their saving clauses, namely, that the Statute of Limitations does not run during a period of civil war as to matters in controversy between citizens of the opposing belligerents. This exception is pre-dictated upon the ground that the Courts are not open to belligerents. In some cases cited in Wood on Limitation a "disability" happening by inevitable necessity appears to have been recognised as constituting an exception to the Statute of Limitations though not specified therein, but it also appears that the rule is not allowed to extend beyond necessity arising from war or death (Wood on Limitation, Vol. II, page 1136, 4th Edition, note to section 242). In the case of De Wahl v. Braune (5) [(1856) 25 L. J. Exch. 343] Lord Bramwell was of opinion that the Statute would run even when there was disability on account of war in the case of an alien enemy. No doubt the observation is obiter and in another report of the same case 1 H. & N. 178 (5) the passage does not appear, but there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the report which contains the passage, and although a great many years have elapsed since then, no different view appears to have been taken by any Court in England. Some text-writers have adopted that view and some others have taken a different view but it is unnecessary to refer to them. My attention was also called to an article in the Law Quarterly Review, Vol. XX, page 168-169, based upon some American cases which I have not had the opportunity of considering. In Beckford v. Wade (9) it was held that though the Court was shut up in time of war so that no original causes could be sued out, the Statute of Limitations continued to run. I find that case was cited by the Madras Court in support of its decision in Kambiniani Javaji Subbarajulu Nayanivaru v. Uddighiri Venkataraya Chetty (10). Even before Beckford v. Wade (9) the same was held. See Frideaux v. Webber (11) and Bynions case (1667) cited in Hall v. Wybourn (12). I come to the conclusion that the time sought to be excluded cannot be allowed under the Act as it at present stands, and, therefore, the suit must be held barred.

The Official Liquidator cannot be looked upon as an agent of the plaintiff Bank.

RAM ADHIN v. RAM LOT.

He is an officer of the Crown whose rights depend upon the terms of his appointment. His right to sue is not derived from the Bank. No explanation has been given why the suit could not have been instituted within time. He was appointed long before the suit was barred. There is no explanation of the extraordinary delay. I think the suit must be dismissed with costs as of a motion including the defendant's costs of entering appearance.

Section 15 of the Limitation Act was mentioned as saving limitation in this case, but it did not appear to me to be strongly relied upon. It relates to injunctions or orders of Court, not royal proclamations. No doubt declaration of war prevented commercial intercourse between the parties but it can hardly be treated as covered by the section. Possession of the plaintiff Bank was taken by the Government. The remedy of the Bank is suspended but as it will revive when the war will end, I think the Statute of Limitations should provide for such cases.

Suit dismissed.

An order dismissing an appeal for default is not a decree within the meaning of the definition of that word contained in the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. [p. 127, col. 2.]

Where an appeal was dismissed for default under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882:

Held, that the only decree which could be executed was the decree of the original Court and that limitation for execution of the decree must be taken to have begun to run from the date of the original decree, and not from the date of the order dismissing the appeal from that decree for default. Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 22nd November 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 3rd July 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokara Nath Misra and Babu Basudev Lal, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an appellate order of the District Judge of Fyzabad dismissing an application for execution of decree made by Ram Adhin, the appellant, on the ground that it was barred by limitation under the provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that the decree-holder obtained this decree on the 27th of September 1904 against Matadin, who is now represented by the respondents to this appeal.

Matadin went in appeal to the Court of the District Judge. A date was fixed for hearing of the appeal but the hearing was adjourned till the 29th of March 1905. On that date Matadin himself did not appear in Court. He was, however, represented by a Pleader. This gentleman informed the Court that he had received no instructions from his client and was not in a position to argue the case on his behalf. The result was that an order was passed by the learned District Judge dismissing the appeal for default. A formal order was prepared in the shape of a decree. No costs were, however, awarded to the respondent in consequence of the dismissal. After this, applications for execution were made from time to time by the decree holder and finally we have a fresh application which was made on the 6th of March 1917.

The Court of first instance held that this application was within time as the period of 12 years' limitation provided by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure ran from the 29th of March 1905, the date upon which the judgment-debtor's appeal had been dismissed for default by the District Judge.

RAM ADHIN v. RAM LOT.

This order has been reversed in appeal by the present District Judge. He has held that limitation ran from the date of the original decree, namely, the 27th of September 1904. He has held that the order of the District Judge dated the 29th of March 1905 was not a decree; and that consequently it could not be contended that limitation ran from that date on the principle that the decree of the Appellate Court is the decree which has to be executed. The learned Judge has pointed out quite correctly that under the definition of the term "decree" contained in the present Code of Civil Procedure an order of dismissal for default is not a decree. The question, therefore, which he had to consider was whether or not under the language of the former Code (Act XIV of 1882) the order of the 29th March 1905 was or was not a decree. He held that it was not; and in coming to this conclusion he relied upon the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 12 A. L. J. Reports at page 624 [Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1)]. This case is also reported in Indian Law Reports 36 Allahabad 350.

The case for the decree-holder appellant here is that the decision of the Court below is wrong and that the learned Judge was in error in relying upon the judgment to which I have just referred. It is pointed out that in that case their Lordships were dealing with an order passed in accordance with the Rules of Practice of the Privy Council, and it is contended, and I think rightly, that the judgment in question cannot be deemed to apply directly to cases which are decided in Courts in India under a totally different procedure. In connection with this argument I may refer to another judgment of their Lordships to be found at page 284 of the same volume of the Allahabad Series [Batuk Nath v. Musammal Munni Dei (2)]. With regard to the later case to which the learned Judge refers, I adjourned the hearing of this appeal for the purpose of obtaining a certified copy of the order which was passed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It seems clear the judgment in Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (1) was delivered with reference to the special rules of procedure contained in an Order of Council dated the 26th of June 1873. Similarly in an earlier case reported at page 284 of the same volume [Batuk Nath v. Musammal Munni Dei (2)] the order which their Lordships were interpreting had been passed under another Order in Council dated the 15th of June 1853. It seems, therefore, that these judgments of their Lordships cannot be treated as direct authority for the proposition that an order dismissing an appeal for default under the provisions of the old Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) is not a decree, for, as I have already observed, their Lordships were not in either of those cases discussing the provisions of that Code.

It was admitted in the course of arguments that under the provisions of the old law there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an order of dismissal for default was a decree, and I have been referred by the learned Counsel for the appellant to a number of decisions on the point. The learned Counsel for the appellant was not able to refer me to any authority of this Court which is directly in point. He cited two cases, namely, Mohammad Husain v. Mohammad Yusuf (3) and Raghunath v. Farkhund Ali (4). In the former case the judgment deals with the effect of an order passed in a case where an appeal was withdrawn. It certainly was not decided in that case that such an order was a decree. On the contrary, the point under consideration was one of limitation and the Article of the Schedule which was being considered was an Article dealing with a period of limitation running from the date of a "decree or order." It was observed in the judgment that if the order of the Appellate Court was not a "decree", it was certainly an "order" finally disposing of the appeal. Similarly in Raghunath v. Farkhund Ali (4) the matter for decision was a question of limitation with reference to the provisions of Article 179 of the Limitation Act.

RAM ADHIN v. RAM LOT.

There again it was not decided whether the order in question was a decree or merely an order, indeed it was not necessary for the Court to decide this point. I have examined the other cases to which the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred me. It is obvious that a great many of them cannot be regarded as authority for the proposition that under the Code of 1882 an order dismissing an appeal for default was a decree. For example in the case reported as Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (5) it seems to have been assumed that an order of an Appellate Court dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree. But the question which was before the Court in that case was, whether or not the order which the Appellate Court had passed amounted to an affirmation of the decree of the Court of first instance. The discussion arose in connection with an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty; and having regard to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to this right of appeal it is clear that an appeal may lie either from a decree or order. It was not necessary, therefore, for the Judges to decide whether or not the order they had before them in that case was a decree. It certainly was an order. Similarly in another case of the Allahabad Court reported as Muhammad Razi v. Karbalai Bibi (6) it was assumed that an order declaring an appeal to have abated was in effect an affirmation of the decree of the Court below. There the question was one of limitation, and clearly the period of limitation ran from the date of the "order or decree." It seems to have been assumed that the order declaring the appeal to have abated was a decree. On the other hand the decision of the Allahabad Court in Pohkar Singh v. Gopal Singh (7) seems to have assumed that an order dismissing an appeal for default was not a decree. In the case reported as Ramchandra Pandurang Naik v. Madhav Purushottam Naik (8) it was held by one of the learned Judges that the order of an appellate Court dismissing an appeal for default was a decree under section 2 of Act XIV of 1882. The learned Judge who delivered this opinion held that such an order was an adjudication adverse to the appellant's right to have his appeal heard, and decided the appeal. The other learned Judge who was a party to the judgment declined to express any opinion on this point. This opinion seems to have been followed in a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Radha Nath Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (9).

There being no authority of this Court to bind me in dealing with this question, I feel myself at liberty to decide the matter for myself with reference to the language in which the definition of the term "decree" was expressed in the Code of 1882. That definition read as follows:— "Decree means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court when such adjudication so far as regards the Court expressing it decides the suit or appeal." After much consideration I have come to the conclusion that an order passed under the former Code by which an appeal was dismissed for default was not a decree within the meaning of the Code, and in coming to this conclusion I am fortified by the opinion of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court to be found in a recent judgment reported as Syam Mandal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (10). At pages 959* and 960* of the report the learned Judges who delivered the judgment of the Bench observe as follows:—

"It is indisputable that the original decree is merged in the appellate decree whether the latter confirms, amends, or reverses the original decree, and it is the appellate decree alone which can be executed; see the authorities collected in Abdul Rahiman v. Maidin Saiba (11) and Chandra Kanta Bhattacharjee v. Lakshman Chandra Chakravarty (12). But this doctrine cannot be applied where the appeal is dismissed in default; in such a case, the appeal fails for non-prosecution and it cannot appropriately be said that the Court of Appeal adopts the decree of the primary Court. This was recognised by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., when in his judgment in the Full Bench case of Bipra Dis Gossain v. Chunder Seekur Bhattacharjee (13) he observed that if in the case of an appeal, a new judgment of affirmance of the former decree should be given, then a new judgment would have to be executed, but if the appeal were dismissed for default, there would be no new judgment, and the judgment of the lower Court would be the judgment to be enforced. This view was adopted by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Virasamy Mudali v. Manomany Ammal (14) and has now been accepted by the Legislature in the definition of the term 'decree' in section 2 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, which expressly provides that any order of dismissal for default is not a decree.....In our opinion it is fairly clear that when an appeal against an original decree has been dismissed for default, the order of dismissal is not a decree, that there is consequently neither in form nor in substance an appellate decree wherein the original decree may be deemed to become merged and that the original decree is thus the decree to be executed, notwithstanding the dismissal of the appeal for default."

The reasoning of the the learned Judge appears to me to be unanswerable and it is supported by the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case to which the learned Judge of the Court below has referred. At page 353 of the report (I. L. R. 36 All. 350) (1) we have the following observations which the lower Appellate Court has reproduced in its judgment:—"The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from."

These observations are very pertinent to the case in hand, and although I have recorded my opinion that this judgment of their Lordships is no direct authority on the interpretation of the language of Act XIV of 1882, the remarks I have just referred to are of great importance, inasmuch as they lay down a definite principle upon the basis of which it is possible to determine whether a particular order amounts or does not amount to a decree. It seems to me, in view of this language, that the decision of one of the Judges of the Bombay Court referred to in Ramchandra Pandurang Naik v. Madhav Furushattam Naik (8) and the opinion expressed by the Judges of the Calcutta Court in Radha Nath Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (9) can no longer be regarded as setting forth a correct exposition of the law.

I hold, therefore, that in the present case the order of the Appellate Court dated the 29th of March 1905 did not amount to a decree, and that consequently the only decree which was capable of execution was the decree of the Court of first instance passed on the 27th of September 1904. Consequently the fresh application for execution, which was made on the 6th of March 1917, was beyond the period of 12 years allowed by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Advocate for the appellant invited me, in case I decide against his contention upon this question of law, to send the case back to the Court below for the decision of an issue as to whether the judgment debtor had been guilty of force or fraud in the matter of resisting the previous proceedings taken in execution of decree. I am unable to yield to this invitation, the fact being that the decreeholder never set up any plea either of force or fraud for the purpose of having the period of limitation extended. He took his stand upon the view that limitation for his application began to run from the date of the order in appeal. Having failed in that contention I cannot now allow him to fall back upon a ground which was never raised before.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed —Relinquishment of claim, what amounts to—Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 15—Order granting or refusing amendment, whether judgment—Costs—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by.

On an application for amendment of a plaint the trial Court, without deciding anything, made the order for amendment subject to any contentions which the defendants might raise in answer to the claim as amended:

Held, that it would have been better and more regular if the question of the right to amend had been determined before the order was made or, if this would have involved a lengthy enquiry covering the same ground as the evidence in the suit, if the hearing of the application to amend had been adjourned to the hearing of the suit and determined on the evidence then taken. [p. 130, col. 1.]

Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of a portion of a claim, and a decree has been made in that suit. In such a case a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is barred. But the rule does not apply to the amendment of a plaint by the addition of a claim which has been omitted in the plaint as originally filed. [p. 130, col. 2; p. 131, col. 1.]

Where a person knowing of the facts before the institution of a suit omits to make a particular claim by an oversight and the suit is carried to a decision without any amendment, Order II, rule 2, Code of Civil Procedure, prevents him from suing subsequently in respect of the claim so omitted, and it is no answer on his part to say that such omission was due to a mere mistake and was not actuated by any fraudulent or dishonest motive. But these principles do not apply where he makes an application for amendment before decree for the purpose of including the claim which was omitted through oversight. [p. 131, col. 1.]

The Court being desirous of getting at the true facts will allow an amendment subject to three general conditions; (a) Bona fides on the part of the applicant; (b) possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs; (c) where the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. [p. 131, col. 2.]

An order for costs made by a Court within its discretion ought not to be interfered with by the Appellate Court. [p. 132, col. 2.]

Where the trial Court made the costs of an application for amendment costs in the cause:

Held, that as the amendment was opposed by the opposite party, the trial Court was not wrong in making the order and that it ought not to be interfered with by the Appellate Court. [p. 132, col. 2.]

Ordinarily an order granting or refusing an amendment would not be a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. [p. 130, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The respondents instituted this suit on the 9th December 1916 against the defendants for recovery of money due to them by the first defendant on the mortgage of the 1st April 1915. There were a previous mortgage and a further charge, dated 7th January 1914 and 11th December 1914, executed by the same defendant. But these were not included in the suit. On the 26th February 1917, the plaintiffs gave notice of an application for amendment of the plaint. The affidavit, which is verified by the plaintiffs' attorney, states that they did not include their claims under the previous mortgage and charge under the bona fide and erroneous impression that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain any suit in respect of the mortgage and charge as they comprised properties outside the local limits of our jurisdiction. They say they overlooked one of the provisions of the mortgage of the 1st April 1915. It is said that the defendant, taking advantage of the omission to include these previous claims, filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Pabna, praying for a declaration that the mortgage-debts secured by the previous mortgage and charge were unenforceable. The ground there taken is that no leave was obtained under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code; that the defendant in that suit intentionally omitted to sue in respect of these sums of Rs. 1,50,000 and Rs. 90,000, and that the plaintiff in that suit was entitled to a declaration that the defendant's mortgage lien for these two sums was unenforceable in law.

The plaintiffs' application for amendment in this suit is supported by an affidavit verified by their attorney, Mr. P. C. Kar. On the other hand, there is an affidavit of

UPENDRA NARAIN ROY v. JANAKI NATH ROY.

Kedarnath Sirkar, a gomashia and law agent of the defendant. He alleges that the prior mortgage and charge were not included designedly and with dishonest motives and not under error as alleged. His affidavit is supported by his master. These allegations are denied in the affidavit of Rai Bahadur Janaki Nath Roy, who explains how these claims were omitted.

The matter came before Chitty, J., who thought it was not possible or convenient to decide the issue of fact raised at that stage. He, however, without deciding anything, made the amendment subject to any contention which the several defendants might raise in answer to the claim as amended. The learned Judge said that he did not see how the defendants would be prejudiced by the amendment being allowed instead of having a lengthy enquiry and a practical decision of the suit in a chamber application. I think it would have been better and more regular that the question of the right to amendment should have been determined before the order was made, or, if this would have involved a lengthy enquiry covering the same ground as the evidence in the suit, that the hearing of the application to amend should have been adjourned to the hearing of the suit and determined on the evidence then taken. Objection has accordingly been taken by Mr. Jackson for the appellant on the ground that an order should not have been made without first determining the plaintiffs' right to it. How, he asks, can the Court make an order for amendment subject to the right of the party to object that it ought to have been allowed? The respondents' Counsel also states that he was desirous of and asked the Court to hear the application on the facts. In support, however, of the course which the learned Judge took, it must be noted that the Court minutes show that Mr. Chakravarti, who appeared for the appellant in the lower Court, said that as long as his rights were safeguarded and it was understood that his contention was that the omission to sue was not a mistake but was done advisedly, he had no objection.

The matter is, however, not of importance, as I have come to the conclusion on the facts that the order made was justified.

It has been objected in the first instance that no appeal lies. No case has been cited in support of the appeal. Ordinarily an order granting or refusing amendment would not be a "judgment." Such an order does not determine the rights of the parties but only a matter of procedure, namely, whether a right may be put forward for determination. Here the Court has held that it may. If the Court were wrong, the order would be subject to appeal in the appeal against the final decree. But here the question is complicated by the fact of the Pabna suit. It is contended for the appellant that the order made does not reserve the alleged right of the appellant in that Pabna suit and that the rights of the appellant in that suit are affected, and, to use the words of Counsel, "his basis in the Pabna suit is gone." It is argued that when that suit was instituted, the respondents had not included their previous mortgage and charge in the plaint in this Court and that if the matters had continued as they originally were, the appellant would have got the declaration he sought. These chances of success, it is said, are now spoiled because the respondents have been allowed to amend in this Court so as to include claims, the omission of which was made the basis of the Pabna suit. It is also suggested that the hearing of the Pabna suit might be affected. This is not possible because the Pabna suit was instituted before the amendment, and if there were any difficulty in the two suits being concurrently heard (on the assumption that they covered the same ground), it would be the Calcutta suit as amended, and not the Pabna suit, which might be affected. As regards the other point it has more ingenuity than substance. It proceeds on the erroneous assumption that the amendment was prohibited by Order II, rule 2. This rule does not touch the matter before us. It refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of portion of a claim, and a decree has been made in that suit. In that case a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is barred. That is not the case here. In the present case the suit has not been heard but a claim has been omitted by, it is said, inadvertence. To hold that in such case an amendment should not be allowed would be to hold something which the rule does not say and which would be absurd. The rule says: "he shall not afterwards sue," that is, it assumes that there has been a suit carried to a decision, and a subsequent suit. It does not apply to amendment where there has been only one suit. As the plaintiff had in law a right to apply for an amendment before the conclusion of his suit, it cannot be said that any rights of the appellant in the Pabna suit are affected. Such a contention is based on the erroneous assumption that nothing could be done by way of amendment of the Calcutta suit to remove the objection that the claims on the previous mortgage or charge were not sustainable. A case would fall within Order II, rule 2, only if a plaintiff fails to apply for amendment before decree, and then brings another suit. The plaintiffs are not doing that but asking for amendment in the one and only suit they have brought. This is, therefore, not a case in which the amendment either affects rights accrued to the other party, or otherwise prejudices him.

It has doubtless been held that where a person knows of the facts before the institution of the suit and omits to make a particular claim by an oversight, it is no answer to say that such omission was due to mere mistake, and was not actuated by any fraudulent or dishonest motive. If the words of a law are clear and positive, they cannot be controlled by any consideration of the motives of the party to whom it is to be applied, nor limited by what the Judges who apply it may suppose to have been the reasons for enacting it: Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsnoonissa Begum (1), Bulwunt Singh v. Chittan Singh (2), Ganes Chandra Chowdhry v. Ram Kumar Chowdhry (3) and Syed Abdulla v. Hurkishen Singh (4). But these observations apply only where there has been a suit and a decree and a subsequent suit in which such mistake is pleaded, and not to such a case as is before us. It has been argued that the bar under Order

II, rule 2, exists not because a point has been decided but because it should and would have been decided if the plaintiff had put it forward. This is quite true, but is not to the point. The observation assumes that there has been a suit and a decree in which the point omitted might have been considered and determined. In the present case we are now in only a preliminary stage of a suit in which no decree has been made and there has been no anterior suit.

As regards the power of amendment, the Code says:—"The Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties."

The Court being desirous of getting at the true facts will allow an amendment subject to three general conditions: Bona fides on the part of the applicant; possibility of amendment without such prejudice to the other party as cannot be compensated by costs (such as prejudice to rights accrued), and subject to this that the amendment is not such as to turn a suit of one character into a suit of another character. This statement is not made as being exhaustive but as embodying what are perhaps the three chief conditions on which amendment may be allowed. So it has been held that:—Where a party who has an honest case has, either through ignorance [see Mukhoda Soondury Dasi v. Ram Churn Karmokar (5) and Krishnaji v. Wamnaji (6)], bona fide mistake or some misapprehension, not placed the real facts before the Court [see Bhyro Dutt v. Musammatt Lekhranee Koor (7) and Lakshmibai v. Hari (8)], or has misconceived his cause of action and form of suit [Ragho Parashram v. Vishnu Govind (9), Shyam Chand Koondoo v. Land Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd. (10), and Krishnaji

MUKHRAM SINGH v. SADASI KOER.

Lukshman Rajvade v. Sitaram Murarrav Jakhi (11)] he should be allowed to amend, where this may be done without injustice to the defendant, and in appeal, particularly where the objection that the suit was not maintainable was not taken in the first Court [Ragho Parashram v. Vishnu Govind (9)]. Where, however, there is reason to think that an omission to claim was deliberate, it would, it has been said, generally not be proper to allow amendment [Lukhee Kant Doss Chowdhry v. Sumeerooddie Tustar (12)]. In short, the object of a trial being to get at the rights of the parties, any amendment which may be required for that purpose should, subject to well-known general principles governing this matter, be allowed. It has been held that apart from the question of limitation, it is unjust to a plaintiff to put him to the great expense of a new suit when a reasonable amendment, not inconsistent with his case as it originally stood, might equally well answer his purpose as the new suit [Modhe v. Dongre (13)]. Here there is not merely a question of expense, for if the amendment were refused it might be that the plaintiffs would be altogether debarred of their remedy in respect of the previous mortgage and further charge, the factum of which is not denied.

Assuming then but not deciding in favour of the appellant that there is an appeal, the grounds put forward to show that the order appealed from is erroneous are in themselves without substance. The appellant has asked us to deal with the facts and we do so. It may be a matter of doubt whether there is an appeal or not, but, assuming this in favour of the appellant, his case fails on the facts.

In my opinion there is no sufficient ground for disbelieving the affidavit verified by the Attorney that the claims were omitted by inadvertence. The evidence before us does not justify the conclusion that the omission was deliberate and dishonest, as alleged. I may here record the fact that Mr. Jackson contended that it was not necessary that he should establish his client's case on this point, and that apart from it the law prohibited amendment. In my opinion, and on a full consideration of the facts and law, I am of opinion that the amendment made was justified. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

We have been asked to vary Mr. Justice Chitty's order in the first Court as regards costs. He made the costs of the application for amendment costs in the cause. This matter, of course, was one within his discretion, with which I think we ought not to interfere unless it is shown that he was clearly wrong. This was not a case in which the party seeking the amendment alleged an error on his part which was admitted by the other side and in which no opposition was made to the amendment, in which case an order might have been that the party seeking the amendment should pay costs. In this case the opposite party opposed this application for amendment on the grounds which have been mentioned in my judgment: and it is not unlikely that for this reason the learned Judge did not determine the facts on this point and ordered the costs to be costs in the cause. The learned Judge's order as regards costs will stand, and, as I have said, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

a right of re-entry even where the zarpeshgi right of the purchaser had been recognized by the landlord prior to the sale.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra.

Messrs. Nirsu Narain Sinha, Harnarain Pershad, Rajender Pershad and Rai Tribhuban Nath Sahay, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Sambhu Saran, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit for ejectment by the landlords in respect of a certain holding consisting of two plots measuring one bigha, and seven kathas respectively. The original holder mortgaged the one bigha plot to the defendants, who have since been in possession. In 1911 the plaintiff brought a suit for possession of this one bigha plot, on the allegation that the original holder had left no heir and that consequently the holding had reverted to him as landlord. It was found in that case, however, that the plaintiff had no right of re-entry in that he had recognised the zarpeshgi right of the defendants by accepting rent from them and from the zarpeshgidars. The suit was, therefore, dismissed. Subsequently the defendants purchased the entire holding from the original holder and the plaintiff brought this suit for possession of the holding, on the allegation that the original holder had abandoned it and that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. It is not now denied that there is no custom of transferability. Prima facie, therefore, the plaintiff has a right of re-entry.

It is contended, however, that the defendants can rely on their original zarpeshgi as preventing the plaintiff getting possession of the one bigha plot. This contention, however, has no force. What was originally mortgaged was the tenants' interest. It has now been found, however, that the tenants' interest is gone, consequently the mortgage of that interest is also gone. This is the view which appears to have been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge and agreeing with that view I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 54, 59—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 202—Mortgage by deposit of title-deeds—Possession transferred to mortgagee—Registration, whether necessary—Mortgagee, whether can be ejected without payment of mortgage debt.

In consideration of a loan advanced by the defendants to the plaintiffs the latter made over certain lands to the former together with their title-deeds, the arrangement being that the defendants should remain in possession of the lands and take the rents and profits thereof in lieu of interest. Subsequently the plaintiffs sued for possession of the lands on the ground that no interest in the lands had passed to the defendants in the absence of a registered document:

Held, (1) that there was nothing in the Transfer of Property Act or the Registration Act to require a registered document for such a transfer of possession as was effected in this case, inasmuch as the transaction was not one of sale or mortgage requiring such an instrument under sections 54 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 134, col. 2.]

(2) that the defendants had a charge on the land and were entitled to retain possession thereof until the charge was paid off, and in the meantime to take the rents and profits in lieu of interest as arranged at the time when they were put into possession; [p. 134, col. 1.]

(3) that from another point of view the defendants might be regarded as having received authority from the plaintiffs to manage the lands and to receive the rents and profits in lieu of interest, and as such authority was given to them in consideration of the loan to the plaintiffs, the authority could not be terminated under section 202, Indian Contract Act, until the loan was repaid. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs claim to recover certain paddy lands of which they are the original owners and which are now in the possession of the defendants. The plaintiff alleges that "the defendants purported to claim the said paddy lands by reason of fraudulent transfer on the 24th March 1909 from the plaintiffs, which came to the plaintiffs' knowledge on the 31st May 1915." The plaintiffs admit that they mortgaged these lands to a Chetty by depositing the title-deeds with the Chetty in 1905 and that they afterwards made over the lands to the Chetty, agreeing that he should work the lands and pay the land revenue and keep any surplus of the produce of the lands. The defendants' case was that they had paid off the debt to the Chetty at the plaintiffs' request, that the promissory notes in favour of the Chetty were thereupon made over to the defendants, that the title-deeds of the lands in suit had also been transferred to the defendants and that the lands were made over to the defendants with the plaintiffs' consent, the arrangement being that the defendants in succession to the Chetty should take the rents and profits of the lands in lieu of interest.

The District Court found that the plaintiff had failed to make out his case and accepted the defendants' account of the manner in which they had become possessed of the lands. The Divisional Court concurred in the findings of the District Court. It is not suggested that these findings of fact should be disturbed in second appeal. The argument of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has been directed only to the question whether the defendants, being equitable mortgagees who are in possession of the mortgaged property with the consent of the mortgagors, can resist the plaintiffs' suit for possession on the ground that no interest in the lands has passed to the defendants in the absence of a registered document.

Assuming that a mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds is not entitled to possession, it does not follow that when such a mortgagee has been put into possession of the mortgaged property by or with the consent of the mortgagor he can be required to give it up before the mortgage-debt is satisfied. The defendants have a charge on the land, and are entitled to retain possession thereof until the charge is paid off and in the meantime to take the rents and profits in lieu of interest as arranged at the time when they were put into possession. This undoubtedly was the intention of the parties. If the mere putting of the defendants into possession in such circumstances does not give them the right to retain possession until payment, there must have been an implied promise that the plaintiffs would execute the legal documents necessary to give effect to such intention. The defendants would still have the right to sue for specific performance of that agreement, and, therefore, under the authority of the Calcutta case Akbar Fakir v. Intail Sayal (1), the plaintiffs would not be entitled to recover possession.

From another point of view the defendants may be regarded as having received authority from the plaintiffs to manage the lands and to receive the rents and profits in lieu of interest and as such authority was given to them in consideration of the loan to the plaintiffs, the authority could not be terminated under section 202, Indian Contract Act, until the loan is repaid.

It may be added that there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act or the Registration Act to require a registered document for such a transfer of possession as was effected in this case, for the transaction was not one of sale or mortgage requiring such an instrument under sections 54 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. As the plaintiffs did not sue to redeem their mortgage and even denied the existence of any mortgage to the defendants, they are not entitled to a decree for redemption in this suit. On the grounds stated above, we decide that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover possession of the lands. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Kabuliyat fixing rent at certain amount of paddy or in default certain sum of money—Landlord, whether can recover price of paddy.

PRAN KRISHNA NATH v. MOHESH CHANDRA CHOUDHURY.

Where a registered patta by which a tenancy was created provided that 52 aris of paddy would be delivered by the tenant every year as rent and on default of delivery of the paddy fixed the paddy, or its price Rs. 15 would be realised according to law with costs and interest:

Held, that under the terms of the patta the landlord was not entitled to recover more than Rs. 15 as the price of the paddy in case of its non-delivery. [p. 136, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Chittagong, dated the 30th of August 1916, modifying that of the Officiating Munsif, Additional Court at Patiya, dated the 14th of January 1916.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff against the decree in a rent suit, and the point for determination is what is the yearly rent payable by the defendant to the plaintiff.

"The tenancy of the rent sued for was created under the registered patta Exhibit A of 18th Chaitra, 1232 M. E., granted to the defendant's father, Dataram. Reading the above patta, it appears that the intention was to make over 52 aris of paddy as yearly rent. In one portion of the patta there was a stipulation that in default of delivery of the paddy fixed the paddy, or its price Rs. 15, would be realized according to law with costs and interest. The Court below has held, on the authority of the decision reported as Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), that in default of delivery of paddy, the plaintiffs can recover rent only at Rs. 15 per year and that paddy or its market price in case delivery cannot be had cannot be recovered. The decisions bearing on the point are conflicting [vide Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (2) and Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (3)]. There cannot, however, be any doubt that effect should be given to the intention of the parties and that what the intention was must be gathered in this case from the wording of the lease Exhibit A. In the heading of Exhibit A it is stated that paddy rent is payable at 52 aris and this is followed by a statement of instalments to the effect:—'On the 25th Poush 52 aris of paddy'. Details of the paddy to be delivered are also specified separately at the foot and there also the total quantity mentioned is 13 and 39 and 52 aris. In the body of Exhibit A it is mentioned that the lease is granted in settlement of bagi paddy as above mentioned, that is 52 aris of paddy, and that bagi paddy would be delivered each year as stated in the schedule, in which the quantity of paddy to be made over to each lessor is mentioned 'Jama bagi paddy 52 aris or its price Rs. 15,' and there is a stipulation to which reference has been made in the first part of this judgment. I think the intention was to make over 52 aris of paddy each year and that the main agreement to make over the above quantity of paddy as rent in kind is not affected by the statement as to its price, either in the margin or in one portion of Exhibit A. For the above reasons I find that the yearly rent payable by the defendants is 52 aris of paddy and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover rents in kind at the above rate. In case delivery of paddy cannot be had, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover its price at the market rate and that rate is found to be 2 aris per rupee. It may be added that in the Record of Rights published in March 1896 the yearly rent payable was mentioned as 52 aris of paddy and its price was mentioned as Rs. 13, probably because paddy sold then at 4 aris per rupee (vide Exhibit 1). It shows that Rs. 15 was not the yearly rent. The point for determination is found in favour of the appellant and it is ordered that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the Court below be modified and the plaintiff's suit be decreed for recovery of rent in kind at 52 aris of paddy per year for the years in suit and damages at 12½ Rs., that is for recovery of 234 aris of paddy in all, and costs of both the Courts and interest at 6 per cent. per annum. In case delivery of paddy cannot be had its price will be recovered at 2 aris per rupee, that is, the plaintiff will recover Rs. 117 and costs of both Courts and interest at 6 per cent. per annum. The defendants shall bear their own costs."

a suit against the defendants (tenants) for recovery of rent at the rate of 52 aris of paddy per year, on the strength of a registered patta. The plaintiffs fixed the value of the paddy at the then current market price. The defendants said that in case of default, they were not bound to pay the price according to the market rate, but according to the price fixed in the pattah, i.e., Rs. 15 only.

In the first Court the plea of the defendants was accepted and it was held, on the basis of the lease and on the authority of Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), that the defendants were liable to pay only according to the terms stated in the patta, i.e., Rs. 15.

The Subordinate Judge in appeal has modified the judgment and decree of the learned Munsif, holding that the authorities on the subject are conflicting, e.g., Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) is at variance with Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (3) and Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (2). He has also held that the intention of the parties was to settle 52 aris of paddy as annual rent and in default the payment of its price at the current market rate. Accordingly he has decreed the appeal. The main provision of the lease is "you shall pay the aforesaid paddy rent year after year, according to the instalments mentioned below. If you do not pay and keep it in arrears, you shall not raise any objection to the realisation of the arrears (by means of the law in existence and such laws as may come into force) of the said paddy rent, or in default its price Rs. 15 and the costs of the suit and interest."

In the schedule of instalments, in the patta, only 52 aris were mentioned and in the heading the same fact. But in the margin, the rent annually payable was Rs. 15, that stated in the lease.

My submission is that the lease has been misconstrued by the lower Appellate Court. It ought not to have relied upon the things stated either in the schedule or heading of the lease without any reference to the provisions in the body of the lease, which clearly stipulated the payment of 52 aris or Rs. 15 in default. The intention of the parties to any deed can only be gathered by reading the whole lease and not any fragmentary part thereof.

Further, the cases on the subject were decisive. Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (4) is the latest case upon the subject. The presumption of the Record of Rights has been rebutted by the registered patta.

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Respondents, argued that the intention of the parties was to pay 52 aris or the price thereof at the current market rate, otherwise much hardship would occur to the landlord.

Moreover, the Record of Rights showed that money rent payable was Rs. 13, not Rs. 15. This shows that Rs. 15 stated in the patta did not represent the rent payable but the price of the paddy at the then market rate. The dominant intention was to get the paddy as rent and not a certain sum of money. No doubt the cases on the point are conflicting, see Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (2) and Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (3), but each case must be decided on its own facts and on the intention of the parties to be gathered from the instrument.

Babu Nitish Chandra Lahiri briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff can claim the price of paddy stipulated to be paid at the market rate, or only the price of the paddy as mentioned in the Kabuliyat.

This turns upon the construction of the Kabuliyat; and as we construe it, we think the tenant agreed to pay 52 aris of paddy and on default to pay Rs. 15 as the price thereof. The price of the paddy, therefore, was fixed by the parties in the document. We are accordingly of opinion that under the terms of the Kabuliyat the plaintiff is not entitled to get anything more than Rs. 15 as the price of the paddy.

The decree of the lower Court must accordingly be set aside and that of the first Court restored. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—
Revival of suit—Inherent power of Court—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Revival application

During the pendency of a pre-emption suit the plaintiff lost his title to the property which qualified him for the exercise of the right of pre-emption, by virtue of a decree passed against him in another suit, and he filed an appeal from that decree. The Court trying the pre-emption suit thereupon dismissed it as not maintainable, but remarked in its judgment that if the plaintiff's appeal in the other suit was accepted, he might apply for revival of the pre-emption suit. The plaintiff won his appeal and within three years he applied under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court, which had decided the pre-emption suit, for its revival. The Court allowed the application:

Held, (1) that the Court had inherent power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to revive the suit; [p. 138, col. 1.]

(2) that the original order passed by the Court in the pre-emption suit was not the proper order to be passed in the circumstances, and that the proper course for the Court would have been to stay the proceedings until the pre-emptor had an opportunity of getting the decision of the Appellate Court on the question of title under which he was claiming pre-emption; [p. 138, col. 1.]

(3) that the application was governed by Article 181, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, and was, therefore, within time. [p. 138, col. 2.]

Revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 17th September 1917.

Babu Rudra Dat Singh, for the Applicants.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on the 17th of September last. The facts of the case are somewhat peculiar. It appears that in the year 1911 the opposite party Gur Sahai filed a suit for pre-emption in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi. The two applicants in the present case were defendants in that suit, being the purchasers of the property sought to be pre-empted. The case came up for trial in the Court at Hardoi, and one of the issues which was raised on the pleadings was whether or not the suit was maintainable.

The plea of the defendants was that Gur Sahai could not maintain the suit on the ground that he was not a co-sharer in the village in which the property was situated. It seems that Gur Sahai's claim to be a co-sharer in this village was based upon his relationship to one Data Ram, who died leaving two widows. The last of these two widows died in the year 1906 and Gur Sahai who was the nephew of Data Ram took possession after the death of the last widow. Then one Nand Kishore came upon the scene. He brought a suit against Gur Sahai for possession of this property. This suit was brought in the year 1910 and was decreed in the Court of first instance on the 31st of October 1911, so that at the time when this suit for pre-emption was pending before the Subordinate Judge, the state of things was that the plaintiff Gur Sahai had lost his title to the property which qualified him for the exercise of the right of pre-emption. Gur Sahai had filed an appeal before this Court and that appeal was pending when the pre-emption suit was decided on the 5th of December 1911. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not maintainable and the concluding words of his judgment are as follows:—"At this moment the plaintiff owns no share and he cannot, therefore, sue for pre-emption. If his appeal is accepted he may apply for the revival of this suit, if he is so advised." Later on, that is to say, on the 24th of October 1913, Gur Sahai won his appeal in this Court and the result of the decree was that his title to the property was established from the beginning, in other words, it was held that he was the rightful heir of Data Ram who was entitled to succeed to possession of this property after the death of Data Ram's widows. Gur Sahai, having obtained this decree in his favour, might I think very well have gone at once to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and applied for revival of the suit as had been suggested to him. However, he held back for nearly three years and it was not till the 15th of September 1916, that he went to the Court at Hardoi and asked for the old suit to be revived. This application purported to be one under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The right of Gur Sahai to make this application was contested on a variety of grounds. Eventually the Subordinate Judge decided that it was a case for the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court specified in section 151.

The defendants now come in revision and the ground is taken that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make this order. I think that argument cannot be maintained. It seems clear to me that a wide power is conferred upon Courts by section 151, and it has been held by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case referred to in the judgment of the Court below, Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (1), that under section 151 the Courts have inherent power to revive suits. It is clear enough to me that the order which was passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 5th of December 1911, by which he dismissed the plaintiff's suit, was not the proper order to be passed in the circumstances. I do not go the length of saying that it was an absolutely illegal order, but clearly in the interests of justice the proper course was to stay the proceedings until Gur Sahai had an opportunity of getting the decision of this Court on the question of the title under which he was claiming pre-emption. However, the Subordinate Judge did not take that course. He dismissed the suit, at the same time giving the plaintiff the assurance that if he won his case in the Judicial Commissioner's Court he would be entitled to apply for revival. In the circumstances I think it is not to be denied that a great injustice would be caused to Gur Sahai if he were not allowed to go on with this suit. The only ground upon which it can be urged that this relief should be denied to him is that he has been guilty of great delay in making the application.

There is some force in this argument, for there is, so far as I can see, no reasonable explanation of the fact why Gur Sahai waited from the 24th of October 1913 till the 15th of September 1916 for the purpose of filing the application to have the suit revived. On the other hand it would be difficult to say that the application was liable to be dismissed on the ground that it was barred by time, for as pointed out by the Counsel for the opposite party an application of his kind would seem to be governed by Article 181 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act, and so it would appear that Gur Sahai had three years from the 24th of October 1913 to file the application. The application was admittedly filed within three years from that date.

On the whole I have come to the conclusion that this application should be dismissed. I think the argument that the lower Court had no jurisdiction to make the order cannot be maintained: on the contrary, I think, there was jurisdiction under section 151 of the Code.

As regards the other plea, namely, the delay in the presentation of the application, I am not prepared to say that it was barred by any Article of the Schedule to the Limitation Act and I should not feel justified in interfering with the order of the Court below merely upon the consideration that Gur Sahai was guilty of delay in moving the Court.

The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Public policy—Contract to engage dancing boy for a certain price, whether opposed to public policy.

The plaintiff engaged the services of a dancing and singing boy for a certain period. He next contracted with the defendant that for a monthly payment of a certain sum the boy should give exhibitions in accordance with arrangements made by the defendant. The defendant employed the boy for a period of one month and twenty four days but refused to make any payment to the plaintiff:

Held, that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was not contrary to public policy and that the defendant was bound to pay to the plaintiff at the contract rate.

Rule against the order of the Munsif, 1st Court, Netrakona, exercising powers of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 20th August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Annoda Charan Karkoon, for the Petitioner.—This Rule was obtained on behalf of the plaintiff in a Small Cause Court suit. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that it is based on a contract to hire a boy for dancing and singing and that such a contract is not enforceable because it is illegal and opposed to public policy. There is not a bit of evidence on the record to show that the boy in question was hired for immoral or illegal purposes, and so the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge cannot stand.

Babu Binendra Kumar De, for the Opposite Party.—The contract is, on the face of it, for some immoral purposes and so having regard to the provisions of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act it cannot be enforced in a Court of Law. The evidence on the record goes to show that boys are treated as articles of commerce and they are let on hire to young men of low morals. If the object of the contract is immoral and illegal, the plaintiff cannot get any relief on the basis of the contract. The Court below has rightly proceeded upon the view that the contract is not enforceable because it is opposed to public policy.

Babu Annoda Charan Karkoon, in reply.—When the object of the contract has not been proved to be illegal and immoral, the Court below was not right in dismissing the suit on such a supposition.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which on the 20th of August 1917 the Munsif of Netrakona, exercising Small Cause Court powers, dismissed a suit brought by the plaintiff-petitioner.

It appears that the plaintiff engaged the services of a "Ghatu", or dancing and singing boy, for a period of 3 months at Rs. 35 a month. He next contracted with the principal defendant that for one month for a payment of Rs. 45 the boy should give exhibitions in accordance with arrangements made by the defendants. The defendants in fact detained the boy for a period of 1 month and 24 days. After crediting a payment of Rs. 6 the plaintiff now sues the defendants to recover a sum of Rs. 76-8-0 at the agreed rate of Rs. 45 a month.

The Small Cause Court Judge finds all the facts in favour of the plaintiff, but dismisses the suit on the ground that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants was contrary to public policy. In coming to this conclusion he appears to have been influenced by some suspicion that the employment of the boy was connected with immoral practices. But of any such user there is no evidence. There is further no suggestion that the engagement with the defendant or defendants was contrary to the wishes of either the boy or his parents. The plaintiff was then in the position of an impresario, and the contract having been fulfilled the defendant must pay the sum he agreed to pay in consideration of the artiste's services.

The order of the Small Cause Court Judge is, therefore, set aside, and the plaintiff's claim decreed against both defendants, with costs in the Court below and the costs of this Rule; the hearing fee we assess at one gold mohur.

Order set aside.

are entitled to his property under sections 294 and 295 of the Digest. [p. 141, col. 1.]

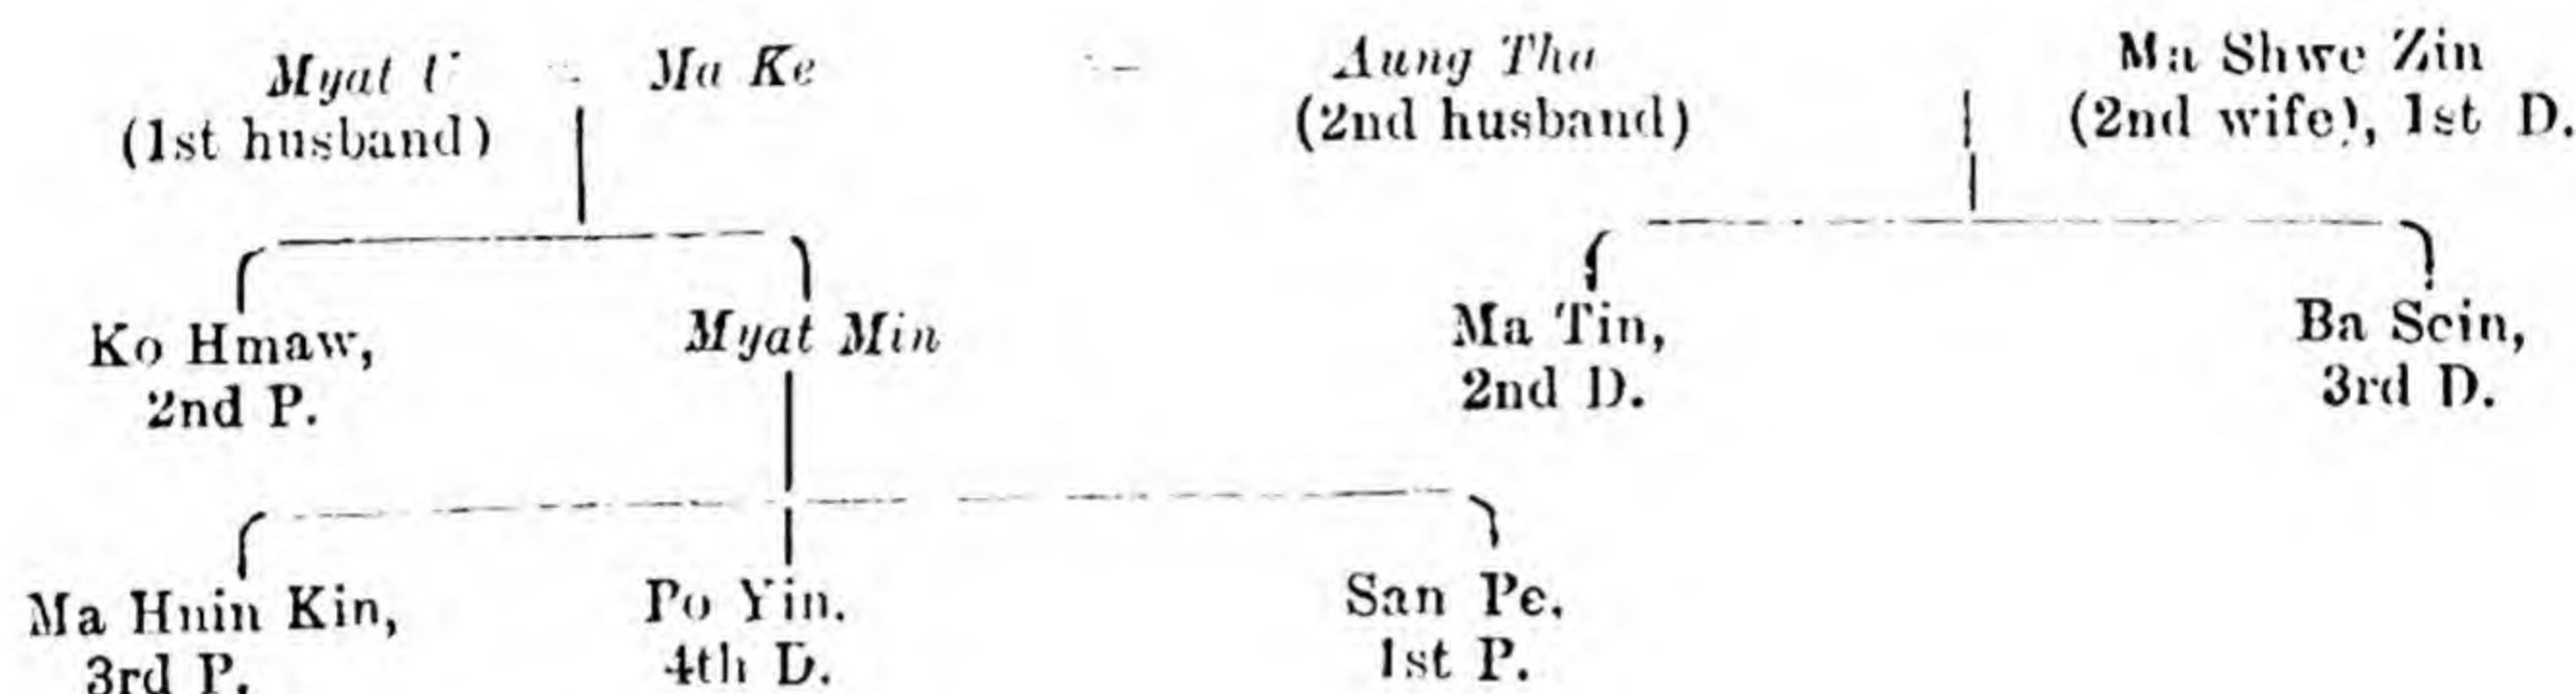

According to the ordinary rule for partition between a step-father and step-children, the latter can, immediately on their mother's death, claim a share of the property acquired jointly by their mother and step-father during their marriage, so that such a claim, if not made within 12 years of their mother's death, would be barred under Article 123 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 141, col. 1.]

In respect of their mother's thinthi property, however, the claim can be made by the step-children even on the subsequent happening of their step-father's death. [p. 141, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a share of inheritance brought by the descendants of one Ma Ke against the widow and two surviving children of Ma Ke's second husband Maung Aung Tha, deceased. The relationship of the parties is shown in the following genealogical table :—

The persons whose names are italicized are dead. Ma Ke by her first husband Myat U had issue Ko Hmaw, 2nd plaintiff, and Myat Min, deceased. Myat Min left three children surviving him, 1st plaintiff San Pe, 3rd plaintiff Ma Hnin Kin and 4th defendant Po Yin, who was put in as a defendant because he refused to join as a plaintiff. Ma Ke's first husband Myat U died about 25 years before the suit and after his death Ma Ke married Aung Tha, by whom she had no issue. About 20 years before the suit she died and Aung Tha who survived her married as a second wife the 1st defendant Ma Shwe Zin, by whom he had issue Ma Tin, 2nd defendant, and Ba Sein, 3rd defendant. Aung Tha died in 1914. The suit by the descendants of Ma Ke's first marriage against Aung Tha's widow and children was for a share of (a) the jointly acquired property of Aung Tha's marriage with Ma Ke and (b) the property acquired by Aung Tha and Ma Shwe Zin during their marriage. It is not alleged that Ma Ke or Aung Tha brought any property to their marriage. A further claim was made that Ma Ke's grandson San Pe, 1st plaintiff, had been adopted by Aung Tha and Ma Ke as their kittima son.

The District Court held that the adoption of San Pe was not established and, though one of the grounds of appeal to this Court is that the District Court's decision on this point was wrong, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants expressly waived this ground at the hearing.

As regards the remainder of the plaintiffs' claim the District Court found that the plaintiffs could not recover any part of the property jointly acquired by Ma Ke and Aung Tha during their marriage, because their suit was barred by limitation under Article 123 of the Limitation Act, more than 12 years having elapsed from the date of Ma Ke's death on the occurrence of which the cause of action arose. The District Judge further held that there was no authority for giving the plaintiffs a share in the property left by Aung Tha, as Aung Tha left a widow and children surviving him.

As regards the property acquired by Aung Tha and Ma Shwe Zin jointly there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the District Judge's finding. I is only when the surviving step-parent dies leaving no natural issue and no widow surviving him that the children of the step-parent's deceased wife by a former husband are entitled to the step-parent's property under the Digest, sections 294 and 295. Thus it is only if Aung Tha had died without remarrying that the plaintiffs could have come in as his heirs under these sections.

We have to consider, however, whether the District Judge's decision is correct also as regards the property brought by Aung Tha to his marriage with Ma Shwe Zin. That property would presumably be, for some part at any rate, property acquired jointly by him and Ma Ke during his first marriage. The plaintiffs no doubt were at liberty to claim a share of this property at once after Ma Ke's death, according to the ordinary rule for partition between step-father and step-children (see section 211 of the Digest). They could have done so at any time within 12 years from the date of their mother's death but they failed to do so. The question is whether the Burmese law of inheritance allows them to claim the same or a smaller share of that property on the subsequent happening of their step-father's death. The texts from Panam, Pyu and Sonda in sections 216 and 222 of the Digest indicate that the step-children can claim, even at that late stage, their mother's property, if any, which was taken by the step-father to his subsequent marriage. But according to the Panam text, the claim could be only in respect of property which had been brought by the deceased widow (i.e., in this case Ma Ke) to her second marriage, and the text expressly relates only to cases where the step father has no issue by his subsequent marriage. It must be held that the texts in sections 216 and 222 relate only to the mother's thinthi property, if any. As already noted, it is not claimed in this case that Ma Ke brought any such property to her marriage with Aung Tha.

We, therefore, find that the suit was rightly dismissed and we dismiss the appeal against 1st, 2nd and 3rd respondents with costs.

As the appellants were allowed to appeal as paupers, we further direct the plaintiffs appellants to pay the Court-fees on the memorandum of appeal which would have been paid by the plaintiffs appellants if they had not been permitted to appeal as paupers.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

MCLLICK, J.—On the 8th August 1912, the plaintiff brought a suit upon a hand-note alleging that defendant No. 2 had executed that hand-note on behalf of himself and defendant No. 1. The suit was dismissed on the 10th March 1913. There was then an appeal which met with a like fate on the 11th July 1913. The defendant No. 2 thereupon applied for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff for bringing a false suit. Sanction was granted by the Subordinate Judge on the 13th December 1913. There was an appeal against that order to the District Judge and a revision application to the High Court. The order, however, was affirmed, with the result that the plaintiff was committed for trial to the Court of Session on a charge of forgery in respect of the hand-note. The plaintiff, however, was acquitted by the Sessions Court on the 17th September 1914. He thereupon in 1915 instituted a suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claiming damages for malicious prosecution. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. There was then an appeal to the District Judge who has remanded it for further evidence.

It appears that in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff applied for permission to call Mr. Hardless, the hand-writing expert, to prove that the hand-note was signed by defendant No. 2. The Subordinate Judge held that the question as to the genuineness of the hand-note was res judicata as between the parties and, therefore, could not be re-opened in the suit for malicious prosecution. He accordingly disallowed the prayer for the examination of Mr. Hardless. There was another prayer before the District Judge in regard to an item of evidence which had come into existence since the dismissal of the suit by the Subordinate Judge. That item of evidence consists of an admission which is alleged to have been made by defendant No. 2 in another suit admitting that the hand-note was genuine. The District Judge held that in the interests of justice and equity the plaintiff should be allowed in the enquiry after remand to adduce evidence as to this alleged admission. The matter now comes before us in appeal against the order of the District Judge remanding the case.

Now the objection as to the power of the District Judge to order a remand and to direct further evidence to be taken has not been pressed before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant. He has directed the weight of his attack against the learned District Judge's finding on the point of res judicata.

The learned Vakil contends that the finding at the original trial regarding the genuineness of the hand note was a finding upon a question substantially in issue between the parties litigating under the same title and, therefore, it is not competent to the plaintiff to go behind that finding in the suit for malicious prosecution. The whole point depends on the question whether or not the parties were litigating under the same title. Was the suit for money against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 a suit in which the title of the plaintiff was the same as it was in the suit for malicious prosecution? In my opinion it was not. In the former suit the plaintiff was claiming as a creditor for money lent, and the question of the genuineness of the hand-note was incidental and even if the hand-note had been proved to be a forgery, the plaintiff would have been successful if he could have proved the debt otherwise. In the suit for malicious prosecution the cause of action was the false charge brought by the defendants against the plaintiff and the circumstance that the defendants had put the criminal law into motion against the plaintiff so as to bring about his trial before the Sessions Judge. How can it be said that in the two cases the plaintiff was litigating under the same title? The case of Fitzjohn v. Mackinder (1) is authority for the proposition that the suit is maintainable even though the prosecution was brought about on sanction obtained from a Court, but it is also authority for the further proposition that the cause of action is not the same in the two suits and that the suit for malicious prosecution is in no way based upon perjury committed in the original trial. The concluding portion of the judgment of Lord Cockburn makes this quite clear. His Lordship observes with regard to the argument that the action could not be maintained inasmuch as it was founded upon the perjury committed in the original trial as follows:—

 “The short answer is, that this is neither in form nor substance an action in respect of the perjury committed by the defendant to the plaintiff's damage. It is an action for preferring an indictment and carrying on a prosecution against the plaintiff on a charge which the defendant knew to be untrue, and which he knew could only be supported by perjured testimony. The perjury only comes incidentally into question as shewing that the whole proceeding was malicious and destitute of any pretence of probable cause”.

In my opinion the suit for malicious prosecution was not founded upon the hand-note and, therefore, the question of the genuineness of the hand-note is a matter only incidentally in issue in this case. The finding as to the genuineness of the hand-note in the previous suit is, therefore, not res judicata.

Then as regards the question of the admissibility of the additional evidence in the shape of the admission, I think the learned Vakil for the appellant must succeed. This admission was made after the original trial and upon the accepted principle that it is not open to a Court of Appeal to order additional evidence to be taken except to cure an inherent defect or lacuna in the evidence already recorded, it seems to me that this additional evidence ought not to be allowed to go in. The learned Vakil for the respondents urges that the powers of an Appellate Court are very wide and in every case where it thinks additional evidence is necessary in the interests of justice it is open to it to order that additional evidence be received, no matter at what stage that additional evidence came into existence. In my opinion this is too wide an interpretation of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code and I prefer to interpret the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in this matter more strictly than their Lordships of the Madras High Court.

The learned District Judge's order, therefore, allowing this admission to go in will be set aside, but his order of remand will be affirmed and it will be open to the plaintiff to prove that the hand-note was a genuine document. The appeal is decreed in this modified manner. As both the parties have succeeded to a certain extent there will be no costs. The application for revision in Civil Revision No. 46 of 1918 is also dismissed.

A decree absolute in a mortgage suit made by a Court in the presence of both parties and on proper adjudication cannot be challenged in execution on the ground that the Court ought not to have made the decree absolute inasmuch as the application for it was barred by limitation. [p. 144, col. 2.]

The mere fact of the coming into force of the new Code of Civil Procedure pending a suit on a mortgage does not make the new section 48 applicable to proceedings in execution of the decree in that suit. [p. 145, col. 1.]

ation in execution of a mortgage decree. On 14th May 1902 two persons Ramanath and Baikuntha obtained a decree nisi against the present appellant. That decree was affirmed in appeal to the High Court on 19th August 1904. The application for order absolute was not made till 5th July 1913. When that application for order absolute was made, the present appellant put objections, namely, (1) the plea of payment and (2) limitation, i. e., that the application was barred by time. The Court decided the question of the plea of payment against the present appellant, but did not decide the question of limitation. On 28th January 1916 the judgment-debtor, the present appellant, put in an application contending that the application for execution was barred by reason of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, the decree not having been executed within 12 years from the date of the decree nisi. The present appellant raised that objection when the application for decree absolute was made, but the Court did not decide that objection. My client is, therefore, entitled to raise the same objection, it is not res judicata. When there is no adjudication, it is open to the party to raise the same objection. Mungul Pershad Ditchit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1) and also an unreported decision in Civil Rule No. 76 of 1918 relied on.

[FLETCHER, J.—In that case attachment was not issued and only substitution order was made, and the lower Court refused to go into the question of limitation.]

Mere passing of an order directing order absolute does not preclude me from raising the question of limitation.

The decree is barred by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question is whether the decree can be executed or not.

[FLETCHER, J.—The new Code does not affect the matter at all.]

Babu Khetra Mohan Ghose, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor against the decision of the learned District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 15th May 1917, reversing the decision of the Officiating Munsif of the same place. The two mortgagees obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against the appellant. The decree of the Court of first instance was dated the 14th May 1902, and that decree was on appeal confirmed by this Court on the 19th August 1904. Subsequently, on the 5th July 1913, the order absolute was made under the terms of the Transfer of Property Act. The present appellant appeared in that application to make the decree absolute and he is stated to have raised two grounds, namely, of payment and limitation. As the law was then understood according to the current of decisions of this Court at that time, there was no period limited to make an order absolute in a foreclosure suit under the terms of the Transfer of Property Act. Those decisions have subsequently been dissented from by the Privy Council. What happened in this case was this: The Court held that there was no payment made by the appellant and apparently it did not give a decision on the question of limitation, because presumably the gentleman who conducted the case, recognising the existing current of decisions of this Court, did not press and argue the point. However, the order absolute was made and now in execution Dr. Mitter, who appears for the judgment-debtor appellant, says that he is entitled to question the fact that the order absolute was not properly made and to urge that the Court ought not to have made the order because the application to make the decree absolute was barred by limitation. I do not agree with that view at all. It seems to be altogether a novel view that an order of the Court made in the presence of both parties and on a proper adjudication should in execution be challenged and that it should be said that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, on the ground that the application for making the decree absolute was barred by limitation. As a matter of fact, the Court had ample jurisdiction to come to the conclusion that the case was not barred by limitation. It is said that because the Court did not, in fact, decide that the application was not barred by limitation, therefore, the question is open in execution. There seem to be two answers to that. First of all, it is quite clear that this point was not pressed. Secondly, even it was pressed, the order is conclusive. The case is altogether unsupported by authority. Moreover, the order absolute cannot be challenged in execution. The decision stated to support that proposition clearly does not support it.

Another point is raised that the present application for execution is barred under the provisions of section 48, Code of Civil Procedure. There is a short answer to that also, and that is this: This suit was brought under the provisions of the old Code of Civil Procedure to which the corresponding section to section 48 of the new Code did not apply, the proceedings being taken under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. It is quite clear that the mere fact of the coming into force of the new Code of Civil Procedure pending this suit does not make the new section 48 applicable to those proceedings in execution.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

Plaintiff applied to the defendant Municipality on the 1st December 1913 for permission to build a privy on his own land, and the permission was granted by the Municipality on the 22nd of December. On the 8th of January 1914 the Municipality gave a notice to the plaintiff requiring him not to build the privy until a further order was made. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for a declara-

Held, that the order of the Municipality dated 22nd December 1913, granting permission to the plaintiff to build the privy, was a final order under subsection (2) of section 96 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, and that the subsequent order of the Municipality was not justified under any section of the Act and was, therefore, illegal. JUDGMENT. ^

SHAH, J.—In this case the plaintiff applied to the Municipality of Alibag on the 1st of December 1913 for permission to build a privy on his own land. The permission was granted by the Municipality on the 22nd of December. On the 8th of January 1914 the Municipality gave a notice to the present plaintiff requiring him not to build the privy until a further order was made. The plaintiff gave notice to the Municipality on the 6th of June of the present action, and on the 7th of July 1914 filed the suit for the cancellation of the order of the Municipality dated the 8th of January 1914 based on a resolution of the Managing Committee of the 6th January and for a declaration that he had a right to construct the privy. He also prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant Municipality from preventing the plaintiff in the work of constructing the privy, and for damages.

The trial Court allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the second order was beyond the powers of the Municipality and that the permission granted on the 22nd of December was good. Accordingly, a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff. The Municipality appealed from that decree. The learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal came to the conclusion that the order of the 3th of January 1914 was within the powers of the Municipality and that it was binding upon the plaintiff. He was, however, of opinion that having regard to the preparation which the plaintiff had made by way of commencing the work he was entitled to damages of Rs. 2. The decree of the trial Court was reversed on the main point and affirmed as to damages.

The present appeal is preferred by the plaintiff against that decree, and it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the second order made by the Municipality is ultra vires. It seems to me, on the facts of this case, that the first order made by the Municipality granting permission to the plaintiff to build the privy was a final order under sub section (2) of section 96 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act. The subsequent order which purports to be provisional in its character is not referable to sub-section (3) of that section. In the first place, it was not made within a month from the receipt of the notice given to the Municipality under sub section (1). Secondly, it did not purport to specify any period not exceeding a month. And indeed, from the omission of the Municipality to pass any further order after communicating this order to the plaintiff up to June 1914, it seems clear that though in form the second order was provisional in substance it was a cancellation of the permission already granted and practically a prohibition to the plaintiff against building the privy. But taking the order to be what it purports to be in form, it is clear that it is not covered by sub-section (3) because it is not a provisional order of the character contemplated by that sub-section. It was, in fact, made after the order granting the permission under sub-section (2). There is no other provision of the Act to which we have been referred on behalf of the Municipality as saving this order.

The only contention urged on behalf of the Municipality is that the powers of the Municipality under the Bombay District Municipalities Act are wide, and there is nothing in the Act to restrict its powers so as to make the order invalid. I am wholly unable to accept this argument.

In the absence of any power to cancel the permission once granted under sub-section (2) of section 96, I do not think that the order of the Municipality made on the 8th January 1914 is legal.

The view which I take of the powers of the Municipality is supported by the decision in Kareem Ranjan Khoji v. Emperor (1). The plaintiff, in my opinion, has succeeded in establishing that the second order of the Municipality is not binding upon him and that he is entitled to act under the permission which was granted to him before this order was made.

As to the relief to be granted, the Municipality did not contend in the lower Courts that even if the second order were bad the plaintiff would not be entitled to build the privy. Though the first permission in terms contains a condition that it shall not be in force after one year, I think that on the facts of this case the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction restraining the Municipality from interfering with the building of this privy. In my opinion, sub section 4 of section 96 has no application to the facts of the case, nor has it any bearing on the relief to be granted to the plaintiff.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs throughout on the defendant.

MARTEN, J.—The three important dates here are: 1st December, application by the plaintiff under section 96; 19th December, permission granted; and 6th January, resolution of the Managing Committee, notice whereof was given to the plaintiff on the 8th January 1914. Having regard to the decision in Kareem Ranjan Khoji v. Emperor (1), it cannot in this Court be contended that the Municipality had a right by their resolution of the 6th January 1914 to cancel the permission given on the 19th of December 1913. Nor can that resolution of the 6th of January be justified under section 96 (3), for it was not issued within a month from the receipt of the plaintiff's notice of the 1st December.

Therefore, as far as the real point is concerned, namely, as to the legality of this resolution of the 6th January, the Municipality are, in my opinion, in the wrong. I think, so far, that both the lower Courts are really agreed. The lower Appellate Court, however, refused to grant an injunction, because it said the work was not commenced within a year which ought to be done under section 96 (4) and that, accordingly, it would be improper to grant an injunction. On the other hand, it awarded damages to the plaintiff, which I think it could not have done unless it was of opinion that the plaintiff was right on the merits of the case and the Municipality were wrong. Now, as far as the point of commencing the work is concerned, it is a point which appears not to have been pleaded or taken in the Court of first instance. We also find that building materials were collected on the ground and workmen seem to have been employed there. I accordingly infer that there is, under all the circumstances, a sufficient commencement of the work within section 96 (4) of the Act, and that similarly there has been a compliance with the final clause of the permission given by the Managing Committee by their resolution of the 19th December and which was communicated to the plaintiff in the formal permission of the 22nd December.

That being so, I think, the injunction granted by the trial Court was right. I agree, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed and that the judgment of the trial Court must be restored and that the appellant must have all his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C of 18-5), s. 87—Landlord and tenant—Abandonment of holding—

Landlord, right of re-entry of—Transfer of non-transferable occupancy holding—Settlement by landlord, effect of.

When a holding has in fact been abandoned, the landlord is entitled to re-enter without having recourse to the provisions of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 148, col 1]

The plaintiff purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding from the heirs of the original tenant; a few days later the defendant purchased the same holding from a relation of the original tenant who had no right, title or interest in the occupancy holding. Both the plaintiff and the defendant obtained settlement of the land from the landlord, the defendant's settlement being prior to that of the plaintiff.

Held, that the settlements made by the landlord might be regarded in the light that they signified the landlord's consent to the transfers respectively set up by the plaintiff and the defendant and that inasmuch as the transfer set up by the defendant was from a pretended owner, the consent of the landlord could have no validating effect upon the title derived by the defendant from that transfer but it operated to validate and confirm the title derived by the plaintiff from the true owners. [p. 148, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—As between the plaintiffs and the defendants, apart from any settlement by the landlords, the plaintiffs have the better title. The plaintiffs purchased what must be assumed to be a non-transferable occupancy holding from the heirs of Sadali, who is found to have been the original tenant, and their conveyance is dated the 11th January 1912. By a conveyance dated the 18th January of the same year the defendants purported to purchase the holding from Abdul Khan. The latter had married Sadali's granddaughter, but it is conclusively found that he had no right, title or interest in the holding. The defendants, therefore, purchased nothing.

But then the defendants were the first to obtain settlement from the landlord. It is true that the landlord a few days later again settled the land with the plaintiffs, but, says the learned Subordinate Judge, the plaintiffs took no advantage thereby. His reason is that upon the sale of the holding by Sadali's heirs, the original tenancy came to an end and the land must be treated as having been abandoned. It was, therefore, open to the landlord to re-enter and settle the land with whom he pleased. Having settled it with the defendants, he had no right or power to grant a lease to the defendants. In that view the learned Subordinate Judge revised the Munsif's decree and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and on their behalf it was argued that both the so called settlements took place before the end of the agricultural year in which the abandonment occurred. Reference was made to section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it has been held that a landlord need not have recourse to the provisions of that section and is entitled to enter upon land which has in fact been abandoned, Manohar Pal v. Ananta Moyee Dasya (1).

Then it was argued that the Munsif was right in holding that what the landlord settled with the defendants was Abdul Khan's holding and as Abdul Khan had no holding the defendants got nothing. But if there was a settlement it related to the land and the description of it as Abdul Khan's holding would merely be fulsa demonstratio.

I am disposed, however, to be of opinion that the Munsif was right, if not in his reasoning, at any rate in his conclusion. It seems to me that the so called settlements may be regarded in this light that they merely signify the consent of the landlord to the transfers respectively set up by the parties. In that view the consent operates to validate and confer the title derived from the true owner; but can have no validating effect upon the title derived by the defendants from the pretended owner.

I would, therefore, discharge the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the Munsif with costs in this Court and the Court below.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898), s. 13, applicability of—Buddhist, Chinaman professing Buddhism, whether is—Confucianism and Buddhism, whether mutually exclusive—Chinese Customary Law, applicability of—Adoption, validity of.

Confucianism and Buddhism are not mutually exclusive religions. The former does not render a man incapable of following the latter religion as well. [p. 151, col. 2.]

It is not necessary for the application of section 13 of the Burma Laws Act that the person whose religion is under consideration should have been born a Buddhist, Muhamadan or Hindu, as the case may be. A Chinaman who professes Buddhism is a Buddhist within the meaning of this section. [p. 152, col. 1.]

Held, that the question of the plaintiff's adoption should be determined in accordance with the Chinese Customary Law. [p. 152, col. 1.]

Mr. R. N. Burjorn, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ba Shin, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant claimed to be the adopted son of U Shwe Hla, deceased, who was a Chinaman. The decision of the District Court is contained in the following passage of the judgment:—

"U Shwe Hla, while adhering to his ancestral religion (Confucianism), conformed more or less to Burman Buddhist practices in subscribing to religious works and festivals, but I cannot hold that he was a Buddhist in the absence of definite evidence."

Unless the plaintiff-appellant could prove that Shwe Hla was a Buddhist, the law governing the devolution of Shwe Hla's estate would be the Indian Succession Act, 1865, which does not recognise adopted sons. (The definition of "son" in the General Clauses Act, 1897, does not apply to the Indian Succession Act, 1865—see section 4, General Clauses Act.) If Shwe Hla was a Buddhist, the law to be applied would be the Chinese Customary Law applicable to Chinese Buddhists. This was decided in Fone Lan v. Ma Gye (1). In a later case of Apana Charan Chowdry v. Shwe

KYIN WET v. MA GYOK.

Nu (2) Mr. Justice Hartnoll observed that a Chinese plaintiff has to show that "there is a Chinese Buddhist Law in China applicable to Chinese Buddhists only as apart from the Customary Law...applicable to all the inhabitants, whether Buddhists or not". But this view does not appear to be well founded and it was not followed by the Bench in Ma Pua v. Yu Lwai (3). In the latter case Sir C. Fox pointed out that "the Chinese customs as to adoption and inheritance have no connection with Buddhism, Confucianism or Taoism, but they appear to be based to a great extent on the veneration of ancestors which existed before the first teachers of the three religions appeared, and which still is the strongest influence with the majority of Chinese, whichever of the above faiths they profess". As the law stands, however, we cannot give effect to these customs unless the Chinaman concerned is found to be of one of the three religions mentioned in section 13, Burma Laws Act, viz, a Buddhist, Muhammadan or Hindu. There is no question of the deceased Shwe Hla being a Muhammadan or Hindu: the only question is whether he was a Buddhist.

The subject of Chinese religion was discussed at some length in the Special Court case of Hong Ku v. Ma Thin (4). The Court held that it would be wrong to presuppose of a Chinaman that he is a Buddhist, and various authorities were cited to prove that Confucianism, Taoism and Buddhism, are distinct religions and that Confucians and Taoists are not Buddhists. The Special Court judgment in that case may and probably has already given rise to serious misapprehension as it omits to notice a unique feature of Chinese religious life, namely, that most of the Chinese people are Confucians, Taoists and Buddhists all at once. The official state religion is Confucianism, and it appears that there are strictly orthodox Confucians who do not follow Buddhist doctrines and forms of worship. But that the bulk of the Chinese follow all three religions is clearly shown by the writings of missionaries and others who have made a special study of Chinese life. A standard work on the subject is "Religion in China," Volume 8, (5) by Joseph Edkins, D.D., and in Chapter V he writes:—

"China presents a fine field for observing the mutual influence and conflict of those ideas which have most to do with the formation of character—the religious and the moral. We have there three great national systems existing in harmony. Three modes of worship, and three philosophies underlying them, have been there for ages interacting on each other. Sometimes they have been in conflict, but usually they have preferred state of peace. The Chinese would rather have toleration than persecution. They did not drive out the intruding religion that came to them from India, as the Japanese did Christianity in its Roman Catholic form. Nor did Confucianism expel the Taonist religion, as the Brahmans did Buddhism from the land of its birth. The Chinese quietly adopted all the religions, after a limited period of persecution, and now they exist side by side not only in the same locality, but, what is more extraordinary, in the belief of the same individuals. It is quite a common thing in China for the same person to conform to all the three modes of worship."

The same Chapter contains the following passage:—

"The religions of Confucius, Buddha and Taou are truly national, because the mass of the people believe in them all. They are far from feeling it inconsistent to do so. Philosophers may not know what to do with a fact like this; but it is true nevertheless. Those who themselves have a devoted love of truth, and feel strong convictions of certain things, do not understand how any one should belong to three religions at once. Hence some writers have parcelled out the Chinese among these systems, assigning so many millions to one and so many to another. In estimating the number of Buddhists in the world, one hundred and eighty millions of Chinamen are placed by one author at the head of his enumeration of nations. He has obtained this number by halving the whole population; a process conveniently short, but far from giving a true view of the case. If it serves for other races to refer every individual belonging to them to some one religion it will not answer for China. Some other mode of classification must be employed. The majority of the inhabitants in that country comply with the worship of more than one religion, believe in more than one mythology gods, and contribute to the support of more than one priesthood."

Commenting on Mr. Elkins' work the eminent Orientalist, Sir Alfred Lyall, wrote as follows in Chapter II of his Asiatic Studies (6 :—

"It is only in China that we find two mighty religious potentates, such as Confucius and Buddha, reigning with co-ordinate authority over one nation, and their ritual mingled with the adoration of the miscellaneous primitive divinities, who have elsewhere been usually extirpated, subdued or refined and educated up to the level of the higher and paramount religious conceptions. For, although the Chinese religions seem to have modified each other externally, and to have interchanged some colouring ideas, no kind of amalgamation into one spiritual kingdom appears to have ensued; it is at most a federation of independent faiths united under the secular empire. Whereas in other countries the chief religion is one, but the interpretations of it are many, so that the same faith is a moral system, a mysterious revelation or a simple form of propitiating the supernatural, in China a man may go to different religions, according to his needs or feelings, for specialities of various sides or phases of belief. Confucianism gives the high intellectual morality fortified by retrospective adoration of the great and wise teachers of mankind, and based on family affections and duties, but offering no promises to be fulfilled after death, except the hope of posthumous memorial veneration. Buddhism gives a metaphysical religion of infinite depth, with its moral precepts enforced by the doctrine of reward or punishment, according to merits or demerits acting upon the immaterial soul in its passage through numberless stages of existence. It contributes imposing ceremonial observances, the institution of monasticism, and a grand array of images and personified attributes for worship by simple folk who have immediate material needs or grievances. Buddha himself, having passed beyond the circle of sensation, is inaccessible to prayer, yet out of pity for men he has left within the universe certain disciples who, albeit qualified for Nirvanā, have consented to delay for a time their navishing into nothingness, in order that they may still advise and aid struggling humanity. Both Confucius and Buddha seem rather to have despised than denied the ordinary popular deities, and to have refrained, out of pity for weaker brethren, from open iconoclasm. Taoism has rewarded both these great teachers by apotheosis into a pantheon, which appears to be filled by every imaginable device, by personifications of everything that profits or plagues humanity, of natural phenomena, of human inventions, of war, literature, and commerce, by the deification of dead heroes and sages, of eminent persons at large, and of every object or recollection that touches men's emotions or passes their understanding. It is worth notice that the three persons who founded these three separate and widely divergent religions appear all to have lived about the same time in or near the sixth century B.C. And the impartial veneration accorded to them by the Chinese is shown by their being worshipped together, as the Trinity of the Sages."

A more recent work, "Buddhist China," by R. F. Johnston opens with a discussion of "The three religions of China" (7).

The following passage at the beginning of the book confirms the account given by Dr. Edkins:—

"Within the grounds of one of the most famous Buddhist monasteries in China—Shaolin in Henan—may be seen two stone tablets inscribed with pictorial statements of a doctrine that is familiar to all students of Chinese religion and philosophy—the trinity of the San Chiao, or three Doctrinal Systems of Buddhism, Confucianism and Taoism. On one of these tablets, the date of which corresponds to the year 1565 of our era, there is the incised outline of a venerable man holding an open scroll on which a number of wavy lines like tongues of flame converge and blend. The old man's draperies are symmetrically arranged, and his crouching figure is skilfully made to assume the appearance of a circle, the centre of which is occupied by the open scroll. The whole drawing is surrounded by a larger circle, which signifies ideal unity and completeness, or represents the spherical monad of Chinese cosmological philosophy. The other tablet, which is more than seven hundred years old, is of a less symbolical or mystical character. It shows us the figures of the representatives of the three systems standing side by side. Sakymuni Buddha occupies the place of honour in the centre. His head is surrounded by an aureole, from which issues an upward-pointing stream of fire, and beneath his feet sacred lotus-flowers are bursting into bloom. On the left of the central figure stands Lao-Chun, the legendary founder of Taoism, and on the right stands China's 'most holy sage'—Confucius.

The words which are ordinarily used to sum up the theory of the triunity of the three ethico-religious systems of China are San chiaoti—the three Cults incorporated in one organism or embodying one doctrine. The idea has found fanciful expression in the comparison of the culture and civilization of China with a bronze sacrificial bowl, of which the three 'religions' are the three legs, all equally indispensable to the tripod's stability.

"Such teachings as these are abhorrent to the strictly orthodox Confucian, who holds that the social and moral teachings of Confucius are all that humanity requires for its proper guidance; but they meet with ungrudging acceptance from vast numbers of Buddhists and Taoists, who, while giving precedence to their own cults, are always tolerant enough to recognise that Confucianism, if somewhat weak on the religious side, is strong and rich on the ethical side. They find an echo, indeed, in the hearts of the great majority of the Chinese people, who show by their beliefs and practices that they can be Buddhists, Taoists, and Confucians and all at the same time."

The only other quotation that we wish to make is from Professor Giles' "Confucianism and its rivals" (8):—

"In 1908, when their mandate was already exhausted, the Manchus foolishly elevated Confucius to the rank of a god, an honour which the old sage himself would have been the very first to repudiate. Still, during all their tenancy of the empire, Manchus kept Buddhism (an importation), and Taoism (an imitation) well in hand, and away from political aspirations.

"Confucianists will not readily avow any faith in either one or the other; at the same time, it is customary for all families to visit Buddhist or Taoist temples—often both, and to employ the priests—also of both, to recite masses for their dead."

It is probably true that every Chinaman who is not a Christian or a Muhammadan is a Confucian. He may be a Buddhist as well, but we cannot assume that he is without evidence of the fact. The important point, to establish which it has seemed desirable to set out the above extracts, is that the two religions are by no means mutually exclusive. On the contrary it appears to be exceptional for a Chinaman to be a Confucian and nothing else.

In enquiring whether a particular Chinaman is a Buddhist or not, one of the test questions might well be whether he worships Kuan-Yin also known as Kuan-Shih-Yin. As explained in the Special Court judgment Kuan-Yin is an object of almost universal reverence both in China and in Japan (where the name becomes Kwan-non). In "Buddhist China" Mr. Johnston describes Kuan-Yin as one of the attendant bodhistas of the Buddha Amitabha, and this author says that "Kuan-Yin (Avalokitesvara) probably receives a larger amount of willing reverence in China to-day than any other object of Chinese worship."

In the present case the evidence as to the religion professed by Shwe Hla before he came to Burma is merely that he was of "the Chinese religion." One witness said that he worshipped "Ti-gaung," but I have been unable to trace this object of worship and there is nothing to show that it is connected with Buddhism. No mention is made of Kuan-Yin. It is not established that Shwe Hla was of the Buddhist religion before he came here. It is admitted, however, that he professed Buddhism after he came to Burma and that he followed Buddhist practices. The admissions of the defendant Ma Gyok herself and of her witness Maung Twe confirm the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses that Shwe Hla in Burma professed Buddhism in addition to his "Chinese religion". Assuming that his "Chinese religion" was the official religion Confucianism, it would not render him incapable in Burma any more than in China of following the Buddhist religion as well. Like the bulk of his fellow countrymen he was probably a Buddhist before he came to Burma: but assuming that he was not, the fact that he became a Buddhist after he came to Burma, would be sufficient under section (3), Burma Laws Act. It is not necessary for the application of that section that the person whose religion is under consideration should have been born a Buddhist, Muhammadan, or Hindu, as the case may be. It follows that the question of the plaintiff's adoption should be determined in accordance with the Chinese Customary Law. The Succession Act does not apply to U Shwe Hla's estate.

(8) Hibbert Lectures. Second Series. Published by Williams and Norgate, London, (1915) (Page 253).

BANOMALI DUTTA v. LALIT MOHAN GHOSAL.

The decree of the District Court is set aside, and the case is remanded for determination of the remaining issues and for disposal accordingly.

The costs of this appeal will come out of the estate. A certificate will be granted to the appellant under the Court Fees Act for the refund of the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal.

LALIT MOHAN GHOSAL—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Execution—Judgment-debtor declared insolvent—Order in execution that certain properties were fraudulently concealed by judgment-debtor—Appeal, right of.

A judgment-debtor who has been adjudicated an insolvent, cannot maintain an appeal against a decision in execution proceedings that certain properties belonging to him were fraudulently concealed by him from his creditors. The only person who can appeal against such a decision is the Official Receiver [p 152, col. 2]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Hoogly, dated the 15th May 1917, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Howrah, dated the 10th June 1916.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellants.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by two of the judgment-debtors, who have been adjudicated insolvents, against the decision of the learned District Judge of Hoogly, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge at Howrah. These judgment-debtors appeal with reference to certain property that the learned District Judge, agreeing with the Subordinate Judge, has found to have been fraudulently concealed from the creditors and the Official Receiver. That obviously they cannot do. If this property belonged to the insolvents, then they were bound to disclose it and, under the provisions of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, that property vested in the Official Receiver. If it was not the property of the insolvents, of course, they had no right to appeal as regards thereto. In this case, if anybody has got a right of appeal, he is the Official Receiver who is quite satisfied with the means by which this decree-holder has managed to discover and recover this property from the fraudulent insolvents. The procedure that has been adopted in this case is not an uncommon procedure in this country with reference to the Provincial Insolvency Act. No pro:

per establishment has been created in the subordinate Courts for the working of this Provincial Insolvency Act, and the practice has grown up of discovering property fraudulently retained by the insolvent by means that appear in the present case. Of course we presume that the sale in this case was made with the concurrence of the Official Receiver. If the Official Receiver did not concur in the sale, his rights are not interfered with. The order provides for the sale proceeds to go to his hands. So, presumably, he knew and approved of the course of action adopted by the decreeholder, the respondent to the appeal.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs one gold mohur.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

(2) that the reversioners not being entitled to immediate possession during the lifetime of K. and R., the defendant's possession did not become adverse as against the plaintiff till the death of R. and that, therefore, the suit was within time. [p. 154, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, Ag. C. J.—This is a suit brought on behalf of an infant for possession of immoveable property. The circumstances attending the suit are these:—

One Daji Giram, who died some time before 1897, left two widows, Kashibai, who died in 1902, and Rangubai, who died in 1903. He left also two daughters, the elder, Shantabai, who died in 1907, leaving the present plaintiff, her son, who was born in 1905, and Triveni, who died in 1911. In March 1897, the senior widow Kashibai sold the property in suit to the 1st defendant. In July 1902, Kashibai died. Thereupon her surviving co-widow Rangubai took the property for a widow's estate, and the reversion did not fall in until the death of Rangubai on the 17th January 1903. On the occurrence of that event the reversioners were the two daughters, Shantabai and Triveni, and under the law in this Presidency they took severally an estate absolute. The lower Courts have dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by time.

On behalf of the plaintiff appellant, Mr. Coyajee's first contention was that the Article of the Limitation Act correctly applicable to the suit was 141, and not 144. That argument, however, cannot, in my opinion, be substantiated in the circumstances which I have set out. The plaintiff claims as the heir of Shantabai and the suit is not, in my opinion, one brought by a Hindu entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu female. This Article, as the decided cases show, is restricted to suits by a plaintiff whose right and title to sue for possession occurs upon the death of a female holding the limited woman's estate. The point was so decided in Azam Bhuyan v. Faizuddin Ahamed (1) by Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Ghose and these learned Judges, in considering the argument now under notice, observed that "Article 140 (of the Limitation Act) dealing with remaindermen, reversioners, and others, deals with a class of persons who claim under a title quite independent of the particular limited estate upon which the remainder, reversion, or other estate is dependent. And we think the case is the same under Article 141... We think it refers to persons who claim under an independent title on the death of a Hindu or Muhammadan female. It would be straining the language and introducing a rule inconsistent with the principle of the Act, if we were to hold that this Article applies to the case of a person suing on the very same cause of action which accrued to a Hindu female, and who acquires his right to sue as her heir." To the same effect is the decision in Hashmat Begam v. Mazhar Husain (2). On this point, therefore, the argument for the appellant must be disallowed.

(1) 12 C. 594; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 403.

RITU KUER v. ALAKHDEO NARAIN SINGHA.

But, secondly, it is contended that even if Article 144 applies, the defendant has not had that twelve years' adverse possession against the plaintiff which, under the Article, would be required for the invalidity of the plaintiff's suit. Here, I think, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. It may be conceded that the defendant's title was adverse to Rangubai until her death in 1903 and, as contended by the learned Advocate-General, it would have been open to the presumptive reversioners even during the lifetime of the widows to sue for a declaration that the alienation by the elder widow was void. That, however, in my opinion, is not enough. The classical definition of the term "adverse possession" is that given by Mr. Justice Markby in Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (3), where the learned Judge said: "By adverse possession I understand to be meant possession by a person holding the land, on his own behalf, of some person other than the true owner, the true owner having a right to immediate possession." These last words are of capital importance, because, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Batty, in Tarubai v.

Venkatrao (4), they express the well-known rule which is conveyed in the maxim contra non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio, that is to say, prescription does not run against a man during the time when he is not entitled to immediate possession.

The learned Advocate-General frankly admits that he cannot urge that during the lifetime of the widows any of these reversioners would have been entitled to immediate possession. That being so, the defendants' possession, however adverse against Rangubai, cannot be regarded as adverse against the plaintiff. The suit, therefore, is in time.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit must be remanded to the trial Court to be heard out and decided according to law.

The appellant must have his costs of this appeal.

This judgment disposes also of Second Appeal No. 988 of 1916.

KEMP, J.—I agree that Article 141 does not apply to the facts of this case, and assuming that the possession of the defendants was adverse to Kashibai, still I consider that no adverse possession runs against the plaintiff until the death of Rangubai on the 17th of January 1903. The suit is, therefore, within time.

Appeal allowed.

Where, rightly or wrongly, a Court with jurisdiction has disposed of the judgment-debtor's objections on the merits and has decided that the decree-holder is not competent by reason of a defect of parties to proceed with the execution, the decision is binding on the decree-holder till it is set aside. Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

Mr. Shoroshi Charan Mitra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This appeal arises out of the execution of a decree for costs passed so far back as 1904. The amount of costs allowed by the decree was a sum of Rs. 1,058, and the claim with interest and other expenses now amounts to Rs. 1,950 12-0. The course of the litigation is instructive.

The original judgment-debtors were Alakhdeo Narain and his sister Anant, who is now dead, and the execution is proceeding against Alakhdeo alone. The decree-holder was a man named Bhagwat Prasad. He, on the 17th July 1908, filed an execution petition which was dismissed on the 22nd February 1909, because he had died subsequently to the filing of the execution petition and no substitution of his heirs had been made in the execution proceedings. Bhagwat Prasad left a widow and two daughters, one of whom, Musammat Ritu Kuer, claimed the decree in question on the ground that Bhagwat during his lifetime had made a gift of it to her and on the 24th February 1911 she took out Letters of Administration in respect of her father's estate.

On the 13th June 1911, Ritu Kuer as administratrix filed the execution petition. That petition was dismissed on the 25th October 1911. The third execution petition was filed by her on the 6th January 1913, and the judgment-debtor Alakhdeo preferred an objection under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, contending that the decree could not be executed by Ritu Kuer in the absence of the widow and the other daughter of Bhagwat.

On the 28th June 1913, after several adjournments, the execution case came up before the Subordinate Judge, who made the following order:—

"It is clear from the testimony of the judgment-debtor's witness, Mahadeo Singha, that the mother of the applicant for execution is alive. Their plea is that as the decree stands in the name of her deceased father Bhagwat Pande she has no right to execution. The execution petition is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 8 ex parte. Decree-holder's Pleader is absent."

The creditor Ritu Kuer does not appear to have taken any steps to set aside this order; she simply ignored it and filed another execution petition on the 3rd March 1914, before the Subordinate Judge. That execution petition was dismissed because she failed to prove service of notice upon the judgment debtor. The next and last execution case was filed on the 16th November 1916, and in it the Subordinate Judge has given effect to the judgment-debtor's contention that so long as the order of the 28th June 1913 stands, it is a bar to all future execution proceedings in respect of this debt.

The present appeal is preferred by the creditor against the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the execution petition.

Now the first ground urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant is, that Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, applies to execution proceedings and that under rule 8 of that Order, even though the judgment debtor appeared the Court should have simply recorded an order of dismissal for default and was not in any way competent to go into the merits of the objections raised by the judgment-debtor. It is urged that in going into the merits of the objections the Court acted without jurisdiction, and, therefore, the order made on the 28th June 1913 is a nullity.

Now I am quite satisfied that Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to execution proceedings. Section 141, Civil Procedure Code, has been distinctly interpreted as meaning that it is not necessary for Courts to apply the provisions of Order IX to proceedings in execution and we have the clear authority of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Hari Charan Ghosh v. Monmatha Nath Sen (1) supporting this view.

There has been, it is true, some attempt on the part of other Courts to distinguish this case and to apply Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, to cases which seemed to those Courts to be proceedings of an original nature, but in my opinion it is impossible in view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2) as interpreted by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case cited above, to make any distinction between proceedings in execution which are of an original nature and those which are not. This is also the view taken by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Bharat Chandra Nath v. Yasin Sarkar (3).

The learned Vakil for the appellant has drawn our attention to the case of Satya Narayan Lal v. Gobind Sahay (4) but that case does not touch the present case. In that case a claim was made by a person who was not a party to the proceedings, and it was held by their Lordships of this Court that the proceeding was of an original nature and that Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, would apply for restoring the case after it had been dismissed for default. It is not necessary for the purposes of the case now before us to consider how far that decision is consistent with the view previously taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2). It is sufficient to say that the proceeding before the execution Court was not a proceeding similar to that in Satya Narayan Lal's case (4). In my opinion a decree-holder, whose case is dismissed for default, has his remedy by way of fresh applications within the period of limitation or by resort to the provisions of Order XLVII for review. There is no reason why additional facilities should be given to him by applying the provisions of Order IX.

Then it has been contended that although Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, may not apply the inherent powers of the Court should be invoked for the purpose of restoring the case, and reliance has been placed upon Bharat Chandra Nath's case (3) in support of the view that it is open to this Court to direct the Subordinate Judge to consider whether or not he should use his powers under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. Speaking for myself I should be entirely averse to any Court's using its inherent powers for the purposes of restoring execution cases. Execution creditors as well as the judgment-debtors have ample facilities under the existing law for restoring cases dismissed for default, and there is no reason why the extraordinary and vague jurisdiction given by section 151 should be resorted to for supplementing those facilities. I hold, therefore, that Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, was not applicable. It was, therefore, not illegal for the Subordinate Judge to go into the merits of the judgment debtor's objection. Moreover, if the Court has acted illegally by contravening Order IX, that would have been at best an error of law made by a Court with jurisdiction. The Court had the right to apply the law as it understood it and if in doing so it made a mistake, it cannot be said that the Court acted without jurisdiction.

In order to support his argument as to the want of jurisdiction on the part of the Subordinate Judge, the learned Vakil has also brought to our notice rule 57 of Order XXI, which says that if after attachment the decree holder fails to appear the attachment is void. That is an additional penalty but it has no bearing on the question of jurisdiction. In my opinion there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code which ousts the jurisdiction of the executing Court to go into the merits of the judgment-debtor's objections even though the executing creditor is absent. I cannot, therefore, accept the contention that even though the judgment-debtor is anxious to have the case decided on the merits, the Court cannot proceed in the absence of the executing creditor. It cannot be the intention of the law that judgment-debtors should be placed in this unsatisfactory and insecure position,

SAIAD SHA MAIDAL v. SRIDHAR DULEY.

Finally it is contended that there is no principle of law under which the order of the 28th June would be a bar to future executions.

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge has based his order on the principle of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (5). In that case the judgment-debtor was absent and in his absence the Court decided that a decree which was manifestly barred by law was not so barred, and proceeded to execute the decree under that erroneous view of the law. Their Lordships held that it was not open to the judgment-debtor in a subsequent execution to challenge the decree-holder's right to execute the decree by showing that the previous proceedings were incompetent.

Here, rightly or wrongly, a Court with jurisdiction has disposed of the judgment-debtor's contention on the merits, and has decided that the decree-holder was not competent, by reason of a defect of parties, to proceed with the execution. The principle of Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (5) clearly applies and it is not open to the decree-holder to come in and say that the previous order was wrong. The learned Vakil contends that in Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (5) the judgment-debtor, though he did not appear before the order was passed, did do so subsequently and accepted the order of attachment. That may be so, but the principle upon which their Lordships decided Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (5) was not founded upon any subsequent ratification by the parties.

The learned Vakil next relies on the case of Bholanath Dass v. Profulla Nath Kundu Chowdhry (6). In that case Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (5) was distinguished by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court on the ground that there was in fact no adjudication upon the merits, and the execution case was dismissed merely by reason of the absence of the decree-holder. Their Lordships held that as there had been no adjudication upon the merits, the principle of res judicata did not apply. Therefore, that case is no authority for the contention that the principle of Mungul Pershad Dichit's case (5) does not apply in every case where a judgment-creditor is absent. It was open to the decree-holder to appear on the day fixed for the hearing of the judgment-debtor's objections. The Court might certainly have dismissed the case without going into the merits, but it chose to go into the merits and its decision is, therefore, binding till it is set aside. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose), for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and it arises out of a suit for ejecting the defendant from a piece of agricultural land and a tank held by him under a kabuliyat for a term. The Courts below have given a decree for ejecting the defendant from the tank but not from the land, on the ground that he has been in possession of the land from before the execution of the kabuliyat and, therefore, has acquired a right of occupancy in it which entitles him to remain in occupation of the land. I submit that the Courts below have erred in holding that the defendant has acquired a right of occupancy in the land, because as soon as the defendant began to hold the land by executing a kabuliyat a new tenancy came into existence. The Courts below have relied on a case reported in 3 C. L. J.'s notes portion, but that case is distinguishable from the facts of the present case. Further, the Courts below have erred in law in making a division of the holding by giving a decree for ejectment as regards the tank and disallowing ejectment as regards the land. The defendant must show that he has acquired a right of occupancy after the new tenancy came into existence and as he has failed to show that, he is liable to ejectment.

Babu Nani Lal De, for the Respondent.—The evidence on the record shows that the defendant has been holding the land separately from the tank for more than twelve years prior to the execution of the kabuliyat, and so he having acquired a right of occupancy in the land the Courts below have rightly held that the defendant is not liable to ejectment from the land.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 8th June 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Serampur. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover possession of a piece of agricultural land and a tank, on the ground that the term under which the defendant held the property had expired. Both the Courts below have decreed the suit so far as regards the tank. The question arises only with reference to the agricultural land; and that turns on a consideration as to whether the defendant has a right of occupancy in the land. Both the Courts below have found that the defendant has a right of occupancy. The only question we have got to consider is, whether the findings are sufficient to dispose of the case. It is quite clear when one reads the judgment of the Munsif and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that the period of years for which the defendant and his father have been in possession and cultivating the land extends back far beyond the date when the lease was executed, that is, 1314. The rent receipts which were accepted by the first Court as genuine—and that finding has not been displaced or doubted by the lower Appellate Court—commenced from the year 1300. On that evidence, the Court obviously meant to find that the defendant and his father had been in possession and cultivating this land for more than twelve years prior to the execution of the lease. That being so, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act prohibit the plaintiff from contracting with his tenant that the tenant should give up the benefit of the right of occupancy, which the Statute expressly reserves to the tenant, and prevents the landlord from getting any relief on such a contract. The present appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 3, 6 (e), 8—Transfer of share along with profits already accrued due, validity of—Suit to recover profits, maintainability of.

Under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act only profits accruing after the transfer pass with the land. Profits already accrued due are not a beneficial interest in the land, since the land cannot be transferred with retrospective effect. [p 153, col 1.]

A suit, by an assignee of a village share along with the profits accrued due prior to the sale, to recover such profits is not maintainable, inasmuch as it is a suit for the enforcement of a mere right to sue within the meaning of clause (e) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. Chhindwara, in Civil Appeal No. 144 of 1915.

Mr. R. B. Gadgil, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. K. Padhye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sues for profits as assignee of a co-sharer. The assignor sold to the plaintiff (1) his village share; (2) the right to profits prior to the sale. The suit is brought under (2). The question is, whether the right to village profits prior to the transfer is a mere right to sue within the meaning of clause (e) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, or whether it is an actionable claim within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Act, and of the definition in section 3. The only suit that can be brought on the assignment, and the suit that has in fact been brought, is one of the nature described in Mohammad Farrukh v. Kadir Ali Khan (1). The cases cited by the learned District Judge are not helpful as they were suits for damages. The present is a suit for accounts from an agent. Such a suit, for an unascertained amount, cannot, I think, be called a suit for a debt. The observations of Blackstone quoted in paragraph 95 of Gour's Work on the Law of Transfer, 4th Edition, seem to me to be in point. There are duties and responsibilities of the co-sharer as well as of the lambardar. The mutual rights of the parties can be settled only between themselves. It is argued, with reference to paragraph 227 of the work cited, that what has been transferred is not a mere right to sue, since the share itself has been transferred. But under section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act only profits accruing after the transfer pass with the land. Previous profits are not a beneficial interest in the land within the meaning of the definition in section 3, since the land was not and could not be transferred with retrospective effect.

I am of opinion, therefore, in the absence of any cases directly to the point, that the suit has been brought on an assignment of a mere right to sue. The appellant must pay his own costs and those of respondent No. 1.

Appeal dismissed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy (with him Babu Madhab Govind Roy), for the Appellants.—The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the map and the chitta, being unregistered, are not admissible in evidence and consequently he has held that section 91 of the Evidence Act excludes other evidence in support of the partition. The view taken by the lower Appellate Court is wrong. The case cited by the lower Appellate Court [Upendra Nath Banerjee v. Umesh Chandra Banerjee (1)] is distinguishable. There the document in question was a deed of partition but in the present case the map and the chitta, produced by the plaintiffs, cannot be called deeds of partition.

They do not purport to operate, create or declare any right, title, or interest in immoveable property. So they do not come under section 17 of the Registration Act. It is difficult to say what would have been the decision in the present case, had these two documents not been excluded.

Dr. Sarat Chunder Bysack (with him Babu Annoda Charan Karkoon), for the Respondents.—Even conceding for the sake of argument that the map and the chitta were wrongly held to be inadmissible in evidence, there are findings of facts in the judgment which conclude this appeal.

[CHITTY, J.—Can you assure us that these two documents have no bearing on the case? Is there any plot in the map which is recorded in the name of the plaintiffs?]

There is one plot in the name of the plaintiffs.

[CHITTY, J.—Then how can you say that the learned Subordinate Judge has considered the whole evidence?]

Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs sued for a declaration of title and for khas possession of certain land, of which they alleged they had taken settlement from the maliks, known as the Chhoto Taraf of the Sannas share of Kismat Bennouri. In the Court of first instance the plaintiffs obtained a decree. In appeal that judgment was reversed and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. At the outset of his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge considered the admissibility in evidence of two exhibits tendered on behalf of the plaintiffs, a map (Exhibit 1) and a chitta (Exhibit 2). They were put in to prove that the land in dispute was allotted on a partition in 1318 to the Zemindars of the Chhoto Taraf of Delduar. The learned Subordinate Judge held that these documents were inadmissible in evidence under the provisions of section 49 of the Registration Act. This decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is, in our opinion, clearly erroneous. These documents could not be said to be instruments falling within the purview of section 17 of the Registration Act and thus requiring registration, for one was a map and the other a chitta or memorandum of the allotments made to the proprietors. Both documents, as we understand, were signed or alleged to be signed by the Amins who made the survey at that time. The documents were denied by one of the Amins who was called in the first Court, but the first Court held that they were signed by these Amins and were genuine documents. That question was not gone into in the lower Appellate Court. Having regard to the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge as to their admissibility, it is impossible for us to say what effect the consideration of these documents as evidence might have had upon the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. If the respondents had been able to assure us that they had no bearing on the case and could not have affected that judgment in any way then only could we have ignored the fact that they were shut out in appeal. That is not the case. It appears that in the map there is a plot which is recorded in the name of the plaintiffs and the same occurs in the chitta. As to the value of these documents as evidence, we can of course say nothing. But, if they were improperly excluded, it can hardly be said that the learned Subordinate Judge has properly considered all the evidence in the case. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal and for a fresh judgment on consideration of the whole of the evidence including these two documents. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Case remanded.

It is not desirable to impute repugnancy to the terms of a document where a consistent intention can be found from the study of the document as a whole. [p. 162, col. 2.]

A year usually means a period of 12 months, but the context of a document may show that a particular year, ending with a specified month or season, was intended. [p. 162, col. 2.]

A mortgagee has no right to remain in possession of the mortgaged property after the mortgage money is satisfied from the usufruct, even though the parties may have miscalculated that the liquidation of the mortgage money from the usufruct shall take a longer period and may have said so in the deed. [p. 162, col. 2.]

Where in consequence of an usufructuary mortgagee's failure to pay the money left with him for payment to a prior encumbrancer, the mortgagor has to satisfy the prior encumbrance, the mortgagor is entitled to claim at the time of redemption accounts of the realizations made by the mortgagee in spite of a stipulation to the contrary contained in the mortgage-deed. Such accounts should not be adjusted on the footing of the consideration actually advanced by the mortgagee, but the mortgagor is entitled to a set-off for the amount paid by him in satisfaction of the prior encumbrance [p. 162, col. 2; p. 163, col. 1.]

Where a mortgagee who is bound to pay off a prior incumbrance fails to do so and the mortgagor is compelled to pay it off and then sues the mortgagee for re-imbursement the suit is governed by Article 62 and not by Article 116 of the Limitation Act and limitation would begin to run from the date on which the plaintiff paid off the prior incumbrance. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 7th January 1916.

Mr. J. Jackson and Baba Ram Chandra, for the Appellant.

Babu Basudeo Lal, the Hon'ble Pandit
Gokaran Nath Misra, the Hon'ble Mirza

Sami Ullah Beg and Pandit Harkaran Nath
Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the redemption of a mortgage, effected by Gaya Singh and his wife Musammat Sundar, acting as the guardian of her sons Kaptan Singh, Dirgaj Singh and Sheobaran Singh, in favour of Prag on the 8th September 1905 and a deed of further charge executed by Gaya Singh and Musammat Sundar, acting as the guardian of Dirgaj Singh, in favour of the same person on the 7th December 1907. Kaptan Singh and Sheobaran Singh died during their minority without leaving any issue.

The mortgage was effected in lieu of Rs. 4,000, out of which Rs. 300 were left with the mortgagee for payment to Baiju about his prior mortgage, dated the 18th August 1903. The deed of further charge was executed in lieu of Rs. 2,404, out of which Rs. 225 were left with the mortgagee for payment to Jutta Sah about his mortgage of the 14th June 1907. By virtue of the mortgage, the mortgagee was given possession over the mortgaged property. The mortgage money carried interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem, and the covenant between the parties was that the mortgagee shall take the entire profits of the mortgaged property and after paying the Government revenue and village expenses chargeable on the same deduct the amount of annual interest due to him and credit the balance year after year in reduction of the principle money secured by the mortgage. In regard to the time fixed for redemption, the terms were not so clear. At one place it was stated that the mortgage shall be redeemable after ten years (bad muddat das sal); and at another place it was said that within the fixed period of ten years, the entire sum, comprising the principal and interest due to the mortgagee, would be fully paid up out of the annual net profits of the mortgaged property, and that the property mortgaged would be redeemed in the month of Jeth in the fallow season without the payment of any mortgage money or interest thereof. There was also an agreement that at the time of redemption the parties to the mortgage shall have no claim against each other for interest or for surplus profits. The money secured by the deed of further charge was re-payable with interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem after six months (bad muddat chhe mah), and if not so paid, at the time of the redemption of the mortgage, previously mentioned.

The property mortgaged in both these deeds has since been purchased by Mohan Lal. On the 4th June 1914 he deposited Rs. 3,247-2-0 on account of the said deeds of mortgage and further charge; but the mortgagee refused to accept the same. The present suit was, thereupon, filed by him for redemption, resulting in a decree in his favour subject to the payment of Rs. 1,873-5-10 to the mortgagee. In the memorandum of appeal, filed by the mortgagee several pleas were taken, but the learned Counsel who appears for him, has confined his arguments to only two matters. In the first place he contended that the possessory mortgage was not redeemable before the expiry of 10 years, and that the suit, filed by the plaintiff, was consequently premature. In the second place, he argued that the sum of Rs. 1,291 paid by the plaintiff to the heirs of Baiju in satisfaction of their prior mortgage on the 18th June 1913 was improperly debited against him in the accounts, inasmuch as the claim of the mortgagors for damages, caused by the failure of the mortgagee to pay the money left with him for payment to Baiju, was barred by Article 116 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The mortgage deed is very inartistically worded, and there is a certain amount of apparent inconsistency between the earlier and later clauses. If the mortgage was not redeemable till after the expiry of ten years from the date of the mortgage, the suit would be premature by about three months. If, on the other hand, effect be given to the covenant in the mortgage-deed that redemption should take place in the month of Jeth in the fallow season, the computation of full ten years from the date of the mortgage would give possession to the mortgagee for a period of nearly ten years and eight months or 11 agricultural years of two harvests each. It is not desirable, however, to impute repugnancy, where a consistent intention can be found from the study of the document as a whole. An agricultural year ordinarily ends with the 30th of June, after which the land is brought under fresh cultivation. On the date on which the possessory mortgage in suit was executed, the collection of rents for the Kharif harvest had not commenced, so that the mortgagee must have in the ordinary course realized the entire rent for the agricultural year 1905-1906. By the end of Jeth 1915, ten full agricultural years were completed, and from the fact that redemption was to take place in that month in the fallow season after the expiry of ten years, it is reasonable to presume that agricultural years were intended. A year usually means a period of 12 months, but the context may show that a particular year, ending with a specified month or season, was intended. It could hardly have been the intention of the parties that the mortgagee should remain in possession of the mortgaged property and collect rents for the same for full 11 agricultural years or 22 harvest seasons, and the tender, which was made in Jeth 1915, and the suit, which followed it, cannot, therefore, be regarded as premature.

A mortgagee has, moreover, no right to remain in possession of the mortgaged property after the mortgage money is satisfied from the usufruct, even though the parties may have miscalculated that the liquidation of the mortgage money from the usufruct shall take a longer period and may have said so in the deed. "Any stipulation in a mortgage," says Ashburner, "is invalid, if it prevents the mortgagor from redeeming, or allows the mortgagee to retain for his own benefit any part of or any interest in the mortgaged property after the mortgage has been discharged" (Ashburner on Mortgages, Indian Edition, page 341). The important thing in such cases is to ascertain whether it was the intention of the parties, as expressed in the deed, to postpone redemption till the mortgagee had enjoyed the usufruct for the full period mentioned. As pointed out in Gopal Singh v. Karan Singh (1), such term may not form an essence of the contract, where the mortgagee is only to take interest at a specified rate from the profits of the mortgaged property and to credit the rest towards the principal money. In Bakhtawar Begam v. Husaini Khanam (2) where a mortgage-deed provided for redemption in nine years and the mortgage debt was satisfied earlier, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that limitation for a suit for the redemption of such a mortgage should be computed from the date of its satisfaction and not from the date when the period of nine years, fixed for redemption, had expired. Section 62 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the mortgaged property, where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself the mortgage money from the rents and profits of the property, when such money is paid. It makes no reservation in favour of any contract to the contrary and, as the mortgage money was paid up from the usufruct long before the suit, the mortgagee has no right to withhold possession of the mortgaged property or to resist a suit brought for redemption of the same.

It is contended on behalf of the mortgagee that the plaintiff was not entitled under the terms of the mortgage to claim accounts of the realizations made by the mortgagee. But the conduct of the mortgagee in this case in not paying the mortgage money left for payment to Baiju, the prior encumbrancer, renders accounting essential. He did not pay the entire consideration money secured by the mortgage, and failed to carry out his part of the contract in so far as it related to the payment of the prior encumbrance due to Baiju. Baiju, accordingly, sued for the recovery of his money, making the mortgagee a party to his suit, and got a decree for sale, which was satisfied by the present plaintiff for the protection of the rights which he had purchased from the mortgagors. Whatever the terms of the original contract may have been, the mortgagee had no right in the circumstances to appropriate the entire profits of the mortgaged property for a period of ten years, in whichever manner that period may be calculated, when he failed to pay a portion of the consideration secured by the mortgage. He who seeks equity must do equity, and a person cannot expect another to abide by a contract which he has himself broken. In either view of the case, the plaintiff was justified in claiming accounts and seeking redemption as soon as the mortgage money advanced by the mortgagee, with the interest due thereon, was satisfied.

The next point for consideration is whether the accounts ought to be adjusted on the footing of the consideration actually advanced by the mortgagee, or whether the plaintiff is entitled to a set-off for the amount paid by him to the heirs of Baiju in satisfaction of their prior mortgage, which the mortgagee had undertaken to pay out of the consideration money left with him for the purpose. A suit for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered ordinarily lies under Article 116 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) within six years from the date of the breach. But the plaintiff does not claim damages for the breach of that contract. He only claims recoupment for the amount actually paid by him to the prior encumbrancer on the defendant's account. Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to such a case, and the plaintiff is entitled to a set-off for the amount paid by him on the defendant's account on paying the requisite Court-fee. The suit was filed within three years from the date of the payment. The allegation of the mortgagee that he had offered the money to Baiju and that Baiju had refused to take it was disbelieved by the Court below, and no argument has been addressed to us to contest the correctness of that finding. In Hakim Ali Khan v. Dalip Singh (3) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that the limitation for a suit for re-imbursement would run from the date on which the plaintiff paid the decretal money due on the first mortgage.

In Rani Raghubans Kuar v. Raunak Ali (4), where a mortgagee brought a suit for the recovery of money due on his mortgage, and had not paid a portion of the mortgage money left with him for payment to a prior mortgagee, it was held that the mortgagee was entitled to recover such portion of the principal amount, as was actually paid by him, with interest thereon, and that the mortgagor could in a separate suit sue the plaintiff for the recovery of such damages as might have accrued to him owing to the failure of the mortgagee to carry out his part of the contract. But in that case no payment had actually been made by the mortgagor to save the mortgaged property from sale in satisfaction of the prior mortgage, and the damages did not form an ascertained sum, in regard to which a set-off could have been claimed under section 111 of the then Code of Civil Procedure. It is true, as pointed out in Raghubar Rai v. Jaij Rai (5), that a mortgagor may file such a suit before he has suffered any loss by reason of the failure of the mortgagee to carry out his part of the contract. But a suit for re-imbursement is different in its nature from a suit for damages, and Article 116 of the Indian Limitation Act can only apply to the latter. The plaintiff has now been directed to pay the requisite Court-fee on the claim for re-imbursement.

The other points taken in the memorandum of appeal have not been pressed.

The plaintiff has filed a cross-objection, urging that no interest ought to have been allowed to the mortgagee after the 4th June 1914, when Rs. 3,247-20 were tendered under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. If the tender was sufficient no interest should have been allowed to the mortgagee after the date of that tender. It is not possible, however, to determine whether that tender was sufficient or to settle the account finally, till it is ascertained whether the mortgagee had paid Rs. 225 to Gaya Singh, on Jutta Sah refusing to receive the same as he now alleges. The learned Subordinate Judge has since his decision under appeal allowed an application for a review of his judgment with a view to inquire into that matter; but it does not appear whether he has come to any finding on that point.

The Court below is, therefore, directed to determine, after taking such additional evidence as the parties may adduce,—

1. Whether the mortgagee tendered Rs. 225 to Jutta Sah as alleged by him, and, on his refusal to receive the same, paid that sum to Gaya Singh?

(5) 14 Ind. Cas. 244; 31 A. 429; 9 A. L. J. 534.

2. What is the amount remaining due to the mortgagee on the deed of further charge, calculated on the footing of the consideration actually paid by him, after crediting the surplus profits received by him from the mortgaged property up to the date of the suit and excluding from the account Rs. 1,342 or any portion thereof which has been found to have been paid to the heirs of Baiju?

Two months' time will be allowed for a return of the findings and ten days from the date of the findings will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Issues remitted.

Chowkidari chakran lands within putni, resumption of—putnidar and zemindar, rights of.

Chowkidari Chakran lands included within a putni belong to the putnidar after they are resumed, so that the zemindar's settlement of those lands after their resumption with a third person is ineffective as against the putnidar. [p. 16, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 14th of September 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th of September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Monindra Nath Banerjee), for the Appellant. The plaintiff is the appellant and the appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession of Chowkidari Chakran lands belonging to the three Zemindars. The lands were resumed by the Government and made over to the Zemindars. With regard to the 15-annas landlord, the plaintiff holds under a settlement. The one-anna landlord Gora Chand Roy let out his share in Putni lease to one Bibi Azimunnissa in 1890. Thereafter Gora sold his share to Kali Prosonno in 1899 and the plaintiff took settlement from Kali Prosonno. The present defendants purchased the right of Azimunnissa in Putni; the Putni was sold away for arrears of rent and purchased by the defendants in 1312 B. S. corresponding to 1905 A. D. The plaintiff was in possession of the lands for more than 12 years from 1303 to 1319 B. S., when he was dispossessed by the defendants. The defence is that as the Chowkidari Chakran land was included in the Putni purchased by the defendants at the rent sale, the Zemindar had no right to settle it with the plaintiff. From the lease it appears that the Chowkidari Chakran lands did not pass to the Putnidar. There is an express mention in the lease that the Chowkidari Chakran lands would not pass by the demise. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to recover the lands in suit. Refers to Ranjit Singh Bahadur v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). The words in the lease are "on resumption you will be entitled to get settlement." Refers to Surendra Mohan Sinha v. Rajendra Nath Roy (2).

The next point is that as trespasser the plaintiff has been holding the land for more than twelve years and so he has acquired a right to the lands by virtue of adverse possession for the statutory period. If the plaintiff is not a person who has been inducted into the lands lawfully, then he is a trespasser, and he having held the lands as trespasser for more than twelve years has acquired a right by adverse possession.

Babu Hira Lal Sanyal, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 14th September 1916, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Suri. The suit was brought to recover possession of certain Chowkidari Chakran lands lying within two Mouzas. The plaintiff admittedly has got a fifteen-annas share of these Mouzas under leases granted to him by the owners of the property. The question arises as to the remaining one-anna share; and the way that question arises is this: The defendants are Putnidars claiming through one Gora Chand Roy who originally owned this one-anna share, and the question is whether in the Putni lease granted by Gora Chand Roy the resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands were included, because if they were included it is quite clear that the subsequent lease of the one-anna share of the Chowkidari Chakran lands to the plaintiff was ineffective. The first point is what passed by the lease? The words of demise in the lease are purely general words. But it is said that these general words are cut down by reason of certain words that appear subsequently in the Putni lease, and those words have been translated by the learned Judge in this way: That if the Chowkidar's Chakran lands were resumed, the Putnidars would get them. Dr. Mitter wishes to translate them in this way: That if the Chowkidar's Chakran lands were resumed, then a lease of the resumed lands would be granted to the Putnidars. Of course, in that view, to give full effect to the demise, you have got to exclude from the demise the resumed Chowkidari Chakran lands because the parties provided by express terms that, if they were resumed, a new and independent lease would be given to the Putnidars. Apparently the words do not bear the meaning that Dr. Mitter wishes them to bear. The learned Judge, according to Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda, gives more or less an accurate translation of those words. That being so, the words were simply put in to explain that the lease was to include all Chowkidari Chakran lands that might be resumed, so as to conclude any question that might be raised subsequently between the parties. If that is so, it is quite clear that the plaintiff at the time he took this lease of the one-anna share got nothing because his lessor's predecessor-in-title had already parted with all his interest in the Chowkidari Chakran lands by the Putni in favour of the defendants.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. HIRANAND OJHA.

Then another point has been raised, and that is that the plaintiff has got a title by adverse possession. The learned Judge remarked that that case was never raised in the lower Courts and I think that is probably right, because, if the defendants are co-sharers with the plaintiff, there is no allegation that there was any act by the plaintiff which would render his possession adverse as against his co-sharers. His case was that the defendants had no interest in these Chowkidari Chakran lands. He never set up any case that, if the defendants had any interest, they had lost it by reason of having been excluded by the plaintiff. I think the learned Judge was right in saying that no case of adverse possession arose in the present case and that that case had never been made. In that view, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

License—Permanent structure built upon land—Revocation of license.

Where by an oral agreement the plaintiff allowed the defendant to execute and work out on the plaintiff's land an irrigation scheme of considerable permanent benefit to a very large number of villages at a considerable amount of expense:

Held, that the agreement created a license which could not be revoked at the instance of the plaintiff. [p. 169, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Palamau.

Mr. Fakhruddin, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts and circumstances from which this appeal arises are as follows:—

The plaintiffs-respondents and the pro forma defendants are owners of a village called Man-Ahar, in which is situated a reservoir bearing the same name. The plaintiffs-respondents have an eight-anna share in this village. It appears that there are some estates in the neighbourhood of this village that are owned by Government.

An irrigation scheme known as Sadabha scheme was mooted in the year 1905. The project was to bring a channel from the Sadabha stream to the Government villages and such other villages as wished to participate in the benefits of the scheme. It appears that a number of villages through which the proposed channel was to come were admitted into the scheme and on the 26th of February 1908 a memorandum of agreement was drawn up fixing the rights and liabilities of all those that wished to join. The memorandum is marked as Exhibit A in the case. The plaintiffs-respondents, among others interested in the scheme, it is alleged, signed this agreement. It was agreed amongst the parties that lands lying or situate in the respective villages or shares of villages required for the purposes of the said scheme would be given free of cost. It was also agreed upon that the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau representing the Government estates was to distribute the water that was to be brought from the Sadabha river among all who were admitted to the benefits of the scheme in such a way as would meet all the requirements for irrigating the fields, and that he should not obstruct in any way the flow of water through the main channel of the said scheme, provided no waste was committed in the use of the water; nor it was agreed upon, the Deputy Commissioner or others who signed the agreement should have the right to obstruct the flow of the water in any of the subsidiary channels of the scheme with a view to divert water into any reservoir or reservoirs, but that each of them should be at liberty to prevent all excess flow of water into any reservoir, provided that by so doing he did not in any way unduly interfere with the proper supply of water to any person entitled to be supplied. After parties had so agreed the work of construction was taken up, and it appears that the channel made from the Sadabha river was taken down through the plaintiffs-respondents' village Man-Ahar skirting the eastern side of their reservoir called Man Ahar to the villages to the south of it including the Government estates. The agreement included a stipulation for the proprietors of the villages concerned to pay towards the construction of the scheme in the same proportion to the total cost of construction as the road-cess payable by each of these villages was to the road-cess of all the villages admitted to the benefits of this scheme. It was further stipulated that the maintenance of the scheme and its preservation were to be carried on by further contribution upon the same basis. On the completion of the work it transpired that a portion of the channel (colored "red" in Exhibit C, the map on the paper-book) was found to be of such a level that the water brought from the Sadabha river could not freely flow down to the south. This necessitated a slight diversion of the channel and the diversion in question was effected, as is shown in the map, Exhibit C, by cutting a channel from the main channel into the reservoir known as Man-Ahar at its north-eastern corner and taking out another channel from its south-eastern corner further south again to the main channel. This arrangement resulted in converting the reservoir, Man Ahar, into an important and integral part of the scheme, as the water brought down in the channel from the Sadabha fell into this reservoir at the north-eastern corner and flowed down again from the south-eastern corner falling into the main channel lower down. The inclusion of this reservoir as a part of the old scheme was effected at a cost of Rs. 688.7-6, which was met by the funds raised for the purposes of the carrying out of the scheme. The embankments of the Man Ahar reservoir were for this reason raised and strengthened.

The plaintiffs' case is that the construction of the channel on the land belonging to them and the inclusion of Man-Ahar reservoir into the scheme by cutting the two new channels, raising and strengthening the embankments were acts done by the Deputy Commissioner of Palamanu without their knowledge or consent. It is also alleged by them that the construction of the channel has stopped the supply of surface water from the north-east into their reservoir and that they were also prevented by the Deputy Commissioner from taking water from their Man Ahar reservoir to other reservoirs owned by them for the purposes of irrigating their fields and that thereby they have suffered loss of crops. The relief claimed is the declaration that the defendant No. 1, Secretary of State for India in Council, has no right to the use of the water of the reservoir called Man Ahar and for an order directing him to remove all structures made by him on plaintiffs' land and the award of damages for loss of crops due to his having prevented the plaintiffs from irrigating their fields from the water of Man Ahar.

The defendant denies generally the allegations of the plaintiffs and rests his suit principally on the ground of estoppel, alleging that the Sadabha scheme with the subsequent inclusion of Man Ahar was carried out with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs. He also denies that there has been any loss of crops suffered by them.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case gave his decision as follows:—

"The suit be decreed to the effect that on payment of Rs. 636 into Court in favour of defendant No. 1 within 4 months from this day the plaintiffs shall have free and uncontrolled use of the Ahar called Man Ahar and its water as against defendant No. 1 from the 1st of October 1915 and that the defendant No. 1 shall have no right to the use of the same from the 1st of October 1915. On failure to deposit the amount within the period fixed the plaintiffs shall have no right to prevent the defendant No. 1 from the use of the said Ahar and its water.

"No damages allowed, parties are to bear their own costs."

We have to consider whether this order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge can be sustained. Before we deal with the points of law raised by the learned Government Pleader we wish to express our entire concurrence with the finding of the lower Court regarding the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs and with reference to the carrying out of the original Sadabha scheme and the subsequent inclusion of Man Ahar in it. The evidence on the record on this point is overwhelming. Exhibit A of the Commissioner appointed to take the evidence of Mr. Hignell, who was Deputy Commissioner of Palamau in 1908, is a note, dated the 4th of April of that year, written by the witness. This document read with the evidence of Mr. Hignell leaves no room for doubt that the plaintiffs were willing parties to the completion of the Sadabha irrigation scheme by the inclusion of their reservoir Man Ahar. It is also abundantly proved that the plaintiff Hiranand Ojha gave his consent to the raising and strengthening of the embankments of the Ahar for the purposes of the scheme. Exhibit F is a note, dated the 15th of March 1908, submitted by the District Engineer to the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau. This note shows that the entire work was completed with the exception of a few subsidiary channels at a cost of Rs. 18,126-10-6. Exhibit B is a petition of the plaintiff Hiranand Ojha, dated the 10th of November 1909. This was in reply to a notice served on him to pay up the proportionate cost of construction in respect of some villages admitted to the benefit of the Sadabha scheme. A perusal of this petition is sufficient to show that he had willingly joined the supporters of the scheme and had actually accepted the liability to pay cost of construction in proportion to such share or shares of villages as were in his direct possession and were benefited by the scheme. Exhibit K is a copy of a judgment in money Appeal No. 13 of 1913, given by the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi on the 4th of January 1914. It appears that the plaintiff Hiranand Ojha failed to contribute his share of the cost of the Sadabha irrigation scheme and a suit had to be instituted against him by the Secretary of State for India in Council for the realization of the amount due from him. The suit was decreed and the finding of the Judicial Commissioner in that case was that Hiranand Ojha had fully participated in the benefits of the scheme and was accordingly liable for his share of expenses incurred in giving effect to that scheme. It is unnecessary to labour with this part of the case and it would be sufficient to say that we have no hesitation in holding that the Sadabha scheme, as originally agreed to, and the subsequent inclusion of the reservoir Man Ahar in it, had been carried out with the full knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge having found against the plaintiffs on the question of their knowledge and consent arrived at his decision from the point of view as to whether an oral agreement or contract between the plaintiffs and the Deputy Commissioner in respect of an immoveable property worth more than Rs. 100 could be given any effect to. It is true that in the absence of a registered instrument making a gift of the land on which the Sadabha scheme was executed according to the memo. of agreement, there remains nothing but an oral contract. This view of the learned Subordinate Judge is not seriously challenged, as the contention of the learned Government Pleader is that even if the provisions of the Contract Act and the Transfer of Property Act have no application to the suit, it deserved to be dismissed on other grounds.

The learned Vakil presses upon our consideration that if the agreement between the plaintiffs and the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau did not amount to a gift of the land in village Man Ahar over which the scheme was carried out, under any circumstances it was a grant which fulfilled all the legal conditions of a license. License has been defined as "a grant by one person to another or to a definite number of other persons of a right to do or continue to do in or upon the immoveable property of the grantor something which would, in the absence of such right, be unlawful and such right not amounting to an easement or an interest in the property." This definition is contained in section 52 of the Indian Easements Act (Act V of 1882). This Act does not apply to this Province, but the definition is borrowed from the English Law and there can be no question that in the absence of an enactment of the Indian Legislature we must be guided by the principles of the English Law. A license may be created by parole [vide, Hewlins v. Shippam (1), Fentiman v. Smith (2)]. We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the facts proved in this case establish the grant of a license by the plaintiffs to the defendant represented by the Deputy Commissioner of Palaman.

The next question for consideration is, whether a license is revocable. Section 60 of the Act referred to above provides for its revocation by the grantor, unless (a) the license is coupled with a transfer of property and such transfer is enforced, and

(b) unless the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of a permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution.

In the present case we are not concerned with any question of transfer of property, and there can be no doubt that the defendant through the Deputy Commissioner of Palaman acting upon the license has executed the Sadabha irrigation scheme which is of a permanent character and has incurred expenses in the execution.

In the present case, however, what we have to consider is whether on the facts and circumstances of the case the license granted by the plaintiffs to the defendant should be revoked. If the case were governed by the Indian Easements Act, it would, under section 60 of that Act, be irrevocable, but that Act does not apply to the Province of Bihar and Orissa. We have, therefore, to come to a decision on consideration of what is reasonable and just [Plimmer v. Wellington Corporation (3)] The decision, therefore, does not rest on regard for the strict legal rights of the parties so much as on the supervening equities of the case. There can be no question on the evidence that the Sadabha irrigation scheme is a work of considerable permanent benefit to a very large number of villages and that a considerable amount of money has been spent upon its construction. There can also be no doubt that on the consent given by the plaintiffs and reliance having been placed upon the same a scheme of this magnitude was carried out, of which the reservoir known as Man Ahar has been an integral part and on which a very large sum of money has been spent. These are grave considerations in the case. It is also evident that if the prayer of the plaintiffs is granted, whatever new method may be adopted to re-construct the scheme on a fresh basis, the loss in money and convenience would accrue not only to the defendant but to a large number of proprietors of villages other than Man Ahar that are at present receiving benefit from the existing scheme. The revocation of the license is a matter of discretion with the Court and it can only be exercised on a balance of the consideration of the equities of the case. On a careful consideration of the facts and circumstances of this case we have no hesitation in holding that the equities are on the side of treating the license as irrevocable. It does not also appear to us on the evidence that the plaintiffs resent the bringing of the Sadabha water into Man Ahar reservoir but what is disliked by them is its control by the Deputy Commissioner of Palaman. If the plaintiffs claimed to take this water into other reservoirs of their own without any reference to the Deputy Commissioner they seem to have wholly ill-conceived their remedy in instituting the present suit. The result is that the decree of the lower Court is vacated and the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed with costs throughout.

LAKSHMI KANTA DE V. CHAIRMAN OF THE NAIHATI MUNICIPALITY.

Person holding office of profit under Municipality, whether qualified to be elected Commissioner—Election Rules, r. 13, meaning of.

A person who is disqualified under section 57 of the Bengal Municipal Act is ipso facto disqualified for election as a Municipal Commissioner. [p. 171, col. 1.]

A person who held and still holds an office of profit under the Commissioners of a Municipality, such as a teachership in a Municipal School, is not qualified to be elected as a Commissioner. [p. 171, col. 1.]

Rule 13 of the Election Rules means that only those persons should be included in the list of candidates who are qualified to be elected. [p. 171, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 18th July 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Barasat, dated the 20th June 1916.

FACTS.—The plaintiff-appellant, who was a teacher in the Municipal School, was a voter in one of the wards of the Naihati Municipality. He offered himself as a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner in a ward where there were two other candidates, viz., defendants Nos. 2 and 3. There were two vacancies in that ward. The Chairman, a voter of the Municipality, thought that the plaintiff was not eligible for election under rule 13 of the Election Rules read along with section 57 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), because he held an "office of profit" under the Municipality, and referred the matter to the District Magistrate for decision. The District Magistrate supported the view of the Chairman and the nomination paper was rejected. The plaintiff, being dissatisfied with the action of the Chairman, brought this suit. The Courts below dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff.

Babu Manmohan Bose (with him Babu J. M. Mitter), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is a school master in a school which received grant from the Municipality. The question is whether being a teacher of the school, the plaintiff held an office under the Municipality? It is a private school. A fund, when made up of grants and other sources, does not retain its character of any of those sources. The question is whether section 57 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884) applies to any person other than what the section clearly says. The disqualification mentioned in section 57 applies only to a Commissioner and not to a candidate and that the Commissioner can only be removed by the Commissioner of the Division under section 20 of the Act (see Pargiter's book on Bengal Municipal Act, 2nd Edition, page 86, paragraph 3).

The Act does not empower the Chairman to reject the nomination paper, because the candidate may give up the office of profit just before the election.

Mr. J. M. Mitra and Babus Ram Chander Majumdar, Rishendra Nath Sarkar and Samarendra Nath Datt, for the Respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff arising out of a suit brought by him against the Chairman of the Naihati Municipality and two persons who were elected as Commissioners for the ward for which the plaintiff considered himself a candidate. The election was to be held on 9th October 1915. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were duly nominated as candidates. We may assume that the nomination of the plaintiff was also in order but we find nothing as to that on the records. The Chairman was in doubt whether the plaintiff was qualified having regard to section 57 of the Bengal Municipal Act. He referred it on 17th September 1915 to the Magistrate, presumably under rule 29 of the Election Rules; and the Magistrate on the same day ruled that the plaintiff was not qualified to be elected as a Commissioner. An appeal to the Commissioner of the Division by the plaintiff was, we understand, unsuccessful. On 21st December 1915 the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration, first, that the cancellation of his candidature was ultra vires and illegal; secondly, that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could not sit as duly elected Commissioners; and, thirdly, that the action of the Chairman in rejecting his application was illegal and ultra vires and that the election of the defendants was also ultra vires and void. Later on, a prayer was added for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from sitting.

Both the Courts have found, as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff held and still holds an office of profit under the Commissioners. That finding we cannot question in second appeal. The question then arises whether the Chairman, in these circumstances, was justified in excluding the plaintiff's name from the list of candidates which he was bound to prepare and publish under rule 14.

It has been argued here that the disqualification of a Commissioner under section 57 could only be determined by the Commissioner of a Division under section 20 of the Act. Section 20, however, has no bearing on the present case. That section only provides for the removal by the Commissioner of a Division of any Commissioner under various circumstances, one of which is—if, in the judgment of the Commissioner of the Division to be recorded in writing, he has become disqualified to continue in office under section 57. This is not a case of becoming disqualified after election or being disqualified to continue in office. Rule 13 which was amended in 1898 now runs: "Any person qualified to vote under these Rules, and not disqualified under section 57 of the Act, shall be qualified to be elected as a Commissioner." One would think, reading that rule in the ordinary meaning of the English words, that a person who is disqualified under section 57 would be ipso facto disqualified for election. It is, however, argued that there is no rule against a disqualified person becoming a candidate and that he should be allowed to be elected and have his election forthwith cancelled or—possibly if it so pleased him—allowed to give up the office of profit or the contract or whatever it might be which disqualified him from continuing as a Commissioner. I do not think that the rules were framed with such an object in view, nor do I think that that is a reasonable view to take. They must, I think, mean that only those persons shall be included in the list of candidates who are qualified to be elected: otherwise a list of candidates would be of no use whatever. In that view of the Rules, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed. It may be mentioned that it would be useless to make any order in this case, as it is now one of purely academic interest having regard to the lapse of time since the election took place. The appeal is dismissed with costs, one set to the defendant No. 1 and one set by the defendant No. 2.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (f), scope of, Sch. II, paras. 1, 15, 17, 20—Order refusing to file award on private reference, nature of—Application to file award on private arbitration—Subsequent reference to new arbitrator through Court—Application to file second award—Order setting aside award, whether decree—Appeal—Revision.

Clause (f) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, refers to cases where a matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. [p. 172, col. 2.]

There is an inherent difference between orders refusing to file an award on a matter referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and those referred to under paragraph 1 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. In the former case, if the Court refuses to file an award, its order amounts to a formal adjudication on the matter in controversy and conclusively determines the rights of the parties. In the case of orders setting aside an award under paragraph 15 of the Second Schedule, the order is only of an interlocutory nature and is in no way a conclusive adjudication of the matter in dispute [p. 172, col. 2; p. 173, col. 1.]

A dispute between members of a firm was privately referred by them to arbitration. An award being given, an application was made for filing it. Objections were raised and an issue as to the misconduct of the arbitrators was framed. Meanwhile the parties agreed to refer the whole matter in dispute to a new arbitrator and made an application to the Court to that effect. The new arbitrator was then appointed and gave his award. Objections were made to this second award and the Court, finding that one of the parties had not signed the application of reference to the arbitrator and that the first award had not been superseded, set aside the second award. An appeal to the District Judge was dismissed as incompetent and a second appeal was filed in the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the application for the filing of the first award was numbered and registered as a suit between the parties, a suit was pending at the time the second reference was made and the order of the first Court was not, therefore, an order referred to in section 104, Civil Procedure Code; [p. 172, col. 2.]

(2) that the order in question setting aside the award did not amount to a decree and was not appealable as such; [p. 173, col. 1.]

(3) that the order of the lower Appellate Court disposed of a question of law and, even if wrong, was not open to revision as no material irregularity had been committed. [p. 173, col. 1.]

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A dispute arising between five persons, members of a firm, was privately referred by them to arbitration. An award was duly made and an application was made under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code for the filing of the award in Court. Objections were made and an issue framed as to whether the arbitrators were guilty of any misconduct. Meanwhile, the parties apparently did not wish to proceed further in the matter of the award and the disputes connected with it, and they agreed to refer the whole matter in dispute from the beginning to a new arbitrator. They made an application to the Court to this effect, and the matter in dispute was referred to this arbitrator who put in his award. Objections were then made to the second award and the first Court, finding that one of the parties had not signed the application of reference to the arbitrator, and that the first award had not been superseded, ordered that this second award should be set aside and that the case should proceed from the stage when the second reference was made. Against this order an appeal was preferred to the District Judge who held that the order was not appealable, and could be traversed in the eventual appeal against the decree. Against this decision of the District Judge a second appeal has been preferred to this Court, and it is requested that in case it be held that no appeal is competent, the appeal may be treated as a revision.

I have heard lengthy arguments on the question whether the decision of the first Court was appealable or not. Counsel for the appellant argued that his appeal was covered by clause (d) or clause (f) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, or that if this was not the case, the order setting aside the award was tantamount to a decree. It appears evident that section 104 (d) can have no reference to the present appeal, as the order under appeal has not refused to file an agreement to refer to arbitration. It appears equally evident that clause (f) has no application to the present case. As pointed out in Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1), clause (f) refers to paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule namely, to cases where a matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. In the present case an application had already been made under paragraph 20 for the filing of the first award, and this application was numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant and the other parties. A suit was, therefore, pending between the parties and it was during the trial of this suit that the second reference to arbitration was made. It would be a far-fetched argument that the second reference and the second award had taken the place of the first reference and the first award and that, therefore, paragraph 20 had no application. It is plain from the wording of the schedule itself and from many authorities, e. g., Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1), that a suit was pending and that the second reference and award were made in connection with that suit. For the above reasons, I hold that the order of the first Court is not an order referred to in section 104.

It is next argued that in any case the order of the first Court refusing to file the award is tantamount to a decree and in support of this view, Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1) is referred to. The judgment relied upon deals with the question whether orders rejecting applications under sections 523 and 525 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding with paragraphs 17 and 20, respectively, of Schedule II of the present Code, are decrees. It is not applicable to the present case as the reference can only be considered to have been made under paragraph 1 of the Second Schedule. Moreover there is an inherent difference between orders refusing to file an award on a matter referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and those referred to under paragraph 1. In the former case if the Court refuses to file an award, its order amounts to a formal adjudication on the matter in controversy and conclusively determines the rights of the parties. In the case of orders setting aside an award under paragraph 15 of the Second Schedule, the order is only of an interlocutory nature and is in no way a conclusive determination of the matter in dispute. In my opinion, therefore, Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1) does not in any way assist the appellant. I hold that the order of the first Court setting aside the award does not amount to a decree and is not appealable as such.

The matter is not free from difficulty, as in ordinary cases of suits in which a reference is made to arbitration, the order of the Court setting aside the award can be questioned on an appeal from the decree. In the present case, whatever the result, it will be difficult or impossible to reopen the question now decided in any future appeal. There is, therefore, more ground for treating the present appeal as an application for revision than usually exists. But I do not consider that sufficient grounds exist in the present case for entertaining such an application. The principles governing such cases are discussed at length in Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1) and Ahmad Din v. Atlas Trading Company of Delhi (2). The order of the lower Appellate Court in the present case disposes of questions of law and even if wrong, no material irregularity can be said to have been committed. As a matter of fact, the views of the first Court on the questions of law involved appear prima facie correct.

I, therefore, hold that no appeal lay to the District Judge and that there is no sufficient ground for revision. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Rent suit—Decision as to rate of rent, whether operates as res judicata.

A judgment in a suit for rent deciding the question of the annual jama, even where it does not operate as res judicata on the same question in a subsequent suit for rent, is good evidence as to the rate of rent [p. 174, col. 1.]

Semle.—The tendency of the more recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court is that when the question of the annual jama has been raised in a suit for rent and decided, it will be regarded as res judicata in later suits for rent of the same holding. [p. 174, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Barisal, dated the 30th June 1916, modifying that of the Munsif at Barisal, dated the 31st March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kali Prasanna Piplai (with him Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee and Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq), for the Appellants.—The only question is whether the decision in the previous suit for rent is res judicata as to the amount of rent which is in dispute in this case. After that decree, there was a preparation of the Record of Rights under the Bengal Tenancy Act showing the annual jama of the holding: and I submit that due weight should be given to the certificate of final publication, which is binding upon the parties. The decision in the previous suit for rent is not res judicata in this suit. Refers to Kali Roy v. Pratap Narain (1), Maharani Beni Pershad Koeri v. Raj Kumar Chowbey (2) and Srinarain Singh v. Sundarbuti Kumari (3). Where the rent is fixed by a contract, oral or written, and a decree is given on the contract, then and then only the doctrine of res judicata is applicable. In this case no contract has been set up in the plaint. The plaint only states that the jama is only so much.

BHAGIRTHI v. GHISA SINGH.

Then after the previous rent-decree in question when there is a certificate of final publication, then, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the entry in the Record of Rights must be taken to be correct. The Record of Rights was prepared after the previous decree for rent in question, and, therefore, the amount of rent stated in the Record of Rights must be taken to be correct.

Babu Nakeleswar Mukherjee, for the Respondents.—All these cases on the question of res judicata in a suit for rent are summarized in Mane Muhammad Nasya v. Dhani Muhammad (4) and it appears that there is a conflict of decisions on the point. Your Lordships will, therefore, be pleased to refer the case to a Full Bench, if your Lordships do not agree with the Judge in the Court of Appeal below.

Babu Kali Prasanna Piplai replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs arising out of a suit for rent. The only question raised before us is whether the decree of the Subordinate Judge is right, based as it is on the principle of res judicata. The Judge has, however, not relied entirely on the question of res judicata but, on the evidence, has found that the plaintiffs' contention must fail. On the question of res judicata the authorities of this Court are not entirely unanimous. There are no doubt cases to be found taking more or less contrary views. The tendency, however, of the more recent decisions appears to be that when the question of the annual jama has been raised in a suit and decided, it will be regarded as res judicata in later suits for rent of the same holding. We need not, however, go into that question now, because in this case the Judge has distinctly found that even if the previous judgment does not operate as res judicata, it is good evidence as to the rate of rent. That evidence he weighs against the Record of Rights and the presumption arising therefrom and decides against the plaintiffs. It cannot be said that the learned Judge was wrong in that conclusion. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Will—Execution, proof of—Disposing mind of testatrix—Evidence in support of Will.

In an application for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed, it was not denied by the caveators that the testatrix had a disposing mind on the date on which the Will was alleged to have been executed. Expert evidence proved decisively that the impression on the Will was the thumb-mark of the testatrix, but it was contended that though a Will was, in fact, executed, it was lost and that the Will propounded was a forgery, having been written to the thumb-impression which already existed on a piece of paper in possession of the applicant's husband, who held a general power-of-attorney from the testatrix. The Will was supported by the scribe and the three attesting witnesses. The applicant herself testified that she had seen the Will written, that it had been made over to her by the testatrix and that she had kept it with herself:

Held, (1) that it was not proved that the original Will was lost and that the theory of a dishonest conspiracy to forge a Will could not be sustained in view of the positive evidence produced in support of the Will; [p. 176, col. 2.]

(2) that the Will was a genuine document duly executed by the testatrix. [p. 177, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th of August 1916, rejecting the application.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Shiv Charn bequeathed his property by a registered Will to Musammât Mewan, the widow of his deceased son. Musammât Mewan died at Delhi on the 29th October 1915. On 6th January 1916, Musammât Bhagirthi, her brother's daughter, applied for Letters of Administration with a Will annexed, the Will being one alleged to have been executed by Musammât Mewan on the 29th July 1914. The application was opposed by two caveators, Ramji Das, the nephew, and Ghisā Singh, the sister's son of Shiv Charn.

The District Judge of Delhi has held that the execution of the Will has not been proved and Musammât Bhagirthi has, therefore, filed the present appeal to this Court.

BHAGIRTHI V. GEISA SINGH.

It is not now denied that on the 29th July 1914 Musammāt Mewan had a disposing mind and the only question which is still in dispute is that of execution.

In support of the Will numerous witnesses were produced, among them being Kanshi Nath, the scribe of the Will, and Udmi Ram, Nanak Chand and Nanhe Mal, the three attesting witnesses. Musammāt Bhagirthi herself testified that she had seen the Will written, that it had been made over to her by Musammāt Mewan and that she kept it at Ludhiana. There was other evidence concerning the despatch of the Will from Ludhiana to Delhi for the purpose of the present application.

The District Judge has remarked that it cannot be said that the evidence of these witnesses has been materially shaken in cross-examination, and the only criticism of it which he has himself made is that one of them Udmi Ram is in the same employment as Puran Singh, the husband of Musammāt Bhagirthi.

He also conceded that it was very probable that Musammāt Mewan would make a Will in favour of Musammāt Bhagirthi whom she had brought up as her daughter from babyhood, and there is good evidence that she had been ill at the end of the preceding June and was, therefore, likely to make a Will about that time.

The District Judge has, however, given several reasons for his view that the Will is not proved. His theory seems to be that Musammāt Mewan did, in fact, execute a Will but that it was lost or stolen after her death and that the Will propounded is a forgery. He has further stated a view that the thumb-impression at the bottom of the Will is in all probability a reprint from some original in the possession of Puran Singh and that the Will has been written to the thumb impression instead of the thumb impression being appended below the Will. He was also of the opinion that as the thumb-impression was very faint and fine, the story of the witnesses that it was obtained by an application of soot from the bottom of a frying-pan was unlikely.

Counsel for the respondents does not support all these arguments. It is not at all likely that the witnesses to the Will would commit themselves to the story of the soot if they knew that the thumb-mark was a transfer from an ink impression. Moreover, experiment in this Court has shown that an application of soot gives an impression exactly like that on the Will and very unlike the sort of impression obtained from the application of country ink. There is, of course, no doubt that an ink impression can be transferred by the exercise of a certain amount of skill but traces of the process are likely to be left. Here there are no such traces. On the other hand I have no evidence or knowledge that an impression from dry soot can be clearly transferred, and though an expert has been examined with regard to the thumb-impression on the Will, no question has been put to him with the object of showing that the impression is not the result of an application of soot or that such an application could be transferred. His evidence, however, proves decisively that the impression on the Will is the thumb mark of Musammāt Mewan.

Counsel for the respondents accordingly now accepts the proposition that the impression is one from soot and abandons the theory of transfer from an original. His own theory now is that Musammāt Mewan did execute a Will which was stolen or lost and that Puran Singh having in his possession a piece of blank paper with a genuine thumb-impression of Musammāt Mewan at the bottom of it got the Will forged and attested above the thumb-impression.

The theory that the original Will was lost depends entirely upon the statement of Lala Murari Lal, Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was consulted by Puran Singh shortly after the death of Musammāt Mewan. Puran Singh told him that all her papers, including a Will, had been stolen. Lala Murari Lal thought that Puran Singh was referring to a Will by Musammāt Mewan. There is no doubt that that was his genuine impression. Puran Singh has, however, explained that the Will to which he then referred was that by Shiv Charn. The District Judge thinks that Puran Singh was not likely to have mentioned the loss of Shiv Charn's Will, because it was registered and its loss would, therefore, be unimportant. It is not denied, however, that that Will was lost, and although, of course a copy of a registered Will could always be obtained it might not in all circumstances be as valuable as the original. At any rate a man in the position of Puran Singh might quite well think that the original would be important. Granting, as is now conceded, that Musammât Mewan did in fact execute a Will, I do not think that it can be legitimately held on the basis of the evidence of Lala Murari Lal that it is proved that her Will was lost.

Then there is the matter of the suggestion that the Will was filled up after the thumb-impression had been attached. It is admitted now that the thumb impression could not have been obtained after death, as Puran Singh had no opportunity of so obtaining it. It follows, therefore, if the theory of the Counsel for the respondents is correct, that he had already in his possession this piece of paper with a genuine thumb mark attached to it. Ex hypothesi he did not obtain this paper with the object of getting a forged Will written upon it, because he could not know that the original will be lost or destroyed; nor has Counsel offered any explanation why he should have obtained this thumb-impression from Musammât Mewan before her death, especially seeing that he held from her a general power-of-attorney. Granting, however, that he might have had such a piece of paper and was both ready and able to get four other persons to assist actively in the forgery, I still do not think that it would be safe to draw from the manner in which a sheet of paper has been filled up the emphatic conclusion at which the District Judge has arrived, because "the scribe has begun in a fine rather cramped style, until finding that the material would not fill the paper has expanded into an extended scrawl which again he has had to contract somewhat at the end".

If this document was to be forged in the manner suggested by the Counsel for the respondents, the natural thing to do would have been to get the scribe to write out a draft on another piece of paper of the same size as that bearing the thumb-mark and then, when he had ascertained how much space was required, to copy it in handwriting of the requisite size, thus avoiding all grounds for the suspicion since raised.

But although the scribe went into the witness box, not a single question was put to him on this subject. He was not asked why he had varied the size of his handwriting. If he had been so asked, it is surely possible that he might have replied that he was writing to fill so much of the sheet as to leave space for signatures. In any case as the matter stands, the character of the writing does no more than lend colour to a suggestion that the page had been filled up after the thumb-impression had been attached. It goes no further than that, but it is on this suggestion, to a very large extent, that the theory of a dishonest conspiracy with regard to the preparation of this Will has been built up. There may be another explanation, and the respondents have made no effort to show that there is the only one. In this connection I would refer to Arunachellam Chetty v. Ramaswami Chetty (1), a case in which the Privy Council rejected a similar suggestion, in face of the oral testimony of a witness who stated that he saw the Will signed by the testator. In the present case we have the positive evidence of the scribe and three attesting witnesses, not to mention Musammât Bhagirthi herself, that this is a genuine document. As already remarked, there does not appear to be any good reason why those witnesses should not be believed, and in view of what is now known, their inclusion in their story of the application of soot from the frying pan is an indication of exact knowledge which they would not have had if this Will were a forgery, unless Puran Singh not only remembered how he obtained the thumb impression but had also communicated his knowledge to them.

There does not appear to me to be anything in the argument that, if Musammât Mewan had executed a Will, she would have got it registered. In fact in view of the theory now set up by the Counsel for the respondents, that argument goes by the board as according to his theory there was an original Will which was not registered.

HAIDER MIRZA v. KAILASH NARAIN DAR.

Nor do I think that any argument adverse to the Will can be derived from the date which it bears. The District Judge thinks that that date may be attributed to the dates of the two contemporary post cards on the subject of Musammatt Mewan's health. Those post cards are, however, dated the 25th and 28th of June respectively. If the forgers were using those post cards for the purpose of fixing their date, why did they postpone the date till the 29th of the following month?

On the whole, therefore, it appears to me that the Will has been rejected on the basis of suspicions some of which were unquestionably ill-founded. Those that remain are not sufficient to rebut the positive and apparently reliable testimony given in support of it. Accordingly I hold that the Will is proved, and accepting the appeal I remand the case to the District Judge for disposal according to law. The appellant will get her costs of this appeal.

Case remanded.*

Nawab HAIDER MIRZA—JUDGMENT.

DEBTOR—APPELLANT

versus

DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2 (1)—Execution of decree—Payment certified by decree-holder, effect of—Judgment debtor, whether can object—Court, duty of—Limitation, extension of.

Order XXI, rule 2 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code does not contemplate an inquiry being made into the truth of the statements made by the decree-holder when he comes to Court to certify a payment and the judgment-debtor has no locus standi to question the right of the decree-holder to make an application under that provision of the law. [p. 178, cols. 1 & 2.]

No particular time is fixed during which the decree-holder is bound to certify payments to the Court. [p. 178, col. 1.]

When a decree-holder comes and informs the Court that certain payments have been made to him in satisfaction of the decree, all that the Court has to do is to make a note of the statement made by the decree-holder and no notice need issue to the judgment-debtor even if the decree-holder asks this to be done. [p. 178, col. 2.]

The certifying of a payment under Order XXI, rule 2 (1), Civil Procedure Code, is not conclusive in any way. On an application for execution of the decree being made, the judgment-debtor is entitled to show either that no such payment was in reality made or that if it was, it did not operate to extend the period of limitation for execution of the decree. [p. 178, col. 2; p. 179, col. 1]

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, Tahsil Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 19th March 1918.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhaon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jagmohan Nath Chak, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Tahsil Mohanlalganj. The facts may be briefly stated. In the year 1909 a decree was obtained by Mumtaz Begam against one Nawab Haider Mirza, who is the appellant in the present case. This decree was affirmed in appeal on the 28th of November 1910 and was for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000. In the year 1911 the decree was assigned to the present respondent Pandit Kailash Narain Dar. It is admitted that in previous execution proceedings between the parties the respondent has been recognized as the person entitled to execute the decree in question.

In October 1914 the respondent filed an application in the Court, stating that he and the judgment-debtor had come to terms regarding the payment of the balance of the decretal sum, which then amounted to Rs. 4,000 odd. The arrangement was that the money was to be paid in monthly instalments and the first instalment fell due on the 15th of November 1914.

The present application has been made by the decree-holder under Order XXI, rule 2. He filed a petition in the Court on the 1st of February 1918, stating that under the arrangement for payment by instalments he had received up to the month of December 1917 a sum of Rs. 1,080. The application further stated that a sum of Rs. 3,095 was still owing from the judgment debtor. In this petition the decree-holder asked that the judgment-debtor might be summoned and that payment of Rs. 1,080 might be recorded and certified.

The judgment-debtor appeared in answer to the summons and denied that these payments had ever been made. His contention was that the decree-holder was not in a position to ask the Court to certify these payments on the ground that the decree had become barred by time, and that no money was payable the satisfaction of which could be certified to the Court. The judgment-debtor pleaded that default had occurred on the 15th of November 1914 and that consequently the execution of the decree was now barred.

The Subordinate Judge in a lengthy order came to the conclusion that the decree-holder was entitled to make the application to have the payment certified; and having disposed of this preliminary point, he fixed a date for the taking of evidence to be produced by the parties. That stage has not yet been reached and meantime the judgment-debtor has come here in appeal, contending that the Court below was wrong in holding that the decree-holder had a right to apply for the purpose of having these payments certified, that the decree is time barred and that no such application can now be made.

I think the appeal must fail; in my opinion the appellant has no locus standi to question the right of the decree-holder to make the application under Order XXI, rule 2. I may say at the same time that I think the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that any inquiry regarding payments was necessary at this stage. From the language of Order XXI, rule 2, it is apparent that a duty is cast upon the decree-holder to certify all payments which are made to him out of Court. It is also apparent that no particular period of time is fixed within which the decree-holder is bound to give this information to the Court; and it has been laid down in a number of cases [cf. Tukaram v. Babaji (1)] that no period of limitation is prescribed for the performance of this duty by the decree holder.

(1) 21 B. 122; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 84.

It is further apparent that Order XXI, rule 2, sub rule (1), does not contemplate any inquiry made into the truth of the statements made by the decree-holder when he comes to the Court to certify a payment. The only case in which an investigation is prescribed is when the judgment-debtor makes an application under Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (2). In that case a notice issues to the decree-holder calling upon him to show cause why the payments alleged by the judgment-debtor should not be recorded. It seems to me, therefore, that the procedure contemplated by Order XXI, rule 2, is that when the decree-holder comes and informs the Court that certain payments have been made, all that the Court has to do is to make a note of the statement made by the decree-holder. That is what Order XXI, rule 2, sub rule (1), says: "The decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly." Consequently although the Subordinate Judge was asked in this instance to issue notice to the judgment-debtor there was no occasion for this being done; and what the Subordinate Judge ought to have done was to accept the statement made by the decree-holder and record the payments as indicated by him.

As regards any question of limitation in connection with the execution of a decree, all that is to be said is that no such question can arise at the present stage. There is no application before the Subordinate Judge for the execution of this decree. When such an application is made, the judgment-debtor will be in a position to raise a plea of limitation, if he is so advised; and although under the present application the payments mentioned by the decree-holder will be recorded and certified, it does not necessarily follow that these payments will be conclusive evidence in favour of the decree-holder for the purpose of showing that any subsequent application for execution is within time. When the question of limitation does arise, if it ever does, the mere fact that certain payments have been certified will not be conclusive in any way against the judgment-debtor; and it will, in the execution proceedings, be open to the judgment-debtor to show either that no such payments were in reality made or that if they were, they do not operate to extend the period of limitation for execution of the decree.

I dismiss this appeal accordingly and direct the Subordinate Judge to abstain from any further inquiries at this stage. He will do what is laid down in Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (1), that is to say, record the payments certified to him by the decree-holder, and there the present proceedings will end. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—These two appeals arise from a suit upon a mortgage-deed executed by the late Udit Narayan Singh securing an advance of four lacs of rupees upon the 16 annas of the Mukarrari Istamrari Estate Perganna Handwa. The defendants to the suit were Rani Keshobati Kumari and her adopted son Kumar Satya Narain Singh, and certain subsequent mortgagees. Separate defences were filed by the Rani and by the Kumar and on them the following issues were framed:—

1. Is the mortgage bond in suit genuine and was the consideration money recited therein advanced by the plaintiff to the late Rajah Udit Narain Singh?

2. Are the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or either of them estopped from pleading that the mortgaged property in Pergannah Handwa is incapable of transfer by reason of its being a Ghatwali tenure?

3. Is the finding of this Court in suit No. 363 of 1905 res judicata in regard to the question whether the mortgaged property in Pergannah Handwa is a Ghatwali tenure, and, therefore, inalienable?

4. Was the late Udit Narayan Singh recorded as Mukarrari Istamrardar in respect of the mortgaged property in the Record of Rights framed and published under Regulation III of 1872? If so, is it open to the defendant to plead that the said Udit Narayan Singh's right in the said property was that of a Ghatwal?

5. Was the defendant No. 1 recorded as Istamrari Mukararidar of the mortgaged properties in the Record of Rights framed and published under Regulation III of 1872 in the year 1900? If so, is it open to the defendants to claim that the property is a Ghatwali tenure?

6. Is the mortgaged property in said Pergannah Handwa a Ghatwali tenure subject to the performance of any public service duty and whether it is inalienable, and was the interest of the said Rajah Udit Narain Singh in the said property terminable with his life?

7. Can the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or either of them set up any right or interest to or in the mortgaged premises in derogation of the disposition, if any, contained in the Will of Raja Udit Narayan Singh? If so, whether the Rajah had any right to make any such disposition?

8. Is the bond in suit binding as against both the defendants or any of them? Should the mortgage be binding on one of the defendants, but not the other defendant, what are the rights of the plaintiff?

9. Is the plaintiff's right to recover compound interest or interest exceeding the principal amount secured by the said bond barred by section 6 of Regulation III of 1872?

10. Is any portion of the claim for interest barred by limitation? What amount, if any, is due to the plaintiff under the said mortgage bond?

11. To what relief or reliefs, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

The learned Subordinate Judge found upon the first nine issues in favour of the plaintiffs and on the 11th issue, applying section 6 of Regulation III of 1872, made a decree for eight lacs of rupees with interest from the date of the suit. At the hearing the suit was contested only by the Kumar, the Rani having filed a petition of compromise whereby she agreed to pay the sum of eight lacs by instalments of Rs. 50,000, the first instalment to be paid in Chaitra 1320. The learned Subordinate Judge's judgment is dated the 14th September 1914. He has held that the compromise is not now binding upon the plaintiff, for the reason that Chet of the Bengal year 1320 had already passed and the promised instalment had not been paid. Against the decree made both the Rani and the Kumar appeal. I propose to deal first with the appeal of the Kumar.

The finding of the lower Court upon the first issue is now accepted. It is also admitted that no amount of the claim is barred by limitation, the date of payment being the 15th July 1910. For a consideration of the remaining issues it is necessary to give a history of Pergannah Handwa. This Pergannah is situated between Perganna Pachite and Pergannah Lachmipur. The question whether prior to the Permanent Settlement it formed part of the Kharagpur Estate will be the main question for consideration. The Kharagpur Estate was held at the time of the assumption of the Dewani by the East India Company by Rajah Muzafar Ali under the Moghul Empire. The whole country was in a state of insurrection in 1774, and an armed force was sent by Warren Hastings under the command of Captain Brooke to restore order. Raja Muzafar Ali was superseded and Captain Brooke was given the powers of a Military Zilladar acting under Martial Law over a tract of country then known as the Jungle Terai Mahal. Captain Brooke was succeeded by Captain Brown and in 1776 Captain Brown gave a Sanad to Raja Subhao Singh, the ancestor of Udit Narain Singh. It is the defendant's case that this Sanad created a Ghatwali analogous to the Birbhum Ghatwalis and that, therefore, the Raja had no alienable interest in it and the mortgage made by him was invalid as against his successor to the Ghatwali. It is the plaintiff's case that in the first place the Sanad does not create a Ghatwali at all, and in the second place that if it did create a Ghatwali, the Ghatwali created was one of the Kharagpur Ghatwalis, and that the great grandfather of Udit Narain, Jagan Singh, having secured by litigation of the years 1809 to 1819 exemption from liability to military service under the Kharagpur Raj, there was now no bar to the alienation of the lands attaching to the tenure. It is further the plaintiff's case that in the event of our finding that the tenure is a Ghatwali tenure analogous to the Birbhum tenures, the conditions of military service have either been waived by Government or have so fallen into disuse as to be no longer enforcible. The first question for consideration, therefore, is, whether the tenure is a Ghatwali tenure at all, and the second whether the appellants have succeeded in proving that the tenure is analogous to the Birbham tenures. It is admitted on behalf of the appellants that if indeed the tenure is a Kharagpur tenure, the litigation which ended in 1819 destroyed the service character of the tenure.

Wherever it has been necessary for the proprietors of Pergannah Handwa to state the origin of their rights, that origin has always been asserted to be the grant made by Captain Brown. It is admitted that revenue is now paid through Kharagpur, with the reservation that this is an arrangement made only for convenience of payment and that the tenure was in reality held directly under the Government. There is in Exhibit (H), the judgment of the District Judge of Bhagalpur in suit No. 728 of 1910, a full statement of the claims of Jhabban Singh, the then proprietor of the Pergannah. The history of this litigation is important. The plaintiff's claim was that Parandar Singh had been, under a Sanad bearing the seal of the plaintiff, appointed to the post of Ghatwal of Pergannah Handwa situated within the Mahal of Kharagpur which was the Zemindari of the plaintiff; that Parandar Singh had died in Chet 1215 and that on his death the plaintiff was entitled to appoint a Ghatwal in his place; that Kallan Singh had refused to admit the plaintiff's right to appoint a Ghatwal and the matter had been taken up before the Acting Judge, who had issued a Parwana to the plaintiff intimating that it was improper for the plaintiff to appoint a Ghatwal other than Jhabban Singh without instituting proceedings under the provisions of Regulation IV of 1793, the first Code of Civil Procedure. Accordingly a suit was brought as provided by the said Regulation for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to appoint as Ghatwal any person he might select. Jhabban Singh stated in reply that his Somi Zemindari Milkiat of Pergannah Handwa had been held from the time of Raja Bijoy Singh and that Subhao Singh was the sixth holder of the office, and for several hundred years the defendant and his predecessors had been in possession of the said Zemindari; that in 1184 F. S. Captain Brown Zilladar, who was appointed for the purpose of making settlement of the Jungle Terai Perganna by the Hon'ble Members of the Council, came to this place; that the said Subhao Singh under perpetual Mukarrari Pattah paid the rent to Captain Brown and subsequently to Mr. Norman and to Mr. Cleaveland up to 1187, and that when in 1188 the settlement of Mahal Kharagpur with the plaintiff was taken up the plaintiff put in an assessment Dowl, that is to say, an application for Goshwara Settlement with him; that the settlement of Pergannah Handwa, the Milkiat Zemindari of the defendant, and that of Pergannah Chandan Passve, the Milkiat Zemindari of Rup Narayan Deo, were under the patta bearing the signature of the said Captain allowed to stand good; but subsequently the said (Saheb), in view of the fact that the country was jungli and there was danger in carrying the revenue, directed the Amla of the said Raja Subhao Singh to deposit with Raja Kadar Ali (who was the son of Muzafar Ali) the land revenue due from his lands under the Istamrari Mukarrari Patta and from there, (that is from Kharagpur) the revenue becoming one item should be paid into the treasury of the East India Company, and that consequently from that time Raja Subhao Singh and Raja Parandar Singh have been depositing down to 1215 F. S. the rent of their Zemindari property, according to the perpetual Mukarrari Patta and the Sanad bearing the seal of the August Khalsa and granted by Mr. Dickson, the Collector.

The plaintiff produced various Sanads and the Parwana of Captain Brown, dated the 5th November 1775, and the defendant Jhabban Singh filed the following documents:

- (1) A Taslimnama, date uncertain.
- (2) A Parwana from Mr. Tawney, dated 17 Moharram, 14th year.
- (3) A Parwana of Captain Burkit, dated 16 Safir of the 8th year.
- (4) Another Parwana by Captain Burkit, date uncertain.
- (5) A Perpetual Mukarrari Pattah granted by Captain Brown, dated 11th September 1776.

KESHOBATI KUMARI V. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRABERTY.

(6) Receipts for payment of revenue direct to Captain Brown, dated 29th February 1777, 16th June 1777, and 13th September 1779, and 13th September 1780.

(7) Parwana bearing English signatures, dated 1791 to 1793.

(8) A Sanad bearing signature in English, dated 20th January 1794, and many other papers.

The finding of the Court on these papers was that in fact the predecessors of the defendant and the defendant have been from time immemorial Zemindars and Istamrari Mukarraridars with the title of Raja of Pergannah Handwa and that up to this time they have been paying the rent of the said Pergannah in accordance with the perpetual Mukarrari Pattah, bearing the signature and the seal of Captain Brown, to the plaintiff in his capacity as the Mufassal Talukdar, and in his own time the defendant has been paying the rent to the authorities for the time being: that his Istamrari Mukarrari was never cancelled and that he has during the times of all the present and past Hakims received Zemindari documents in the form of Istamrari Mukarrari, and finally that it does not appear that the predecessors of the aforesaid defendant have been appointed to the post of Ghatwal of the said place at the instance of the plaintiff. This decision was taken in appeal to the Provincial Court at Murshidabad. Jhabban Singh's plea is, by the Court of appeal, stated to be that in 1184 F. S. Captain James Brown Zilladar, who was appointed for the purpose of making settlement of Pergannah Jungle Terai, had granted the Istamarari Mukarrari Patta in respect of Pergannah Handwa to Raja Subhao Singh, uncle of the defendant, together with other Ghatwals who were in his ilaga and that while Hardat Singh and four of the defendants relied upon the defence set up by Jhabban Singh, the remaining defendants described themselves as the servants of Jhabban Singh's predecessors. The Appellate Court called for a report from the Collector of the district of Bhagalpur with regard to the change of Ghatwals and the settlement of the Mahals, and on receipt of that report the Judge was directed to make an enquiry as to whether the aforesaid Mahals had been the Ghatwali appertaining to the Zemindars of Raja Qadir Ali and of the fact that the practice was that on the death of the Ghatwal, if any person is appointed in his place, information of the same is given to the Collector and whether on the death of Raja Subhao Singh Parandar Singh was appointed as Ghatwal on behalf of Raja Qadir Ali Khan, Zemindar, and whether information of the same was given to the Collector. The report of the District Judge was forwarded in due course. It was then declared by the Provincial Court that Raja Qadir Ali himself admitted the fact of the disputed property being the perpetual Mukarrari right of Raja Jhabban Singh and that the documents filed by the plaintiff purporting to be pattas and Kabuliyats and security bonds given by Parandar Singh to Raja Muzafar Ali were not worthy of reliance, and that the report sent by the Collector upon the facts of the case was incorrect. For these reasons the judgment of the District Court was affirmed. Among the documents filed by the plaintiff was the Rubkari of the Court of the Collector, dated the 29th January 1810. In the plaintiff's pleadings it was stated that a Rubkari was sent to the Court of the Collector of Bhagalpur for enquiry as to the title of the Zemindari of Pergannah Handwa, that the reply of the Collector to the District Judge had been that the Mahal Kharagpur together with Pergannah Handwa constituted the Zemindari of the plaintiff and that the said Raja is competent to appoint Ghatwals in his own Zemindari. We may presume that it was this reply that was declared to be incorrect. This finding is not res judicata as between the plaintiff and the defendant now before us, but it is of interest as showing the opinion of the Courts of that date based upon a mass of documents which are not now available. The opinion, however, does not go so far as to say that Raja Subhao Singh was not a Ghatwal at all. It says only, as I understand it, that he was not a Ghatwal serving under Kharagpur, but held a Milkiat Zemindari independent of the Kharagpur Estate. The Judges of those days were fully aware of the distinction between a Milkiat and a subordinate 'Mukararri tenure', and it is impossible to believe that they would have decided that the tenure was a Milkiat tenure unless upon the documents before them they were satisfied that the estate was held directly under the ruling power.

Mr. Hasan Imam contends that the real position was that the Rajas of Handwa, if indeed they were independent of Karagpur, were not Ghatwals at all, and that the Ghatwals mentioned in the Sanad did not include the Handwa Raja, but were Ghatwals holding Sikmi Ghatwalis under the Raja of Handwa. For an elucidation of this point it is necessary to examine carefully the Sanad granted by Captain Brown which is Exhibit (K) and the schedule attached to that Sanad which is Exhibit 105. In Sutherland's report, Exhibit 126, is an extract from a report made by Captain Brown himself. This report is interesting as showing that Captain Brown recognised three classes of holders of land.

- (1) The Zemindars of the low country,
- (2) Chief Manjhis bound by a Muchalka and holding Jagir lands in the plains;
- and (3) Subordinate Manjhis holding Chaukis in the hills.

His proposals were that the Sardars or Chiefs of Divisions should be restored to their authority and receive Sanads from Government specifying the duties they were to perform and that similar engagements should be taken from the Manjhis binding them to their Sardars. Police establishments should be set up in each Tappa of the Zemindars and the Thanadars put under the control of Sazawals. His suggestions were approved by Government and a line of Police posts established in Bhagalpur, Colgong, Raj Mahal, etc., to the north and east of the Jungle Terai Mahal. The Jagirs given by him were approved by Mr. Cleaveland. Many of them are still in existence and have been the subject of consideration by the Judicial Committee. It is necessary in considering the real meaning of Brown's Parwana to bear carefully in mind his views of the policing of these tracts. The Parwana Exhibit K is headed as follows:—Patta in terms of Kabuliyat granted to Raja Subhao Singh, Babu Udit Singh, Gopal Singh, Babu Lal Singh and other Ghatwals of Perganna Handwa appertaining to Kharagpur Jungle Terai

Mahals, Sirkar Monghyr, in the Province of Bihar. The terms of the grant are that these people should pay their revenue direct to the treasury and by means of the Barkandazes, who hold Jagir grants, should patrol the villages, and when called upon by Government should produce an army of seven Sardars and three hundred archers and Barkandazes. Then follows the schedule Exhibit 105, in which the details of the grant are set forth. Raja Subhao Singh takes five Taluks with a total rent of Rs. 2,075. Udit Singh takes three Taluks with a rent of Rs. 549, Gopal Singh takes two Taluks with a rental of Rs. 270. Udit and Gopal are in subsequent documents specifically described as Ghatwals. The duties of Subhao Singh were precisely similar to those of Gopal and Udit and we find from Exhibit (L) that Udit and Gopal were closely related to Subhao. It is clear, I think, that Udit and Gopal held these lands as did Raja Subhao Singh by virtue of their descent from Bijoy Singh. It is also clear, from the terms of the Parwana in which allusion is made to Jagirs held by Barkandazes already in existence and from the fact that all the grantees except Subhao are specifically described as Ghatwals, that Captain Brown was not conferring a new grant, but confirming an old one, and that he was not imposing new duties, but merely stating the existing conditions upon which the tenure was already held. The Sardars mentioned as having Jagirs may be taken to be the Sardars mentioned in his report. The Barkandazes to be employed were the Barkandazes mentioned in Regulation XX of 1817. It is to be noted that in his report to Government the word "Ghatwal" is not used. Nor in Grant's report of 1786 [see Raja Lelanund Singh Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (1)] was the word Ghatwal used, but "there is no doubt", their Lordships say, "that the tenures here spoken of are Ghatwali tenures though they are not mentioned by that name." There is nothing in the use of the word Zemindar to support Mr. Hasan Imam's contention. At the time of granting this Parwana to Subhao Singh and the other Ghatwals, Brown's intention was to hold them responsible, as they had hitherto been responsible, for the performance by the Sardars and Barkandazes of their duties as head Manjhis and hill Policemen. There were no Police posts then in existence in the Zemindari Tappas. Subsequently when he submitted his whole scheme to Government he left out of account the Zemindars in whose Tappas these outposts were to be set up, and when they were set up, those Zemindars were exempted by Regulation XXII of 1793 from Police duties. But it is most significant that to this day no outpost has been set up in Pergannah Handwa, which is still a non-Police tract.

The Parwana granted by Captain Brown received no confirmation from Mr. Cleaveland. It did receive confirmation from Mr. Cleaveland's successor. In Exhibit (L) Mr. Dickson or Dickenson, on the application of Parandar Singh stating that Raja Subhao Singh and other Ghatwals holding under Brown's Sanad of 1184 are dead, declares Raja Parandar Singh to be in possession of the share of his uncle Subhao Singh and of his grand-uncles Udit Narain Singh deceased and Gopal Singh (who is still living but unable to pay the rent of his Taluk), and the terms of the patta are reiterated, requiring Subhao Singh and the other Ghatwals to go round each village with the Barkandaz of the village and when required by the Sirkar to appear before the Hazur with 7 Sardars and three hundred Barkandazes and pay the fixed jama of Rs. 2,701 less Saraf Rs. 59-2-0 directly into the treasury. This Parwana is inconsistent in the last two respects with that granted by Cleaveland to Raja Kader Ali, Exhibit 58 (1), dated 1st May and 13th May 1781, for in the latter Parwanas it is ordered that the revenue of Handwa Rs. 2,818 (not Rs. 2,641-14-0) shall be paid not directly into the treasury, but through the Raja of Kharagpur. And this Parwana is signed by Warren Hastings himself. Dickson's directions in this respect were again negatived by the Permanent Settlement, Exhibit (60), dated the 5th January 1796, in which Pergannah Handwa is mentioned as one of the 21 Mahals upon which revenue is assessed as appertaining to Pergannah Kharagpur. In Exhibit G, the general register of estates paying revenue to Government prepared under section 2 of Regulation XLVIII of 1793, we find Pergannah Handwa shown as paying revenue jointly with 14 other Pergannahs and the name of Raja Lilanand Singh Bahadur entered as the Malik. On the other hand in Exhibit F, memorandum of jama of the permanent Mukarrari right to the Mahals in district Bhagalpur dated 1209, we find it stated that the Mukarrari Patta was granted after the Dewani subject to Ghatwali and reference made to Mr. Dickson's orders granting a new Sanad to Raja Parandar Singh for the Taluks granted by Brown to Subhao Singh, Udit Singh and Gopal Singh. It is urged by Mr. Hasan Imam that the Permanent Settlement changed—if not the character—at least the incidents of the tenure. We have, therefore, to consider firstly what were the incidents and character of the tenure before the Permanent Settlement and next whether by the Permanent Settlement its incidents and character were changed. An Istamarari Mukarrari tenure was regarded as a grant made for life to an individual and on the death of the lifeholder the sanction of Government was necessary to validate the succession. The tenure was held at a fixed rate instead of on an annual agreement. This is clear from the fact that by Regulation I of 1815 the Istamarari Mukarrari tenures outside the permanently settled districts were declared to be resumable on the death of the life-tenant. Captain Brown's intention was to create Subhao Singh a principal landholder (a position which he no doubt already held) for the political purpose of guarding the frontiers on the west against the incursions of the barbarous Paharias by means of a war-like peasantry entertained as a standing militia with suitable territorial allotments under him [see Raja Lalanand Singh Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (1)]. The office was granted to Subhao Singh personally and was resumable on his death. It was, therefore, necessary for Parandar Singh to report the death of Subhao Singh to Mr. Dickson and to obtain a renewal. This renewal was obtained in 1794. The position in 1794, therefore, was that the Handwa Ghatwali was a Zemindari Ghatwali held directly under Government resumable at the death of the life tenant.

KESHOBATI KUMARI V. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRABERTY.

It has been the contention of the appellant's family for generations, and strongly pressed by Mr. Manuk, that the payment of revenue through Kharagpur was an arrangement made for the sake of convenience only, but on reference to the map it will be observed that Kharagpur is no nearer to Handwa than was Bhagalpur and it cannot be possible that for the sake of convenience only the revenue of Handwa should have been sent first to Kharagpur and then on to Bhagalpur. The Collector of Bhagalpur in 1813 [Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadur v. Government of Bengal (1)] reported to the Magistrate of Birbhum that at the time of the Decennial Settlement the Ghatwals were not treated as independent Talukdars, no settlement was made with them and they were included in the settlement of the Zemindar of whom their lands were held. The appellant's ancestors have, however, also frequently said their tenure is in all respects similar to that of Chandan Passye or Lachmipore. This also was Word's view (Exhibit 63), dated 1833. The Sadar Dewani Adalat in the case of Rup Narayan Deo v. Raja Qadir Alee, decided in 1809, pointed out that the revenue of Chandwa Passye had been included in the revenue of Kharagpur by mistake, and suggested (a suggestion that was not adopted) that the Board of Revenue should exclude Chandwa Passye from the Revenue Roll of Kharagpur. At page 123 of Volume VI, Moore's Indian Appeals [Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadur v. Government of Bengal (1)], a report of 1813 is quoted in which it is stated that the Ghatwals attached to the Kharagpur estate held their lands by virtue of Sanads granted by the Zamindars of Kharagpur, except some who have received theirs from the former authorities. The inference is justified upon all the evidence available that, Chandwa Passye and Handwa were like Kharagpur, Birbhum and Pachit Crown Ghatwalis. They were not analogous to the Kharagpur Ghatwalis nor to the Birbhum Ghatwalis. They were Moghul Ghatwalis. The effect of the Permanent Settlement upon military tenures was discussed in Raja Venkata Rao v. Court of Wards (2): "The provisions of the Sanad," their Lordships say, "differed in no respect from those which are contained in every ordinary deed of Permanent Settlement. The feudal or military tenure was at an end. The six Pergannas to which the Sanad related became new Zemindaris subject to the payment of fixed land revenue and subject to the ordinary stipulation and the performance of the duties ordinarily imposed upon Zemindars." And their Lordships go on to quote as a correct statement the 11th paragraph of the written statement of that case: "That under the Empire of the Muhammadans the ancient Zemindari of Nuzvid was extensive and was governed by its Chiefs with absolute power and independence; but under the policy of the British Government the same has become divested of its military character and dwindled into a large Peshkash paying Zemindari." Their Lordships, therefore, advise 'Her Majesty that the lands in suit be declared to be a part of the Zemindari above mentioned.' And in the case of Muttu Vaduganatha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (3), their Lordships say: "In this case the Istamrar Zemindar was put in his place by the Proclamation of 1801, it is to the terms of that document that we must look in order to find the quality of his estate. The Madras Government were no doubt in a position to grant out the estate on other than the old terms. The question is whether they did so." I have no hesitation in saying that in the Permanent Settlement of 1796 the Governor General did not grant all the estate created by Captain Brown's Sanad on other than the old terms. He was not dealing with Parandar Singh at all. In the case of Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (4) (at pages 204 and 205) the following statement of the law is made: "The Permanent Settlement of the lands did not alter the nature of the Jagir or of the tenure upon which the lands were held, nor could it convert the services which were public into private services under the Zemindar. The Zemindar became entitled only to the rent or revenue which was previously payable to the Government and in respect of which he was assessed, and not to the services in respect of which the 1/3rd of the rent or revenue was allowed to the tenant as compensation for the services. Those services continued to be due to the Government."

This is conclusive. The Permanent Settlement might destroy a military tenure by a new contract with the holder of the tenure. It could not affect the position of a tenure-holder with whom the new settlement was not made.

The case of Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (1) is no authority for the contrary proposition. It decided only that land once assessed with revenue as a part of Kharagpur could not be resumed or re-assessed.

The Handwa tenure was prior to the Dewanee a Moghul Ghatwali. The effect of assumption of jurisdiction over the Jungle Terai Mahals by the East India Company was at most to convert the allegiance of the Ghatwal from an allegiance to the Moghul Empire to an allegiance to the East India Company. The Permanent Settlement did not destroy the Company's right to enforce, nor relieve Parandar Singh from liability to render, that allegiance. Nothing that has since been done has altered the position. The decision of Mr. Travers (Exhibit C) that the tenure could not be resumed had no higher effect than the decision of Mr. Alexander which gave rise to the suits of Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (1). The descendants of Parandar Singh have never specifically refused to render services as Ghatwals. Exhibit E, dated the 24th December 1816, was not such a specific refusal. It was merely a protest by Jhabban Singh against the omission of his title of Raja in Parwanas addressed to him. The entry of the Ghatwali service attached to the Mahal in Exhibit F still stands. So late as 1880, the Deputy Commissioner of the Santhal Pergannahs (Exhibit AAI) was trying with the idea of enforcing the services, as Ghatwal, of the proprietor of the Handwa estate. It may be that the power to enforce these services has lapsed by limitation. That question was not argued at the Bar and could not be raised in this suit. I am satisfied that the right has not been destroyed by any definite act. Buchanan (McPherson's Settlement Report, Appendix, page xli) may have been historically correct, but he erred on the point of law.

This by no means ends the matter. The tenure may be a Ghatwali tenure. A person holding it as a Ghatwali tenure might have no power to alienate it. The real question is, whether the mortgagor Udit Narayan Singh held it as a Ghatwali tenure.

Mr. Manuk asserts that this case is in no respect different from that of the Dhimsain Jagir in the Zemindari of Pachit dealt with in the case of Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (4). His revenue is payable to Government; his services are to be rendered to Government and the penalty for failure to render service is enforceable by Government. The revenue is clearly not payable to Government. It is payable to the Raja of Kharagpur. No services have been rendered to Government since 1796. There is no penalty in Captain Brown's Sanad attached to the failure to perform Police duties. The only penalty suggested is that if any body lodges any complaint, then on proof of the matter after enquiry punishment will be inflicted on you. That was a condition imposed upon every Zemindar prior to Regulation XXII of 1793. It is further said that he who will give bad advice to others and will interfere with the affairs of Government will be held guilty and will be turned out of his ilaga and will not be allowed to come back. This was a penalty to be imposed not upon the grantees under the Sanad, but upon any body residing within the Taluk who might misbehave himself. The penalty to be incurred by the Dhumsain Jagirdar was not attributable to his original Sanad, but to the Muchalka or security bond executed at the time of the appointment. The question decided in the case of Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (4) was whether the Mauzas in question, which had been held by the plaintiff's father during his lifetime and which at his death had descended to the plaintiff as his heir and to which the plaintiff was appointed by Government, were liable to be attached in execution of a decree against the father as assets by descent in the hands of the plaintiff his son. In the case before us the appellant has not been appointed by Government. Mr. Imam asks us to attach importance to this and to the fact that he has given no Muchalka nor Kabuliyat. I would attach even greater importance to the fact that his father was not appointed by Government. His grandfather, Madho Singh, was not appointed by Government. His great-grandfather, Jhabban Singh, was not appointed by Government. The last appointment made by Government was that of Parandar Singh and when an attempt was made to assert the right of appointment on the decease of Parandar Singh, the Collector declined to make the appointment and the Zemindar of Kharagpur was held by the Courts not competent to do so.

Never since the death of Raja Parandar Singh has any proprietor of Handwa applied for a renewal of the Istamrari Mukarrari Ghatwali grant. For a hundred years no Muchalka or Kabuliyat undertaking military service has been given. No suggestion that the tenure was liable to military service was made until after the death of Udit Narayan Singh it became desirable to avoid paying Udit Narayan Singh's debts. On only one occasion has mutation of names even been applied for, and on that occasion mutation of names was refused (Exhibit B). All that was done was that a note was made in the Register of Raja Udit Singh's application and the report made thereon. Whenever it has been necessary to prepare a list of the Ghatwali tenures of the Santhal Pergannahs, Parganna Handwa has been omitted. In successive settlement reports no mention is made of any Ghatwali duties to be performed. On what basis can the appellant claim that he or his father were Ghatwals?

At the outset of the argument we suggested to Mr. Manuk that the real issue involved was: Did the appellant succeed to his father's estate by inheritance or by appointment. If he succeeded by inheritance as his father's representative-in-interest he was estopped from denying his father's right to alienate the estates. If he succeeded to the estate by appointment his father's interest in the estate was dead and could no longer be pursued. For this view I find support in the obiter dictum of Mookerjee, J., in Bhagwat Buksh Roy v. Sheo Pershad Sahu (5) and in the judgments of Mullick, J., and Jwala Prasad, J. (equally obiter), in the case of Jadab Lal v. Debi Lal Singh (6). I place the case before us on a different, and, as I think, a higher plane than these two cases. Udit Narayan Singh was not appointed to the post of Ghatwal. He was merely de facto holder without license from the ruling power of the lands attached to the post of Ghatwal, and as such mortgaged his right, title and interest. His son (or his wife) has succeeded by inheritance or under his Will to such rights as he had. They cannot successfully impugn his title, or even ask that the question of his title be investigated. The ruling power is not a party to the suit, nor is any Ghatwal appointed by the ruling power. It is well settled that in mortgage suits the paramount title of parties other than the mortgagor or his representative-in-interest cannot be gone into.

The right, title and interest of Udit Narayan Singh was mortgaged, and must be sold in execution of the decree to be made on the mortgage. It is only to be regretted that the time of the lower Court and this has been so long occupied in an enquiry of merely historic interest.

In view of the value of the subject-matter of the suit I deem it expedient to record briefly my findings on the several issues framed.

The first issue was not contested in this Court. It is admitted that the mortgage bond is genuine and the consideration money advanced.

On the second and sixth issues I find that the property mortgaged by the late Udit Narain Singh was a Ghatwal tenure, not held by him as a Ghatwal. Such right, title and interest as he had therein were alienable, and did not terminate with his life. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 would either of them be estopped as his representative-in-interest from pleading that such right, title and interest as he held were inalienable.

On the third issue I find that the decision in Suit No. 363 of 1909 is not res judicata. The suit in question was one to enforce a puisne mortgage upon the same property. The present plaintiffs were defendants to the suit as prior mortgagees. The present defendants pleaded successfully that the property mortgaged was inalienable; but on the case coming to the High Court in appeal the Court of Wards, who were then in charge of the estate, obtained a withdrawal of the appeal by promising to pay the mortgage money. There was no issue contested as between the present plaintiff and the present defendants with regard to the alienability of the property. The case was not one in which the decision would be res judicata as between co defendants.

In the finally published Record of Rights the late Raja Udit Narayan Singh was recorded as Mukarrari Istamrardar in respect of the mortgaged property in such documents as are before us. These documents relate only to the liability of the tenants to pay rent to him. The Khewats have not been filed and even if they had been filed, I should hold on the fourth issue that they would be evidence only of his title as proprietor and would not be conclusive with regard to a question of military duty attached to the proprietary rights.

On the 5th issue my finding would be the same as on the 4th issue.

On the seventh issue the question whether the Raja had any right to make dispositions of his property is covered by my discussion of the facts of the case. The right, title and interest of the late Udit Narayan Singh not being derived from the ruling power by appointment, he was at liberty to dispose of such right, title and interest as he possessed.

The learned Subordinate Judge has not discussed the eighth issue and it was not touched in the arguments. I confess that I can see no meaning in it at all. The bond in suit is binding against whichever of the defendants is the representative in-interest of the late Raja. That question is still sub judice in another appeal now before us.

It is conceded by the appellants that the ninth issue does not really arise. The sole question is, whether under section 6 of Regulation III of 1872 the respondent is entitled to a decree for more than half the mortgage debt. The learned Subordinate Judge, while recognising the force of section 6, has made a decree for eight lakhs of rupees with interest from the date of the filing of the suit. This is in clear contravention of section 6. Under Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code the decree of the Court must set forth the amount due on the latest date of payment. I hold that this is the decree which is contemplated by section 6 of Regulation III of 1872 and that it should be decreed that the amount due on the day of payment be eight lakhs of rupees.

Section 6 is a bar to a decree for interest upon interest. Interest subsequent to the decree must be limited to interest on the principal advanced and the costs of the suit. Therefore, on four lakhs of rupees and costs, interest will run at 6 per cent. per annum. Costs both in the lower Court and in this Court will be calculated on the total amount decreed. The appellants having failed on all the important issues involved will bear their own costs in both Courts. This decision covers both issue No. 10 and issue No. 11.

This decision disposes of Appeal No. 89. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha argued that the decree could not bear interest at all, but in course of the arguments conceded that that part of the decree relating to interest on the original principal could not be assailed. His position with regard to the compromise filed was that his inability to pay the instalments promised was due to the fact that the estate was in the hands of the Receiver, and that in view of the dispute regarding title to the estate he was unable to obtain from the Receiver the sums necessary to pay the first instalment. It is immaterial by what causes the compromise became infructuous. The learned Subordinate Judge was correct in saying that it has become infructuous and cannot be acted upon. The parties will, therefore, be relegated to their former positions and the considerations which cover the decision of the appeal of the Kumar cover also the position of the Rani. The decree which I propose will be of effect as against the representative in-interest of the late Raja Udit Narayan Singh, whether that representative in-interest be the Kumar or the Rani.

Appeals dismissed.

HUSSAIN BAKHSH v. PALA SINGH.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 3195 OF 1917.

July 18, 1918.

Present:— Sir Henry Rattigan, Kt., Chief Judge.HUSSAIN BAKHSH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
*versus*PALA SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —RESPONDENTS.Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 144—Adverse possession—Independent trespassers, whether can tack on their periods of possession.

Plaintiffs as collaterals of one B. sued to recover possession of certain land held by the latter as an occupancy tenant. It appeared that after B.'s death in 1903 his mother remained in possession till 1905, when she was ejected by the defendant under due process of law. It was contended that the plaintiffs' suit was time-barred as it was open to the defendant to "tack on" to his period of adverse possession the period during which B.'s mother was in adverse possession:

Held, that it was not open to the defendant to tack on the period during which B.'s mother was in adverse possession, as both were independent trespassers and he could not assert that he claimed through or under her.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 24th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Gurdaspur, dated the 18th May 1917, dismissing plaintiffs' claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs, as collaterals of Bhagwan Singh, seek to recover possession of certain land held by the latter as an occupancy tenant. It appears that Bhagwan Singh died in 1903 and that after his death his mother, Musammatt Ishri, entered into possession and remained in occupation of the land until 1905 when she was ejected under due process of law by Hussain Bakhsh, defendant.

Defendant's answer to the suit is that the claim is time-barred; but the District Judge has held that the plea has not been established and that the suit is within time. Defendant appeals to this Court and on his behalf Mr. Tek Chand has strenuously contended that the decision of the District Judge is erroneous. He claims that the suit is barred under either Article 142 or Article 140 or Article 144 of the Limitation Act. As regards Article 142, the present case cannot clearly fall thereunder, inasmuch as plaintiffs do not claim to have been in possession of the land or to have been dispossessed or to have discontinued possession. Article 140 is equally inapplicable inasmuch as plaintiffs, who are reversioners in the sense in which that term is understood in the Punjab Customary Law, are not reversioners in the sense in which that term is used in the Article [see Roda v. Hornam (1)]. Finally, as regards Article 144, Mr. Tek Chand admits that Hussain Bakhsh himself has not been in adverse possession for 12 years, but he claims that it is open to Hussain Bakhsh to "tack on" to his period of adverse possession the period during which Musammatt Ishri, whom defendant ejected, was in adverse possession, and the learned Pleader contends that Musammatt Ishri was in fact, during the time she was in possession, holding under the defendant, who is the landlord of the land. The latter contention is opposed to the facts of the case and to the allegations of defendant himself in the suit in which he succeeded in obtaining a decree of ejectment against Musammatt Ishri, whom he then described as a trespasser in possession without any lawful right. Musammatt Ishri and defendant must be regarded, therefore, as two entirely independent trespassers; and defendant cannot possibly assert that he claims through or under Musammatt Ishri.

In these circumstances, the authorities in this country are overwhelming to the effect that it is not open to the defendant to tack on the period during which Musammatt Ishri was in adverse possession [see Starling's Limitation Act, page 354; Rustomji's Limitation Act, Second Edition, pages 503-509; Ditu v. Devi Dial (2), Guroo Churn Dutt v. Krishna Moni Gupta (3), Ram Lakhani Rai v. Gajadhar Rai (4) and Baldeo Singh v. Mohan Singh (5)]. In my opinion the suit has been rightly held to be within time and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

RAJANI KANTA PAL v. KEDAR NATH BISWAS.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

RULE Nisi No. 351 of 1918.

July 19, 1918.

Present :—Mr. Justice Teunon and Mr. Justice Cuming.

RAJANI KANTA PAL—PETITIONER
versus

KEDAR NATH BISWAS AND OTHERS—
OPPOSITE PARTIES.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—
Revision—Error of law, whether ground for interference —Remedies, other, open to petitioner, effect of.*

The petitioner purchased a holding in execution of a money-decree obtained against the tenant by a third party. The landlord refused to recognise the petitioner as a tenant on the ground that the holding was non-transferable. Thereafter the landlord brought a suit for rent against the old tenant and obtained a decree ex parte in execution of which he sought to have the property sold, whereupon the petitioner preferred an objection contending that the landlord's decree was merely a money-decree inasmuch as it was obtained against the old tenant who had no interest in the tenancy. The Court, holding that the objection of the petitioner was preferred under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, overruled it as being barred under section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The petitioner moved the High Court in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that as the petitioner had other remedies by suit or otherwise and that as the error of the executing Court, if any, was at most an error of law, the intervention of the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, was not called for. [p. 191, col. 2; p. 192, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, Nadia.

FACTS.—Robertson and Co. obtained a permanent lease of an under-tenure under the decree-holders sometime ago. Petitioner purchased the under-tenure on 13th November 1913 in execution of a money-decree before the arrears sued for now accrued due. This purchase was brought to the notice of the decree-holder-landlords in due course. But in 1917 decree-holders landlords obtained a decree for rent against Robertson and Co., ignoring the purchase of the petitioner, and brought the property to sale in execution of the decree. Petitioner put in an objection that the latter decree was not a rent-decree but a money-decree and as such was governed by the claim sections of the Civil Procedure Code, and moved the High Court against the order of the lower Court overruling the objection.

Babu Barnashibasi Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.—The points to be decided are :—

(1) Whether the decree obtained by the landlord was a rent-decree or not?

(2) If it was a rent-decree, whether the claim was barred by section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as the lower Court says?

[TEUNON, J.—You have your remedy by a suit].

If the property is sold then there will be difficulties. The lower Court had no right to decide the question without deciding whether it is a rent-decree or not. Therefore I submit the two points for your Lordship's consideration:

(1) The decree in execution of which the property was sold was a money-decree against Messrs. Robertson and Co., who were not properly represented.

(2) The tenancy being a permanent under-tenure is transferable under the law and I having purchased it with the knowledge of the landlord, my right cannot be challenged.

My application was under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[TEUNON, J.—If you are in possession then your application was under Order XXI, rule 58.]

Babu Phanindra Lal Moitra, for the Opposite Party.—The original petition was under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge dealt it as one under Order XXI, rule 58. In order to prove whether the decree is a rent-decree or not, it is to be decided whether the original suit for rent was brought by the original sole landlord against the recorded tenant.

[TEUNON, J.—Your case is that this is a non-transferable occupancy holding, but they say that it is a transferable under-tenure and permanent and the petitioner's case is that it was transferred to him with your knowledge. If this is proved to be so, what is the value of your decree?]

If that is held, he should put in the decretal amount in Court and take receipt from Court under section 170, clause (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. In support of the proposition that when the plaintiff is the landlord at the date of the suit the application for execution of the decree is to be made under the Bengal Tenancy Act, Khetra Pal Singh v. Kritarthamoyi Dassi (1) was referred to.

(1) 10 C. W. N. 547; 3 C. L. J. 470; 33 C. 560 (F. B.).

RAJANI KANTA PAL v. KEDAR NATH BISWAS.

[TEUNON, J.—This case is not in point. In Khetra Pal Singh v. Kritarthamoyi Dassi (1) there was no question that the proper tenant was sued at that date.]

By withholding the rent from me he cannot force me to recognise him as the transferee. He could have deposited the rent under section 170, clause (3), of the Bengal Tenancy Act or under section 61 and then could have challenged whether the tenancy was transferable or not.

[TEUNON, J.—But if the decree is proved to be fraudulent?]

Then he will have to bring a fresh suit and get an injunction. So long as the decree stands, it must be presumed to be good. But instead of depositing the money as aforesaid, he puts in a petition under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code. I submit your Lordships will not interfere in this case under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code; the petitioner has other remedies.

Babu Baranashibasi Mukherjee, in reply.—Under section 11 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the interest in a permanent tenure will be transferable in the same way as any other property. Therefore, the allegation of my client that the interest of Messrs. Robertson and Co. was a transferable one, is all right. The landlord knew that I stepped into the shoes of Messrs. Robertson and Co. Then again why should my client deposit rent in Court under section 61 or section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act? Why should he take the risk of a suit without the determination of the question as to whether the decree was a rent-decree and as such whether it was capable of being executed under Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act? I have no objection to paying rent. Let the landlord recognise me as a tenant and take rent from me.

As regards clause (3) of section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that section has no application in this case.

I am not the judgment-debtor nor his representative, nor have I a voidable interest. I bought long before the date of the decree.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that in execution of a money decree obtained by a third party as against the tenant of a certain holding or tenure, that tenure or holding was sold to the present petitioner on the 13th November 1913. The landlord has refused to recognise the purchaser as a tenant, on the ground that the holding is in fact a non-transferable occupancy holding. The petitioner-purchaser's contention is that this is a permanent under-tenure and, therefore, transferable. In the year 1917 to recover rents that had accrued due after the sale to the present petitioner in November 1913 the landlord brought a suit against his old tenant and obtained a decree ex parte. In execution of that decree he now seeks to have the property sold. The present petitioner preferred an objection to the executing Court contending that though the decree was in form a rent-decree, yet by reason of the fact that it had been brought against a person who had no present interest in the tenancy it was merely a money decree. This application he purported to make under the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There appears to be no controversy that the decree-holder is in fact the landlord and there also appears to be no controversy that the rent for the period in suit was in fact due, the landlord having apparently refused to receive rent from the petitioner and the petitioner having taken no action under section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or otherwise in order to secure that payment should be duly made. In this state of facts the learned Subordinate Judge held that the application made by the petitioner before us, though it purported to be one under section 47 of the Code, was in fact one made under the provisions or falling under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58. Having regard, therefore, to the provisions of section 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, he held that the claim could not be entertained and he, therefore, dismissed the application.

We are asked to revise his order under the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Now it is apparent that the petitioner before us has other remedies by suit or otherwise, and it is also fairly clear that if on the facts we have set out the learned Subordinate Judge committed any error in holding that Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply, he at most committed an error of law which is not sufficient to call for our intervention under the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. We, therefore, discharge this Rule with costs, two gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

In such a case the purchaser cannot treat the consideration which he seeks to get refunded as a debt of the father which it is the pious duty of the sons to repay. [p. 193, col. 2.]

A decree against the father will not operate as res judicata in a suit by the sons to set aside the sale in respect of their shares in the property. [p. 193, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Appeal Suits Nos. 22 and 25 of 1916, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 689 of 1913.

FACT appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.—The purchaser is entitled to a refund of the sale consideration when the sale is set aside, and though the sale has been held to be not binding on the sons, the latter are bound to refund a proportionate portion of the sale price. The obligation of the father to return the price is in the nature of a debt, and the sons being under a pious duty to pay their father's debts under Hindu Law, the consideration is chargeable on their share in the property.

Reference was made to the judgment of Spencer, J., in Subbaiya Mudaliar v. Thulasi Mudaliar (1).

Again, the decree against the father is res judicata against the sons and the sons cannot sue to set the sale aside.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Aiyar, for the Respondents.—There is no pious obligation where the sale by the father was found to be not for purposes binding on the family. The consideration cannot be treated as a debt. The pious obligation attaches only to debts contracted by the father, and not to the consequences flowing from the father's illegal acts. The consideration which the father is bound to return cannot be charged on the sons' share. Vide judgments of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Subbaiya Mudaliar v. Thulasi Mudaliar (1) and Virabhadra Gowdu v. Guruvankata Charlu (2).

The pious obligation does not arise until after the father's lifetime: Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3).

The decision in the suit against the father cannot operate as res judicata, as the father could not plead absence of necessity himself and get the sale set aside.

KILARU KOTAYYA v. POLAVARAPU DURGAYYA.

defendant, the father of the plaintiffs, the father and sons belonging to a joint Hindu family. The 1st defendant had instituted a suit previously by which he sought to set aside the alienation on the ground of fraud, undue influence and want of consideration. This Court held that the alienation could not be set aside but though the consideration of Rs. 800 had not been originally paid by the purchaser, yet inasmuch as he undertook to pay that amount the previous suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs were not parties to the suit and no question of necessity was considered or decided by this Court. In fact that was not a question seriously pressed at the trial in that suit. The present suit has been brought by the sons in order to set aside that very sale and the plaintiffs have obtained a decree to that effect.

It has not been proved that the sale was made for purposes binding the family. The question that is now raised before us by Mr. Prakasam appearing on behalf of the purchaser is that the plaintiffs should not be allowed to have a decree, so far as their 2/3rd share is concerned, without being directed to pay a like proportion of the amount which has been paid as consideration for the sale, that is to say, he asks us to treat the consideration for the sale, which he sought to get refunded to him, as a debt of the 1st defendant which it is a pious obligation of the plaintiffs to repay. He drew our attention, in support of this contention, to a passage in the judgment of Spencer, J., in the case of Subbayya Mudaliar v. Thulasi Mudaliar (1). But no authorities are cited therein in support of such a proposition. On the other hand, it is clear from the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the same case that, in his opinion, a purchaser in similar circumstances was not entitled to any charge for the consideration or any portion of it, that is, in a case where the sale was held to be not binding on the share of the son. In so holding he followed a ruling of a Division Bench of this Court in Virabhadra Gowdu v. Gurukenkata Charlu (2) and the view of the law laid down by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Sabbaiya Mudaliar v. Thulasi Mudaliar (1). The consideration of Rs. 800 was paid for the sale of the property and no question of debt could arise until at least the sale is set aside. Whether it could even then be said to be a debt which the son would be under an obligation to pay within the meaning of Hindu Law may be open to question. In any case 2nd defendant is not entitled to any charge on the son's share for any portion of the consideration of a sale which was not for purposes binding on the family. The learned Vakil for the respondent has drawn our attention to a passage in a recent ruling of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3), where it is stated that the question of pious obligation of a son to pay his father's debt does not arise until after the father's lifetime. This passage was considered by a decision of a Bench of this Court in Vinjanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (4), and there it is stated that their Lordships of the Privy Council could not by this statement have intended to modify the law, as laid down in a long series of decisions, as regards the right of a creditor to enforce a debt borrowed by the father both against the father and the son. It is not necessary, however, to discuss this point any further in this case, as I think that the ruling in Virabhadra Gowdu v. Gurukenkata Charlu (2) is decisive of the question raised by the appellant. Whether the 2nd defendant will be entitled to sue the father and the sons for the consideration which has failed in a separate suit afterwards, is not a question on which we need express any opinion at present.

The second point urged by Mr. Prakasam is that the decree in the previous suit, to which I have already alluded, operates as res judicata. I think it is rightly pointed out by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar that the father could not, as plaintiff in that suit, get the sale set aside on the ground that there was no necessity for his own act. I think that is a sufficient answer to this argument.

In the result the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 92, 115, applicability of—Oral evidence to show nature of transaction contained in deed, admissibility of—Pre-emption, suit for—Estoppel, doctrine of, applicability of.

Section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act is confined to proceedings between the parties to the deed or their representatives-in-interest and has no application to claims by or against third persons. [p. 194, col. 2.]

Parties to a transaction which is not really an out and out sale are not estopped in a suit for pre-emption brought by a third party from adducing oral evidence to show the real nature of the transaction, even when the document evidencing the transfer stands in the form of a sale-deed. [p. 195, col. 1.]

Section 115 of the Evidence Act contemplates some act or conduct affecting the party pleading it and having the effect of inducing him to change his position for the worse. [p. 195, col. 1.]

Unless a transaction is really one which gives rise in law to a right of pre-emption, no such right can be obtained by means of an estoppel. [p. 195, col. 2.]

There is no estoppel where all that is proved is that the transaction in dispute was in form a sale and that the plaintiff treated it as a sale for the purpose of bringing a suit for pre-emption which he would not otherwise have been entitled to bring. [p. 195, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 23rd September 1915.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mirza Samiullah Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption in respect of a sale-deed, dated the 5th January 1914, executed by Ram Singh, now represented by the third defendant Partab Singh, in favour of his brother-in-law, the 1st defendant Baldeo Singh. The property consisted of the entire south mahal (mahal dakhin) of Manza Rauli in the Sandila Tahsil of the Hardoi district and the price was Rs. 8,775. The substantial defence in the suit was that the transaction was not an out and out sale, but of the nature of a mortgage by conditional sale, the parties agreeing that Baldeo Singh would reconvey the property after three years on being repaid the amount advanced by him and that in the meantime Ram Singh would pay interest. There is no question here of a transaction disguised in order to avoid pre-emption. Baldeo Singh holds an important position in the Kotah State. Ram Singh was already heavily in debt and showed a disposition to plunge still more heavily. He wanted money urgently to file a suit for the redemption of a very onerous mortgage executed by him in respect of another village Sunda. Baldeo Singh, who had already lent him money on mortgage on this very property, agreed to advance the sum required, on condition that Ram Singh would execute a sale deed so as to make it impossible for Ram Singh to incur any further debts on the security of the same property. No one would be likely to advance money to Ram Singh on the security of the property so long as the name of Baldeo Singh stood recorded as owner in the proprietary register.

The plaintiff appellant Bishunath Singh on the one hand disputes the facts and on the other urges a plea of estoppel against the defendants. This plea he bases on two grounds. In the lower Court section 92 of the Evidence Act seems to have been relied on, but in this Court it had to be admitted that section 92 has no application. That section is expressly confined, as its own language clearly shows and as was emphatically held by the Privy Council in a recent case from Burma [Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (1)], to proceedings between the parties to the deed or their representatives-in-interest, and has no application to claims by or against third parties. The appellant, therefore, shifts his ground and urges that as Baldeo Singh could plead section 92 in answer to a suit for redemption by Partab Singh, therefore he should not be allowed to prove against the plaintiff anything which he could not have proved against Partab Singh. Otherwise, it is said, he would get all the advantages of the position of vendee without the corresponding liability to pre-emption. This is the first argument. The second is that by reason of the fact that the deed was registered as a sale-deed the plaintiff has been induced to embark on an expensive litigation and, therefore, the defendants are estopped by section 115 of the Evidence Act from denying that the transaction was a sale.

Neither of these pleas has any force. If the parties are permitted, as by law they clearly are permitted, to give evidence of the real nature of the transaction, they cannot be prevented from doing so because one of the defendants might possibly at some future time take advantage of the situation to commit a fraud on the other. The probability in this case is extremely remote as Baldeo Singh and Partab Singh are father and son, Ram Singh having died leaving a Will in favour of his sister's son.

As regards the second argument it is sufficient to say that section 115 contemplates some act or conduct affecting the party pleading it and having the effect of inducing him to change his position for the worse. Here there was no representation made directly or indirectly to the plaintiff with a view to influence his conduct. In the lower Court he set up a representation but it was amply proved that his statement was false. He, therefore, falls back on a sort of general estoppel based solely on the fact that the transaction was in form a sale and available to any person who might be entitled to any right on the assumption that a sale had already taken place. This is carrying the doctrine of estoppel to impossible lengths. If the appellant's doctrine were accepted, it would be equivalent to extending section 92 of the Evidence Act to all suits in which a third party was plaintiff. Such a plaintiff could always plead that he had been induced to embark on an expensive litigation owing to the form in which the transaction was clothed. In Nawab Begam v. Hamid Ali (2) a Bench of this Court held that the mere fact that what was really a gift was couched in the form of a sale would not in itself estop the parties from proving the real nature of the transaction in a pre-emption suit; assuming that the form of this document amounted to a representation, as to which there was possibly room for doubt, there must be proof that the plaintiff believed the representation and acted on that belief. In Raj Bahadur v. Jagrup Pande (3) the 1st learned A. J. C., who delivered the leading judgment, expressed the opinion that unless the transaction was really one which gave rise in law to a right of pre-emption no such right could be obtained by means of an estoppel. We are clearly of opinion that there is no estoppel where all that is proved is that the transaction in dispute was in form a sale and that the plaintiff treated it as a sale for the purpose of bringing a suit for pre-emption which he would not otherwise have been entitled to bring.

On the evidence it is abundantly clear that the facts are as stated above and as they have been found by the learned Subordinate Judge. The evidence has been so fully discussed in his judgment that, agreeing as we do with the view which he has taken of it, there is very little which it is necessary for us to add. The correspondence between Ram Singh and Baldeo Singh leaves no doubt as to the real nature of the transaction. On 18th September 1913 Ram Singh writes to Baldeo Singh, saying that he agrees to the proposal made by the latter to advance money on Rudauli on the execution of a sale-deed which would subsequently be returned, since he urgently requires money for the redemption of Mauza Sunda and if this proposal is not accepted he will be unable to redeem the property. Ram Singh, however, promises to execute a sale-deed of Mauza Rudauli for Rs. 9,000 and asks Baldeo Singh in return to execute what he describes as "an ordinary agreement", promising that when Ram Singh repays the money he will restore the village. The money to be recovered will be strictly spent in instituting the case, and not in extravagance as Baldeo Singh had evidently feared. This letter, Exhibit A-2, was produced by Baldeo Singh at the first hearing. In reply to this Baldeo Singh writes on 22nd September (Exhibit C-1), saying that he accepts the proposal to advance Rs. 9,000 but that as some Rs. 200 or Rs. 250 will be spent in sending his men backwards and forwards in connection with the advance he will return only Rs. 8,775.

In the end, however, the sale deed also was executed for Rs. 8,775 only.

Along with this letter Baldeo Singh sent an agreement on plain paper, Exhibit C-2, saying that being in a Native State he cannot obtain a Government stamp but that if Ram Singh desires he will execute a fresh agreement on stamped paper when he comes to Ram Singh's house on leave. He asks Ram Singh to complete the sale-deed and states that he has fixed three years as the period for reconveyance, because he cannot wait indefinitely if Ram Singh should delay in instituting the Sunda case. Ram Singh should institute the case and get back his sale deed within that period. In the meanwhile he must pay 12 annas per cent. per month interest and repay the principal and any unpaid interest at the end of three years, otherwise the sale will become absolute. The accompanying agreement, Exhibit C-2, has been rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge as requiring registration. Whether it required registration or not, depends on whether it is treated as a document creating an actual right to the property or as merely a personal contract to execute a reconveyance under certain circumstances. The point is not very material, as the agreement can certainly be looked at for the collateral purpose of discovering what the real nature of transaction between the parties was. On October 17th of the same year Ram Singh wrote again to Baldeo Singh disclaiming any desire for a stamped agreement but protesting once more that the period of three years was insufficient. This communication was on a post card bearing the Sandila post mark of 18th October and the Kotah delivery post mark of 23rd October. A month after the execution of the sale-deed Ram Singh wrote a further letter, Exhibit A-6, promising, in reply to exhortation of Baldeo Singh to pay interest, that it should be regularly paid every three months. We have evidence that interest was paid on two occasions. Exhibit C-4 is a post card from Baldeo Singh to Ram Singh dated the 18th April 1914 acknowledging payment of Rs. 197-7-0 on this account.

The appellant has endeavoured, on altogether insufficient grounds, to throw doubts on the genuineness of this correspondence, chiefly on the ground that some of the letters were not filed on the first day of hearing. This matter has been sufficiently disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge. Several of the communications are in the form of post cards as to the genuineness of which no doubt is possible and the whole correspondence bears internal evidence of being genuine. It has been suggested by the appellant that these letters are clearly not documents creating any right in immoveable property.

Two other circumstances which go strongly to support the respondents' case are:

(1) that Ram Singh remained throughout in possession of the property, and

(2) that the ostensible sale price bears no sort of relation to the value of the property.

As to the first point the evidence is so overwhelming that the appellant has not attempted to controvert it but has taken up the position that because mutation of names was duly effected and possession acknowledged at the time of mutation, therefore, Ram Singh's possession must be treated as being on behalf of Baldeo Singh. This argument proceeds on a misconception. If we were dealing with a dispute between Ram Singh and Baldeo Singh as to the ownership of the property, we might well say that the mutation proceedings and Ram Singh's conduct were conclusive against the latter, but when we are endeavouring to find out as against a third party the real state of affairs, the fact that Ram Singh remained throughout in possession and performed all acts of ownership is of immense importance. The previous mortgage in favour of Baldeo Singh, though in form usufructuary, was in fact treated as a simple mortgage. Ram Singh paid interest on it and he continued to give leases to tenants and filed suits in his own name just as if no mortgage was in existence. The same thing continued after the execution of the sale-deed. Ram Singh's conduct was not that of an agent in possession of property on behalf of another but of an owner in possession on his own behalf. As regards the value of the property it is amply proved that the property which Ram Singh purported to sell for Rs. 8,775 was actually worth not less than Rs. 14,000 or Rs. 15,000. The appellant wishes us to disregard this fact on the ground that properties were frequently sold much below their real value, but in the circumstances of this case we cannot but regard it as a fact having an important bearing on the true nature of the bargain between the parties. Not only was the advance made by Baldeo Singh for less than the value of the property but, as the correspondence shows, it was made without any reference to the value of the property. Ram Singh required Rs. 9,000. Rupees 9,000 were, therefore, advanced deducting only a sum of Rs. 225 to cover the costs incurred by the lender in connection with the transaction.

The appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Breach of contract—Damages, suit for—Party who has not performed his part of the contract, whether can recover damages.

A plaintiff, who has himself failed to perform his part of a contract and has given no evidence that he has suffered any damages by the defendant's breach of the contract, cannot succeed in a suit for damages for breach of contract.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 28th August 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at that place, dated the 30th June 1915.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 28th August 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff sued for damages for breach of a contract with reference to the sale of timber growing on certain jungle, the property of the plaintiff. The facts as found are perfectly simple, namely, that the defendants cut and removed the timber growing on certain portions of the jungle and that they had paid in advance in excess of the value of the timber so removed. Under the terms provided for by the contract, the plaintiff now wants damages from the defendants. There seem to be two answers to the plaintiff's contention. The first answer is that apparently the plaintiff himself was in default under the contract in not having agreed to have a measurement. If that was so, of course, the plaintiff cannot recover damages in respect of a contract, that he committed a breach of. The second answer is that the plaintiff, purporting to act under the terms of the contract, resumed possession of the forest and got back all the timber the price of which he now seeks to recover from the defendants. The plaintiff has given no evidence that he suffered any damages. It may be that to-day or to-morrow he will be able to re-sell the timber for an equal or a larger price than what he had sold it for to the defendants. He cannot get damages from the defendants without proving what damage he had suffered and what was the pecuniary loss that happened to him by reason of the defendants not having carried out their part of the contract. It is quite possible in this case, without coming to any conclusion as to what is the actual meaning of certain parts of the contract, to say that the plaintiff having failed to perform his part of the contract and there being no evidence that he suffered any loss at all as to the timber for which he now seeks to recover, damages cannot succeed in the present suit. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, such costs to be paid only to the contesting defendant No. 3.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 6 (b), 109, 111 (g)—Lease—Reversion, transfer of—Forfeiture for breach of condition—Transferee, whether can enforce forfeiture where breach occurred before transfer.

A transfer of the reversion of a lease carries with it the right to enforce forfeiture of the lease for breach of a condition, even where the breach has occurred prior to the transfer. [p. 200, col. 2]

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Shah, in Second Appeal No. 1018 of 1914, against the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 131 of 1913, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Kumtha, in Civil Suit No. 53 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case sues to recover possession of 5/8th portion of the land in suit. He claims to have purchased the landlord's rights in this land by a deed, dated the 17th of December 1911, and he relies upon the forfeiture of the tenancy resulting from the breach of a condition of the Mulgeni lease which was created by his vendors in favour of the predecessor-in-title of defendant No. 2 on the 30th of November 1896. That Mulgeni lease was not for any agricultural purpose and it was a condition of that lease that the lessee was not to alienate or permit to be alienated, by way of mortgage, sale or in any other like manner, the property leased. Defendant No. 2 claims to have purchased all the rights under this Mulgeni lease; and the contest in this litigation is principally between the plaintiff and defendant No. 2. Both the lower Courts have held that there was a breach of this condition, inasmuch as there was a sale of the Mulgeni rights in December 1908 in favour of defendant No. 2. On that footing there has been a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The present appeal is preferred by defendant No. 2, and two points have been urged on his behalf: first, that the plaintiff as transferee cannot take advantage of the breach of a condition of the lease, which took place before the assignment in his favour, and, secondly, that the notice showing the intention to determine the lease is not sufficient in law.

As regards the first point it seems to me that under section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, would possess all the rights of the lessor, and under section 111, clause (g), the lease would determine by forfeiture resulting from the breach of an express condition on the part of the tenant, the transferee from the landlord having shown his intention to determine the lease by a notice. In the present case there is no doubt about the condition and the breach of that condition; and there can be no doubt under the terms of the assignment in favour of the plaintiff that he was to have the same rights as his vendors for the purpose of enforcing forfeiture against defendant No. 2. It is needless to refer to certain English cases which were cited by the learned Pleader for the appellant, as under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act it is clear that they would have no application to the present case.

In connection with this point it is urged that under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act the mere right of re-entry for breach of a condition subsequent cannot be transferred to any one except the owner of property affected thereby. In the present case it is quite clear that what is transferred is not a mere right of re-entry, but the whole of the landlord's interest in the land, and the transfer is not in favour of any one except the owner of the property affected thereby. It follows, therefore, that there has been a forfeiture of the Mulgeni lease in this case and that the plaintiff is entitled to enforce the forfeiture.

As regards the point of notice, it was not suggested in the trial Court, and though it was mentioned in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, it does not appear to have been urged as there is no reference to the point in the judgment. Besides it seems to me that there is no substance whatever in that point. The notice was given by the plaintiff who represented the whole of the landlord's interest except that of defendant No. 7, and the notice was in respect of the whole interest. The mere fact that defendant No. 7 did not join in the notice does not appear to me to render the notice invalid or inadequate in any way.

The result, therefore, is that both the points urged in support of the appeal fail and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is affirmed with costs.

There will be only one set of costs.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Mr. V. R. Sirur), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for Respondent No 1.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—I doubt whether the true point was present to the mind of the learned Judge below. He appears to have thought that the question could be answered from the language of sections 6, clause (b), 109 and 111, clause (g), of the Transfer of Property Act. Even were that so, I should still doubt whether the answer he has given is right. Section 6, clause (b), is no more than a special case of a mere right to sue. For if the mere right of re-entry on breach of condition subsequent is transferred, without the reversion, the person having it could only use it for the purpose of a suit to enforce forfeiture, without gaining any right or interest in the property so demised and forfeited. Section 109 seems to me to have no bearing on the point. Section 111, clause (g), need not mean any more than that the lessor must give notice of intention to enforce forfeiture, or if the breach has occurred after transfer of the reversion, the transferee must give notice. That is how I read it and if I am right, it leaves our point untouched.

Put in the simplest and fewest words it is this: Does the transfer of the reversion carry with it the right to enforce forfeiture for breach of condition prior to the transfer? The law in England was well settled and seemingly unquestioned that it did not [Hunt v. Bishop (1), Cohen v.

Tannar (2)] till by the Act 1 & 2, Geo. V, c. 37, statutory validity was given to the view taken by the learned Judge below.

I am not aware of any corresponding amendment of the Transfer of Property Act, altering the law in India. Speaking generally, it is safe to say that with few exceptions the Transfer of Property Act is a codified expression of the English Law. Presumably, then, it meant to give effect to what was the settled law of England on this point up to 1911.

In the absence of statutory provision, and on general principle, I own I should find it hard to come to any other conclusion than that which was so often stated and affirmed in the English Courts.

The facts with which we have to deal are: (1) that there was a breach of condition three years before this transfer, (2) that breach of condition would undoubtedly have worked a forfeiture, (3) the lessor did not waive the breach, (4) the lessor had never given the lessee notice of his intention to enforce the forfeiture, before the transfer.

What then was transferred? The reversion primarily. No one disputes it, or contends that there was anything illegal or even questionable in such an assignment. As between the transferor and transferee of the reversion no question arises here, and we have nothing to do with it. But as between the lessor and the lessee the case is different. They had entered into a contract of leasing on conditions. That contract had been broken by the lessee. But before the penalty could be enforced the law required the lessor to give notice of his intention to enforce it. This he had not done. Admittedly till he had (or if the law permits this, till his transferee had done so), no penalty could be enforced, and the contract would be subsisting. What the lessor does is to transfer the property demised to the plaintiff setting forth the prior contract and the fact that it had been broken, so, in other words, leaving the transferee to sue on the breach and enforce the penalty. It is easy to see that this could not be done in the case of an ordinary contract.

(2) (1900) 2 Q. B. 609; 69 L. J. Q. B. 904; 83 L. T. 64; 48 W. R. 642.

SHAMSHAD ALI KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN.

While such a contract might be assigned before breach, it certainly could not afterwards, for then what is assigned is only the right to sue for damages, and this is a mere right to sue, whether or not the transferee is to have what he can get by way of damages after suit. Similarly in this case, the fact that the transferee is to have the property demised, as soon as he can enforce the penalty by suit against the lessee for breach of condition prior to his transfer, seems to me to make no difference. All that the transferor could assign was the reversion, since he had not given notice of his intention to enforce forfeiture on breach of condition already made. But it is argued he might also transfer the right he had to give this notice and thereupon to sue on the contract and enforce the penalty. That is the very point. Could he? For what is this, thus isolated, but a mere right to sue? How can it be distinguished in any essential from the assignment of a contract already broken, under which the only surviving right is the right to sue for damages? This right, it is to be observed, is quite distinct from and must not be confounded with the right to the reversion as upon the footing of an existing lease, and for that reason it has to be examined by itself after analysis has revealed the true nature of the transfer as a whole. It is thus shown, I think, that the transfer is a transfer of the reversion implying the actual subsistence of the lease, and, therefore, that the transferee must wait for a breach of condition subsequent to the transfer before he can sue to enforce a forfeiture, or as between transferor, transferee and lessee, it is no more than the transfer by the transferor to the transferee of a right to sue the lessee and turn him out. In the latter case such a transfer is clearly prohibited by the Act, and in the former the transferee would have no cause of action on the breach prior to transfer.

But since the law of England has been altered, and the Statute of 1911 provides in terms for such a case as this, I see no reason why we should not in such matters make the administration of the law as a whole as systematic as possible. It would be difficult to say that the Transfer of Property Act, as it stands, in express words, prohibits the plaintiff from suing here, and although, as I have shown, a reference to general principles and the spirit of the Act brings out that conclusion, I do not object to accepting the statutory modification of those general principles which has taken place in England. It is only upon that ground that I could bring myself to confirm the decree of the lower Court.

Appeal dismissed with all costs.

HEATON, J. - My opinion also is that the decree made by Shah, J., should be confirmed. The only ground on which that decree is assailed is that the lessor could not transfer his right to put an end to the lease, this right being founded on a breach of a condition of the lease which happened prior to the transfer. The point is one which was taken for the first time in second appeal; it was not argued in the trial Court or in the Court of first appeal. It is one which invites and for its satisfactory elucidation, in my opinion, requires an investigation of the facts from an altogether new point of view. We cannot make such an investigation here, nor ought we to remand the case. I am, therefore, not satisfied that the transfer by the lessor to the plaintiff was illegal in so far as it comprised a transfer of a right to sue. Indeed, though my learned brother takes the contrary view I am rather disposed to think that the transfer in this case is one which is exactly covered by the words of section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Appeals dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—Certain property was mortgaged with possession by Mohammad Ali Khan, the first defendant, to Asnad Ali Khan deceased, father of the plaintiffs-appellants, and a deed of further charge was executed in respect of the same property. A portion of this property, amounting roughly to one-half, was purchased by the plaintiffs in execution of a simple money decree. The purchase was made subject to the deed of further charge which was duly proclaimed at the sale. The plaintiffs in the present litigation seek to bring to sale the remaining half of the mortgaged property in lieu of half the interest due under the deed of further charge. They admit that by purchasing the equity of redemption in half of the property the mortgage has been split up and has been extinguished to the extent of the property which they have purchased. The first Court, finding that the value of the property purchased was slightly more than half the total value of the mortgaged property, gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 48-13-9, as against Rs. 54 which they originally claimed. The appellants admit the correctness of this decree. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit altogether, holding that because the deed of further charge was notified at the time of sale and the sale was made subject to it, the whole of the charge must be deemed to have been extinguished by the purchase.

The proposition of law enunciated by the Court below obviously cannot be supported and the respondents' Counsel has made no attempt to support it. If one of several properties comprised in a mortgage is sold to satisfy the money claimed, it is the invariable practice to notify the entire mortgage and this certainly does not imply any intention on the part of the mortgagee to relinquish his claim against the remaining mortgaged properties. The contention of the respondents' Counsel is that if it is found that the value of the property purchased is sufficient to cover the amount due under the charge in addition to the purchase money, it should be presumed that the charge was extinguished. He admits that there is no finding in his favour on this point and that the question has never been gone into, but he asks that we should now in second appeal remit an issue regarding it. He relies on the case of Amir Hasan Khan v. Chaudhri Hadi Hasan (1), in which the view for which he contends was accepted as one of two grounds for upholding the lower Court's judgment. He relies still more strongly on the Privy Council case of Dulichand v. Ramkishen Singh (2), which was cited evidently with some doubt as to its applicability in Amir Hasan Khan v. Chaudhri Hadi Hasan (1) (at page 344), with the remark that "For this view there seems to be support in the case of Dulichand v. Ramkishen Singh (2)." On the other hand a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has laid down in Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup (3) that where a mortgagee purchases a part of the mortgaged property subject to his mortgage, the question of the sale price is immaterial and the effect of the purchase is to extinguish the mortgage to an amount proportional to the extent of the property purchased. If a mortgagee becomes possessed of the equity of redemption in one-third of the property then the mortgage is extinguished to the extent of one-third, if he becomes owner of half the mortgaged property the mortgage is extinguished to the extent of one-half and so on.

The appeal originally came before the learned Judicial Commissioner who referred it to a Bench on the ground that in his opinion the decision in Amir Hasan Khan v. Chaudhri Hadi Hasan (1) was erroneous. With this view we are in entire agreement. Where property is sold subject to a mortgage, though the sale price will doubtless be affected by the existence of the en-encumbrance, the mortgage money forms no part of the price. On the contrary the whole meaning of selling subject to a mortgage is that the right of the mortgagee is preserved intact. The reason why there is a complete or partial extinction of the mortgage when the mortgagee is himself the purchaser is that in such a case there is a merger of the mortgagee right and the proprietary interest to the extent of the property purchased. The integrity of the mortgage is broken up and the mortgagee can no longer claim to throw the whole burden of the mortgage on the remaining property. The law on the subject was fully considered by a Bench of six Judges in Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup (3) and is thus summed up in the leading judgment of Banerji, J.:—

"Upon further consideration, I am of opinion that the rule laid down by the Bombay High Court is the true rule, and that when the mortgagee buys at auction the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property, such purchase has, in the absence of fraud, the effect of discharging and extinguishing that portion of the mortgage debt which was chargeable on the property purchased by him, that is to say, a portion of the debt which bears the same ratio to the whole amount of the debt that the value of the property purchased bears to the value of the whole of the property comprised in the mortgage."

That ruling has never, so far as we are aware or as has been pointed out to us, been dissented from by any High Court in India. It has been repeatedly followed at Allahabad and the same rule has been followed both before and since by the Bombay High Court. It has also been followed by the Calcutta High Court, vide, Mutty Lal Pal v. Nandu Lal Neogi (4). It has been treated as good authority in at least one case in this Court, e. g., Suraj Kishan v. Ajudhya Prasad Singh (5). It only remains to see whether there is anything in the Privy Council case relied on by the respondents to conflict with a view so reasonable in itself and supported by such a wide consensus of authority. There are some observations in that case, which was decided prior to the introduction of the Transfer of Property Act, which might appear to support the respondents' argument, but the actual point to be decided was whether a purchaser who had stepped into the shoes of a prior mortgagee could recover an amount paid into Court to prevent the property being sold over again in execution of a decree based on a subsequent mortgage, a sale against which he had vainly protested before it took place. The report shows that there was no dispute before their Lordships as to the equitable right of the plaintiff to recover his money. "The arguments at the Bar," say their Lordships, "were not directed to show that there is any equity upon which the appellant could retain this money; but the objections taken to the action were that the payment was voluntary, and that the remedy, if any, was in the execution proceedings." The case has been frequently cited as laying down the law as to what constitutes a voluntary payment. Neither in Bisheshur Dial v. Ram Sarup (3) nor in any of the various cases in which that ruling has been followed does it ever appear to have been suggested that the High Courts, in the view which they took, were contravening anything laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in that case.

We accordingly allow the appeal, and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, restore the Munsif's decree with costs in all Courts recoverable as part of the decretal amount.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 21st of March 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Berhampur, dated the 27th of February 1915.

FACTS appear from arguments and the judgment.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babu Phanindra Kumar Singha), for the Appellants.—Defendants are the appellants. Plaintiff No. 2 is the wife of plaintiff No. 1 and daughter of defendant No. 1; other defendants are the sons of defendant No. 1. The jote in dispute was purchased by plaintiff No. 1 in benami for his wife, plaintiff No. 2, in 1316 B. S. Defendant No. 1 is a korfa tenant of the jote. Plaintiff No. 2 in 1319 B. S. sold the disputed jote to defendant No. 1 and the sale-deed was registered. The present suit, out of which this appeal arises, has been brought for khas possession after declaration that the kobala by which defendant No. 1 purchased the jote from plaintiff No. 2 is void and inoperative.

The first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that plaintiff No. 1 was present at the time when the transaction took place. On appeal the lower Appellate Court cancelled the kobala as void and inoperative for want of consideration. The lower Appellate Court held that "the kobala is void for want of consideration and is liable to cancellation on that ground, even if plaintiff No. 1 was a consenting party to its execution."

The kobala having been registered and possession having been delivered in accordance with it, section 25 of the Contract Act has no application. The consideration money, if not paid, is merely a charge upon the property. There are authorities to support this contention.

[FLETCHER, J.—The transaction may be a valid transaction, even if no consideration money passed at the time of the execution].

Babu Nakuleswar Mukherjee, for the Respondents.—The intention of the parties must be looked into. The parties here intended that the sale would be valid only upon the payment of the consideration money. The finding is that the consideration money did not pass, therefore, the sale is void and inoperative. The payment of the consideration money was made a condition precedent to the validity of the kobala.

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar was not called upon in reply.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned District Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 21st March 1916, modifying the decision of the Munsif at Berhampur. The case is a small one and it is unfortunate that we have got to send the case back, as we have no other alternative because the learned District Judge has not disposed of the case in a proper manner. The suit was brought by a man and his wife, the two plaintiffs, against the man's mother-in-law for a declaration that a certain kobala which bore the vernacular date corresponding to some other date in April 1912 was void and inoperative on the ground that it was obtained by misrepresentation, undue influence and want of consideration, and as a consequence the plaintiff asked for khas possession of certain property. The plaintiff No. 2 in the year 1909 acquired certain plots of land. Of one of these plots or part of the land that was acquired the defendant No. 1, who is the mother of the plaintiff No. 2, was an under-raiyat and the case is that the mother obtained by the means suggested in the plaint from her daughter this kobala which was executed in her favour. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has dealt with the case in this way. He says, "the evidence shows to me that the consideration money expressed to be paid by the conveyance executed in favour of the mother by the daughter was not, in fact, paid and, therefore, the conveyance is void." Of course that is clearly wrong. The non-payment of the consideration money may be an important item to take into consideration to determine whether the conveyance was or was not a real transaction. But a conveyance, notwithstanding the non-payment of the consideration money, may be a perfectly good transactions.

SUBA RAUT v. MANLA RAUTAIN.

In some cases, the consideration money is not paid as it is expressed to be paid in the deed and the conveyance is a perfectly honest and good one. It has been attempted to support this view of the learned Judge on the ground that the parties intended to pass the property only upon the payment of the consideration money. Of course, there may be such a case, and there are cases where the conveyance is drawn in such a form that the conveyance is conditional and conditional only upon the satisfaction of the consideration money. But that is not the case here. In this case the conveyance is in the ordinary form adopted in Bengali instruments of sale and the words to be relied upon correspond with the ordinary words occurring in the English conveyance admitting the receipt of the consideration money. Then, it is said that the intention should be gathered from the oral evidence. Oral evidence cannot be admitted to contradict the express terms of this registered document. It is suggested that this document is not an instrument of transfer at all. I do not agree with that. The finding of the want of consideration, although an important fact in this case, was not sufficient to make the learned District Judge, without proceeding to enquire whether the transaction was a real one or not, to leave the case hanging in the air. It has not been found whether this registered document of transfer was or was not a real transaction. All that the Judge has found is that Rs. 20 was not paid. That is obviously not sufficient. The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for the appeal to be re-heard. The plaintiffs-respondents have some grounds of complaint on the question of estoppel which was decided against them in the primary Court. They will be entitled at the re-hearing of the appeal to press that point or any other point open to them that they think fit to press in their interest. Costs will abide the result of the hearing before the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court.

Under the Mitakshara Law in a partition between sons, the step-mother is entitled to a share equal to that of a son. [p. 205, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpore.

Messrs. Shivanandan Rai and Jagobind Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chandra Shekhar Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this case. He brought a suit for partition of the family properties. The family consisted of the plaintiff, his step-brother, the defendant No. 1, and his step-mother, the defendant No. 2. At first only the defendant No. 1, the brother of the plaintiff, was made a party, and, therefore, the plaintiff claimed a half share in the family properties. Subsequently the defendant No. 2, the step-mother, was added, apparently because she also has an interest in the properties and a right to a share on partition. The defendant No. 2 did not appear in the first Court. The defendant No. 1 filed a written statement but did not appear at the date of the hearing of the suit. The Court accordingly passed an ex parte decree in favour of the plaintiff declaring his share to be half in the properties in suit. The defendant No. 2, the step-mother, finding that no share was allotted to her appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge, by his judgment of the 14th February 1917, allowed her equal share with the sons, that is, a one-third share in the family properties. Against this decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended on his behalf that the step mother has no right to a specific share in the family properties on partition but only has a right to be maintained out of them. This contention is wholly untenable.

SUBA RAUT v. MANLA RAUTAIN.

The Mitakshara in Chapter 1, section 7, verse 1, relating to partition of properties clearly says that the wife shall be entitled to participation equally with the sons even when a partition takes place during the lifetime of the father. In section 8 of the same chapter there is an indication in the Mitakshara that all the wives should take equal shares, and, therefore, when a partition takes place after the death of the father among the sons, the mothers and the step-mothers would be entitled to equal shares with the sons. This is based upon verse 1 in Yajnavalkya 23—A which says "let the mother take equal shares with the sons." The word "mother" there includes step-mother. No doubt the Dayabhaga differs from the Mitakshara on this point; the mothers only take a share in the properties along with their own sons and not with the sons of different mothers, vide Dayabhaga, Chapter III, section 1, verses 12 and 13. Upon this text of the Dayabhaga their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hemangini Dasi v. Kedarnath Kundu Chowdhry (1) held that the mothers' share with their own sons and not with the sons of different mothers. That decision, therefore, cannot be authority for the present case which is governed by the Mitakshara Law. Under the Mitakshara Law the authorities in Calcutta and Allahabad appear to have concurred in holding that the mothers have equal shares with the sons, vide the case of Sumrun Thakoor v. Chunder Mun Misser (2) and Dular Koeri v. Dawarkanath Misser (3). The decision in the case of Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (4) is exactly in point, inasmuch as it related to the Mithila School to which the parties in the present case belong. Relying upon the texts of the Mitakshara quoted above and upon Vyvada Chintamani of Vachaspati Misser which is followed in the Mithila School, their Lordships held that "both mothers and step-mothers are equal sharers with the sons."

an authority in the Benares School concurrently with the Mitakshara, has laid down on page 80 (Golab Ch. Sarkar's translations) that all the wives of the father, whether sonless or having sons are entitled to equal shares with the sons, even in partition after the father's demise. Recently in the Allahabad Court in the case of Har Narain v. Bishambhar Nath (5) relying upon the above authorities it was held that in a partition between two sons the step-mother is entitled to a third share. In this case also the partition is sought between two brothers along with the step-mother. We, therefore, think that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the step-mother was entitled equally with the sons to a third share in the properties. The contention of the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant is, therefore, overruled.

It is then contended that the learned District Judge was wrong in giving any decree in favour of the step-mother inasmuch as she did not contest the claim of the plaintiff in the first Court. In the first place, this was a question of law and certainly the fact that the step-mother did not appear or contest the claim of the plaintiff in the first Court would not prevent her from impugning the legality of the decree before the District Judge. In the second place, it appears to me that the first Court was bound to give a decree only to the extent of one-third in favour of the plaintiff upon the plaint itself. The plaint was amended and the name of defendant No. 2, the step-mother, was subsequently added. Upon the plaint, therefore, it was clear that the family consisted of two sons and the step-mother. In declaring the share of the plaintiff in the properties sought to be partitioned the Court was bound to give the plaintiff only a one-third share in the family properties, inasmuch as he could not be entitled to more than that upon the plaint itself. The plaintiff did not aver in the plaint that the defendant No. 2 had given up her share in the properties and that he was, therefore, entitled only to a half share. The defendant No. 2, the step-mother, was, therefore, not bound to contest the plaintiff's claim; she naturally Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 181—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5—Final decree, application for—Limitation, commencement of.

The right to apply to have a decree for sale made absolute arises when the time fixed for payment by that decree has expired or where there has been an appeal, when that appeal is decided, the date of the appellate decree, which finally determines the rights of the parties, being taken to be the starting point of limitation within the meaning of Article 181 of the Limitation Act, if it does not extend the time originally fixed or if the time to fixed has not expired. JUDGMENT.—In a suit filed by the plaintiff appellant for the recovery of money due on a mortgage a preliminary decree for sale was passed on the 30th July 1911, allowing the judgment-debtor time for its payment till the 8th January 1912. The plaintiff was not satisfied with that decree and filed an appeal, claiming that the interest due to him was chargeable on the mortgaged property, but was unsuccessful. An appeal filed by one of the defendants was, however, successful and the decree of the Court of first instance was varied. There was a further appeal to this Court by the plaintiff, which was dismissed on the 19th December 1913. On the plaintiff applying on the 19th December 1916 for a final decree for sale, an objection was raised that his application was barred by time. The Court of first instance disallowed that objection but the lower Appellate Court gave effect to it.

The question involved in this appeal is, whether the limitation for an application for a final decree for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure is to be computed from the date fixed for payment by the decree of the Court of first instance or from the date of the decree of the final Court of Appeal.

If the view taken in Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (1), which was adopted in Jagdish Singh v. Ram Adhin Singh (2), be regarded as correct, the date on which the appellate decree was passed will have to be left out of account. But where a decree is confirmed or varied on appeal, the appellate decree is the only decree which is capable of execution or operative. For the purpose of ascertaining its terms, a reference has sometimes to be made to the decree of the Court of first instance or the decree appealed from; but the decree of the final Court of Appeal, where there has been such an appeal, is the decree in which the decree passed by the Court of first instance or the decree under appeal merges and which is capable of being enforced. In Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (3), where a decree was passed by a District Court for the possession of land with future mesne profits and that decree was reversed by the High Court but restored by the Privy Council, and the question arose whether the decreeholder was entitled to recover mesne profits for more than three years from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the effect of their decree, by which the decree of the District Court was affirmed, was to adopt its terms and to carry on their operation with reference to its own date. In Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council recognised that an application to make absolute a decree for sale could be made within three years from the date of the order of the High Court confirming that decree. In Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jiwan Lal (5) a similar view was taken and the previous decisions bearing on the point were overruled. It was pointed out in that case that Order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure did not contemplate more than one decree absolute for sale. Under Order XXXIV, rule 10, of the Code any costs, incurred after the passing of such a decree, can be taken into account in finally adjusting the amount to be paid to the mortgagee. But the result of the appeal may, however, be to vary, that is, to increase or decrease the amount due to the mortgagee materially; and in that case the final decree for sale may have to be varied or altered to bring it into conformity with the final appellate decree or a fresh decree may have to be prepared in its place. Where the propriety of a decree is challenged on appeal either by the mortgagee or by the judgment-debtor, it is open to the mortgagee to wait till the result of the appeal is known, for it is the decree of the final Court of Appeal, where there has been such an appeal, which declares the rights which each party holds. The right to apply to have a decree made absolute for sale arises when the time fixed for payment by that decree has expired or where there has been an appeal, when that appeal is decided, the date of the appellate decree, which finally determines the rights of the parties, being taken to be the starting point of limitation within the meaning of Article 181 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), if it does not extend the time originally fixed or if time so fixed has not expired. The application made by the plaintiff-appellant to have the decree made absolute is, therefore, clearly within time.

We allow the appeal accordingly and setting aside the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of first instance with costs here and hitherto. The defendant-respondent will bear his own costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Reversioner—Compromise prior to reversion falling in—Widow induced to alter her position to her own detriment—Reversioner, whether can go behind compromise when reversion opens—Estoppel.

R, the widow of the last surviving brother of a joint Hindu family which originally consisted of three brothers, brought a suit for the recovery of the whole family properties against P. and K., the widows of the two predeceased brothers, who both alleged that the brothers died separate, and one L., who claimed the whole estate as the adopted son of P. and her husband, agreeing with R.'s contention that her husband died undivided. The adoption set up by L. was questioned by R. and K. and the division set up by P. and K. was questioned by R. and L. A compromise was entered into, whereby R. consented to take a fourth of the estate absolutely for herself and a fourth absolutely for her only daughter who was then alive, P. and K. each got a fourth absolutely for themselves and L.'s adoption was recognised but he was to take P.'s one-fourth. Subsequently L. got himself registered as the proprietor of P.'s one-fourth share with her consent. On R.'s death, which had been preceded by that of her daughter, L. brought two suits against those who claimed under R. and her daughter and against K. and those who claimed under her claiming the properties respectively in their possession:

Held, (1) that L. had by his part in the compromise induced R. to change her position to her own detriment and to L.'s substantial benefit and that L. was, therefore, estopped from claiming as a reversioner; [p. 211, col. 2; p. 212, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals from decrees, dated the 15th June 1915, of the High Court at Allahabad, made in appeals from decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur. There were two suits, in each of which Lala Kanhai Lal and his brother, Ram Sarup, were the plaintiffs. Lala Kan-hai Lal is now the appellant in these consolidated appeals. Ram Sarup's rights were established and are not now in question; he is not a party to these appeals. In one of these suits Lala Brij Lal and his daughter, Musammatt Ram Kali, were defendants, they are now respondents to one of these appeals. In the other suit Musammatt Kausilla and Lala Sham Lal, who claims through her, were the defendants, they are the respondents to the other of these appeals. In each suit Lala Kanhai Lal claimed as a reversioner to one Bahadur Lal, who died in 1883. Bahadur Lal was a member of a Hindu joint family descended from one Balak Ram. The pedigree of the joint family, so far as it is now material, is briefly as follows:—

Upon the death of Ram Dei, on the 14th May 1912, Lala Kanhai Lal and his brother, Ram Sarup, were the reversioners to Bahadur Lal. The only question which their Lordships have to consider in these appeals is the question whether Lala Kanhai Lal has not been precluded from claiming as reversioner by his having been a party to a compromise which was entered into in 1892. If he is not precluded from claiming as a reversioner, he is entitled to succeed in these appeals.

At the time of his death in 1883 Bahadur Lal was by survivorship the sole owner of the family estate, and on his death his widow, Musammatt Ram Dei, became entitled to that estate for her life, Musammatt Parbati and Musammatt Kausilla being entitled only to maintenance. The title of Musammatt Ram Dei was, however, disputed by Lala Kanhai Lal, Musammatt Parbati and Musammatt Kau- silla. Lala Kanhai Lal set up a claim to the family estate, alleging that he had been adopted by Musammatt Parbati to her deceased husband, Badri Prasad, and was entitled to the whole estate as such adopted son. His case was that there was a custom in the family which enabled a brother to adopt his sister's son and that Musammatt Parbati had received her husband's authority to make the adoption. It is not necessary to consider whether there was any foundation for that case. Musammatt Parbati's case was that the brothers Bahadur Lal, Badri Prasad, and Ganga Ram had separated; that also was the case set up by Musammatt Kausilla. Each of these widows claimed for life one-third of the family estate. Musammatt Parbati also alleged that she had validly adopted Lala Kanhai Lal to her deceased husband, Badri Prasad.

In order to protect her own interests and the interests of her daughter, Musammât Kirpa, who was then living, Musammât Ram Dei brought two suits in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur. The earlier of those suits was brought on the 20th January 1891 against Lala Kanhai Lal and Musammât Parbati, and in that suit Musammât Ram Dei claimed a declaration that the alleged adoption of Lala Kanhai Lal by Musammât Parbati was null and void. That suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the technical objection that the plaint had not been properly verified. From the decree dismissing that suit Musammât Ram Dei appealed to the High Court at Allahabad. The later of those two suits was brought on the 4th February 1892 against Musammât Parbati and Musammât Kausilla, and in it Musammât Ram Dei claimed amongst other reliefs a declaration that her late husband Bahadur Lal had been the owner and in possession of the entire property of the joint family; that after his death she, Musammât Ram Dei, was in possession of and entitled to that property according to Hindu Law; and that Musammât Parbati and Musammât Kausilla had no right other than that of maintenance.

Before the suit of the 4th February 1892 came on for trial, Musammât Ram Dei, Musammât Parbati, Musammât Kausilla, Musammât Kirpa and Lala Kanhai Lal had entered on the 1st August 1892 into the following agreement of compromise:—

"We, Musammât Ram Dei, widow of Bahadur Lal, Musammât Parbati, widow of Badri Prasad, Musammât Kausilla, widow of Ganga Ram, Musammât Kirpa, daughter of the said Bahadur Lal, and Kanhai Lal, the adopted son of the said Musammât Parbati, by caste Agarwal, residents of Muhalla Muzaffarganj, in Shahjahanpur, do declare as follows:—

"Whereas disputes relating to property and 'Imlak' have existed between Musammâts Ram Dei, Parbati and Kausilla and, I, Musammât Kirpa, daughter of Ram Dei, and I, Kanhai Lal, the adopted son of Parbati, are also regarded as claimants, we, the five persons of our free will and accord and in a sound state of body and mind, declare that we have appointed Maharaj Badri Prasad, the general attorney of Musammât Durga Dei, as referee, and he should divide the whole of the property consisting of villages, houses and shops as specified below and his decision as regards the profits for the past years, the villages sold after the death of Bahadur Lal and the cases at present pending in the Civil and Revenue Courts, whatever it may be, will be admitted and accepted by us. There will be no objection or denial on our part. If any of us, the executants, take any objection, it will not be entertainable. The mode of partition of property agreed upon is that with the exception of the 'Thakurdwara' of Musammât Ram Dei, the 'Thakurdwara' of Musammât Parbati, the villages of Bartara, Nagra, Badhipura, the grove situate in Panwari (?) and the 10 biswa share of Simri, Tahsil Pawayan, which have been made a 'Waqf' of for the expenses of the 'Thakurdwara' and for charity, he should make four equal lots of all the villages, the shops, the banking 'Kothis' and the money-lending business, the decrees, bonds and account-books in such a way that each lot may, so far as possible, contain the above things as a whole. After the preparation of the lots, Musammâts Ram Dei, Parbati, Kausilla, and Kirpa may each duly draw one of the lots. After that they should make applications for mutation of names in the revenue department and get (their) names recorded. I, Musammât Kirpa, and I, Kanhai Lal, will have no claim against any sharer as regards this property. Every sharer will be the owner and possessor of (her) property and will have power to make every kind of transfer as a proprietor. The said Maharaj Sahib may come to any decision he pleases as regards the partition and preparation of lots and the settlement of disputes mentioned above and enter all the particulars in detail in the arbitration award by the end of September 1892, and get it registered. All that will be admitted and accepted by us. None of us will deviate from it.

"This agreement has accordingly been executed to stand as evidence.

KANHAI LAL V. BRIJ LAL.

The arbitrator made two awards, dated respectively the 12th and the 13th January 1893. That of the 12th January 1893 was filed in the suit of the 4th February 1892, in which Musammât Parbati and Musammât Kausilla were defendants, and that suit was dismissed as withdrawn by Musammât Ram Dei. The appeal to the High Court, in the suit of the 20th January 1891, was not supported, and was dismissed.

Under the awards of the arbitrator one-fourth of the family property was allotted to Musammât Ram Dei, one-fourth to Musammât Kirpa, one-fourth to Musammât Parbati, and one-fourth to Musammât Kausilla, and they respectively obtained possession of the properties allotted to them. In the award of the 13th January 1893, the arbitrator stated:—

"Kanhai Lal has been adopted by Musammât Parbati, but he has nothing to do with the other Musammats' property as such adopted son. Nor has he now any claim to their property. As regards the matter between Musammât Parbati and Kanhai Lal, it is not necessary to explain his rights in this award. Kanhai Lal's rights in the property comprised in Musammât Parbati's lot are quite safe."

So far as appears by the agreement of compromise and the awards, Lala Kanhai Lal got no share in the family property, but in fact he got the one-fourth share which was allotted to Musammât Parbati, and he further obtained the benefit of having the validity of his adoption by Musammât Parbati left undecided by a Court of Law. On the 22nd August 1898, Musammât Parbati executed in favour of Lala Kanhai Lal a deed of relinquishment of the property which had been allotted to her under the compromise and the award of the 13th January 1893. In that deed she stated:—

"The immoveable property, such as Zemindari, houses and shops detailed as below, belonged to Lala Badri Prasad, the husband of me, the executant. I, the executant, have, with the permission of my husband, adopted to my husband and myself, Lala Kanhai Lal, son of my husband's sister, for the benefit of the soul of my husband in the next world. Kanhai Lal aforesaid has been living with me from the date of the permission to adopt. It is he, who is the absolute owner of the entire property and legal representative of the entire property left by my husband. But the name of me, the executant, has continued to be recorded in the revenue papers against the Zemindari property. I am not the owner thereof. Kanhai Lal aforesaid is the owner of the entire property of my husband. Now I, the executant, do not also want my name to stand recorded in the revenue papers. Therefore, I, of my own free will and accord, without force and coercion, relinquish my claim to the whole of Zemindari property and houses and shops, detailed as below, in favour of Kanhai Lal, adopted son of my husband and myself, and covenant in writing that Kanhai Lal aforesaid is the owner of the entire property detailed below as representative of my husband, Lala Badri Prasad. He has acquired as absolute owner all sorts of powers in respect of the property detailed below. Up to this time my name stood recorded in the papers only fictitiously. Now I do not want that my name should stand recorded in the column of proprietors. My name, which is entered against the whole of the Zemindari property, should be expunged and the name of Kanhai Lal be entered in the papers."

In accordance with that deed of relinquishment, Lala Kanhai Lal obtained mutation of names in his own favour, and he has hitherto enjoyed that share of Musammât Parbati as his own property, and his right to it has not been questioned in either of the present suits. The properties which Lala Kanhai Lal has claimed in these suits as a reversioner to Bahadur Lal are the properties which were allotted in January 1893 to Musammât Ram Dei, Musammât Kirpa, and Musammât Kausilla respectively.

The suits in which these appeals have arisen were not tried by the same Subordinate Judge. In one of these suits the Subordinate Judge held that Lala Kanhai Lal was precluded by his having been a party to the compromise from now claiming as a reversioner. In the other of these suits a different Subordinate Judge decided that Lala Kanhai Lal was as a reversioner not bound by the compromise. The decrees of the Court of the Subordinate

KANHAI LAL v. BRIJ LAL.

Judge were appealed to the High Court, and the appeals were considered by the High Court in one judgment. The High Court decided that Lala Kanhai Lal, having been a party to the agreement of compromise of 1892, and having taken a benefit under that settlement of the dispute, was bound by it and could not go behind it. The result was that Lala Kanhai Lal's suits were dismissed. From the decrees of the High Court made in accordance with that judgment these appeals have been brought.

It has been contended on behalf of Lala Kanhai Lal that the agreement of compromise of 1892 could not deprive him of his right to claim as reversioner unless it is capable of being treated as a conveyance of his right as a reversioner, and that he did not intend in 1892 to convey or assign such right when it might accrue to him. As it now appears, Lala Kanhai Lal was not a reversioner in 1892, and did not become a reversioner until Musammam Ram Dei died in 1912. All the interest which he had in the property of the family in 1892 was the mere possibility of becoming an immediate reversioner in case he should be living when Musammam Ram Dei might die, and when Bahadur Lal's daughter, Musammam Kirpa, might die without a son. It was also contended on his behalf that Lala Kanhai Lal in 1892, whatever his intention may have been, was not in law competent to convey or relinquish any future possible right as a reversioner, and as an authority in support of that contention the decision of the High Court at Bombay in Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein (1) was relied upon. That decision is not in point. There is no question here of a conveyance of, or of an agreement to convey any future right or expectancy, or of an agreement to relinquish any future right or expectancy. The question here is, whether Lala Kanhai Lal did not by his acts in 1892 debar himself from now claiming as a reversioner.

The facts in this case are simple. In 1892 the family was a Hindu joint family to which the ordinary Hindu law applied. All the sons of Balak Ram had died. Ganga Ram had died childless in 1874, and Badri Prasad had died childless in 1877. Bahadur Lal had died sonless in 1883, leaving his widow, Musammam Ram Dei, surviving him. Musammam Ram Dei became, on the death of Bahadur Lal, entitled for life to a Hindu widow's right to the whole of the family property. Lala Kanhai Lal had then no right of any kind to any share in the family property, but he set up a claim to the whole property based on the allegation that he had been validly adopted by Musammam Parbati to her deceased husband, Badri Prasad. If that claim had been substantiated by proof of a valid adoption, Lala Kanhai Lal would have been entitled to the whole family property, and Musammam Ram Dei would have been entitled merely to maintenance. Although as a general rule of Hindu Law a man cannot adopt his sister's son, the claim was a serious one. Lala Kanhai Lal's case was that, according to an Agarwal custom (the family was of the Agarwal caste), which governed the family, a man could lawfully adopt his sister's son, and he alleged that Badri Prasad had given Musammam Parbati authority to make the adoption, and that he, Lala Kanhai Lal, had been validly adopted to Badri Prasad. That Lala Kanhai Lal might have found it difficult or impossible to prove that he had been validly adopted is immaterial. He made the claim; it was a serious one, and it was supported by Musammam Parbati and it must have influenced Musammam Ram Dei, who was induced, doubtless mainly by that claim, to consent to a division of the family property, in which she obtained for herself merely a one fourth share. The claims which were set up by Musammam Parbati and Musammam Kausilla, that the three sons of Balak Ram had separated, must also have influenced Musammam Ram Dei to agree to the compromise of 1892. Lala Kanhai Lal was a party to that compromise. He was one of those whose claims to the family property, or to shares in it, induced Musammam Ram Dei, against her own interests and those of her daughter, Musammam Kirpa, and greatly to her own detriment, to alter her position by agreeing to the compromise, and under that compromise he obtained a substantial benefit, which he has hitherto enjoyed. In their Lordships' opinion he is bound by it, and cannot now claim as a reversioner.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Decree against father—Sale of ancestral property—Sons, whether can object.

A Hindu son is bound by a sale of his share in joint ancestral property held in execution of a decree obtained against his father, even where it is not shown that the debt was incurred by the father for legal necessity. The only exception is where the debt was an immoral one. [p. 213, col. 2.]

In a suit for accounts the defendant obtained an ex parte decree against the plaintiffs' father who was his agent and in execution of that decree brought to sale the joint property of the plaintiffs and their father and purchased it himself.

Held, that the sale was binding on the plaintiffs, inasmuch as the liability of their father was an ordinary civil liability and there was nothing to show that it was immoral. [p. 214, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows: Defendant No. 2 is the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and was the agent of defendant No. 1. A suit for accounts under the Orissa Tenancy Act was brought by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2, in which the defendant No. 2 failed to put in an appearance. The suit was decreed for a sum of Rs. 5,000. The decree-holder, defendant No. 1, thereupon took out execution for this sum against the father, and sold the property in suit and purchased it himself. The plaintiffs now come forward in the present suit with a claim that what was sold was only the right, title and interest of their father and that their share in the ancestral property which is governed by the Mitakshara Law was not affected by the sale. The learned District Judge has allowed their claim so far as the ancestral properties are concerned, and hence this second appeal by defendant No. 1.

Now the law as regards the liability of the sons of a Mitakshara father in respect of a sale held in execution of a decree for their father's debt has been summarised in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) by their Lordships of the Privy Council as follows:

"First. That where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they shew that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted; and, secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they had no notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make inquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings."

These two propositions were considered by Sir John Stanley in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (2) and the learned Chief Justice observes as follows: "The first of these propositions, it will be observed, deals with cases where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt. It deals with cases in which ancestral property has passed out of the family and with no other cases, and the words antecedent debt seem to have been used advisedly. Likewise the second proposition deals with the case of a purchase at an execution sale. Neither proposition touches a case in which a mortgagee of a Hindu father seeks to enforce his mortgage as against the sons."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3) approved of this statement of the law as correct, and emphasised the distinction between a suit for recovery by the sons of their share of the ancestral property sold in execution of a decree for their father's debt and a suit upon a mortgage executed by the father charging the joint property and in which the plaintiff endeavours to obtain a personal decree against the sons by reason of the pious obligation attaching upon them to pay their father's debts. Their Lordships held that so long as the father was living, the effort to affect the sons' share in the property on the ground of pious obligation to pay off their father's debt in respect of a personal debt of the father, and not in respect of a debt incurred in the interest of the family, must fail. But their Lordships nowhere ruled that the liability which empowers a creditor to enforce the payment of a personal debt of a father, and to sell the entire estate of the family for the realization of the said debt, did not exist and that it was absolutely necessary that the sons should be made parties to the suit or to the execution proceedings.

To like effect is the judgment of their Lordships in Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodyot Kumar (4), where their Lordships say that in cases of this kind the substance and not merely the technicalities must be looked at and it must be ascertained what it was that the parties intended to sell and the Court did in fact sell. It is a question of mixed law and fact and there is no provision of law to support the proposition which the learned Vakil for the respondent has urged, namely, that in no case can you sell the share of the sons for a debt incurred by the father and that the sale in the present case passed only the right, title and interest of the father himself.

Now, what is the position here? Here the decree-holder defendant No. 1 brought to sale not the interest of defendant No. 2 alone but that of the sons also and this is the interest which the Court sold at the execution sale. This is clear from the fact that the present plaintiffs were claimants at the execution proceeding but were unsuccessful. There can be no doubt whatsoever that what the Court did in fact sell was not only the interest of the father but that of the sons also. Regarded from this point of view the argument that the debt was not one for legal necessity is not relevant. The question of legal necessity does not affect this case. If there was legal necessity the sons would be obviously bound; but the law is that even if there was no legal necessity the sons would be bound by a sale of their property held in execution of a decree against the father. The only exception is if the plaintiffs succeed in proving that the debt was an immoral debt. This is the only point in the case, and the authorities which have been discussed in Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (5) disclose much divergence of opinion regarding it. Mookerjee, J., in that case observed that this divergence may possibly be reconciled if we recognise the distinction between a criminal offence and a breach of civil duty.

Was the act of defendant No. 2 in the present case in relation to his master such that it constituted a criminal offence? Admittedly no prosecution was instituted. The suit was one for accounts in taken over thereafter by the Court of Wards. In the year 1878 the defendant-respondent in the present case, Thakur Indra Bahadur Singh, brought a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki against the Court of Wards and the two widows of Naipal Singh for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of his right to succeed to the properties left by Naipal Singh. It is said that the two widows had set up a Will purporting to have been executed by Naipal Singh on the 15th of October 1873, and that one or other of them had notified an intention to adopt a son to the deceased Naipal Singh. At the time the suit was brought Indra Bahadur Singh was the nearest male reversioner of Naipal Singh; and if the adoption, which was threatened, had been carried out his right to succeed to Naipal Singh's property, in case he survived both the widows, would have been destroyed. Exhibit No. 5 is a certified copy of the judgment which was passed by the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki in the suit just mentioned, on the 22nd of October 1878. The decree which followed the judgment declared that the Will purporting to have been executed by Naipal Singh on the 15th of October 1873 was void and invalid. It was further declared that Indra Bahadur Singh was the person entitled to succeed to the Paska and Lilar estates on the death of the last surviving widow of Naipal Singh.

The two widows remained in possession. The younger widow Chhoti Thakurain is said to have died about seven years before the present suit was brought. The elder one, Thakurain Iklas Kuar, died on the 10th of May 1911.

On the 2nd of January 1880 Indra Bahadur Singh executed in favour of Thakur Rachhpal Singh, son of Raja Sher Bahadur Singh, the document which forms the basis of the present claim brought by Rachhpal Singh's widow, Thakurain Har Nath Kuar. This document is marked Exhibit I and purports to be a sale-deed of a one-half share in the two estates of Paska and Lilar. In the body of this document a reference is made to the suit which Indra Bahadur Singh had instituted in the year 1878 and which was decided in his favour by the judgment above referred to. After this we have a statement by the executant Indra Bahadur Singh that he had become indebted to Raja Sher Bahadur Singh to the extent of Rs. 20,000. Part of this money, it is stated, was borrowed to meet the costs of the litigation just referred to; the rest of it had been borrowed for the purpose of defraying other expenses and for paying debts. The deed goes on to recite that Indra Bahadur Singh was at the time not in a position to pay this sum on account of his not being able to obtain immediate possession of the estates left by Naipal Singh. It is further stated that Indra Bahadur Singh had borrowed a sum of Rs. 5,000 from Rachhpal Singh, the son of Raja Sher Bahadur Singh, and that consequently the total amount of his indebtedness was Rs. 25,000. It is then recited that by way of satisfaction of this debt the executant sells absolutely a half share in the 39 villages which made up the two estates of Paska and Lilar. Indra Bahadur Singh declared that after the death of the survivor of the two widows, or at whatever time he might obtain possession over these two estates, he would put the vendee at once in proprietary possession of the half share which had been conveyed to him. There was further an undertaking on the part of Indra Bahadur Singh to get the name of Rachhpal Singh recorded in the decree which had been passed in Indra Bahadur Singh's favour on the 27th of October 1878.

Rachhpal Singh having died and Indra Bahadur Singh having succeeded to the possession of these two estates on the death of Musammal Iklas Kuar in the year 1911, the present suit has been brought by the widow of Thakur Rachhpal Singh for enforcement of the agreement contained in this document of the 2nd of January 1880. The plaintiff's claim is that in accordance with this deed of sale executed on the 2nd of January 1880, she is entitled to get possession over a half share in the villages specified in List B attached to the plaint. It was admitted by the plaintiff that while the estates were still under the management of the Court of Wards, 20 out of the 39 villages had been sold for the purpose of discharging debts which were due by Naipal Singh. The suit was, therefore, confined to a half share of 19 villages, which are specified in List B. Coupled with this claim for possession there was a claim for mesne profits and interest amounting to Rs. 41,000 odd. By way of alternative relief the plaintiff prayed that in case the Court should not consider it possible to give her a decree for possession, she should be granted a decree for Rs. 25,000, the principal sum mentioned in the deed of 1880, together with interest amounting to a lac and over three thousand rupees.

The suit was contested by the defendant on a variety of grounds, which are set out in his written statement. He denied in the 9th paragraph of his written statement that at the time of Naipal Singh's death he was indebted to any one. He also denied having borrowed a sum of Rs. 20,000 from Raja Sher Bahadur Singh. He denied further that he borrowed Rs. 5,000 from Thakur Rachhpal Singh. It was admitted that the document in suit had been executed by him, but it was claimed that the deed did not amount to a sale-deed and that it did not operate to transfer any interest to Rachhpal Singh. In paragraphs 17 to 22 of the written statement the defendant set out various allegations describing the circumstances which led to his bringing the suit against the two widows of Naipal Singh. He asserted that he had been instigated to bring this suit by Raja Sher Bahadur Singh, who had been on terms of enmity with Naipal Singh. It was stated in the 22nd paragraph of the written statement that for the purposes of this litigation Sher Bahadur Singh spent a sum of Rs. 2,000. He had, it is stated, undertaken not to make any claim for this money against the defendant, but contrary to this promise after the death of Sher Bahadur Singh, Rachhpal Singh his son insisted on repayment being made. It was further alleged in the 22nd paragraph of the written statement that Rachhpal Singh took advantage of the defendant's helplessness and compelled him to execute the deed now in suit. In the 23rd paragraph of the written statement it was alleged that the deed was executed under undue influence and without consideration. In paragraph 24 the plea was taken that the deed of the 2nd January 1880 was void in law inasmuch as it purported to transfer what was a mere right of expectancy; and in the following paragraph it was stated that as a simple agreement the document could not be enforced. Paragraph 25 raised a plea of limitation, the case for the defendant being that any suit for the refund of consideration was barred by time.

On these pleadings seven issues were raised in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The first issue related to the pleas of undue influence and want of consideration raised by the defendant. On this, the finding of the Court was that the defendant had failed to prove that the deed was without consideration or had been obtained by means of undue influence.

The second issue related to the nature of the terms of the deed. Were they extortionate and unconscionable, and if so, with what result? The Court below found that it was not established that the terms of the agreement were either extortionate or unconscionable.

The third issue raised the question regarding the validity of the transfer which the document purports to make, having regard to the nature of the defendant's interest at the time it was executed. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Indra Bahadur had nothing more than a spes successionis or a right of expectancy and that a transfer of an interest of this kind was void in law.

The fourth issue, which related to the title of the plaintiff to recover possession of the property, was consequently decided against her; as also was the subsidiary issue relating to the claim for mesne profits.

The fifth, sixth and seventh issues related to the alternative relief which had been claimed by the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge disposed of these by finding that any claim for the recovery of the purchase-money was barred by limitation. He relied upon Article 62 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act.

The eighth issue was an issue of law dealing with certain pleas put forward by the plaintiff in replication. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant was not estopped from raising the defences contained in paragraphs 23, 24 and 25 of his written statement.

HAR NATH KUAR v. INDRA BAHADUR SINGH.

The result, therefore, was that the entire claim of the plaintiff was dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff has now come in appeal and the decision of the trial Court is attacked on a number of grounds. The principal question raised is with regard to the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the third issue. It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that the Court below was wrong in holding that the interest which Indra Bahadur Singh purported to transfer by this document of the year 1880 was merely an expectancy. Another plea taken is that, even if it be found that at the time the document was executed Indra Bahadur Singh had nothing but a mere chance of succeeding to the estates of Naipal Singh, he was nevertheless entitled to transfer this interest inasmuch as the agreement was executed prior to the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). These pleas are in reality the backbone of the appellant's case. Another ground has been taken with regard to the plaintiff's claim for a money-decree. It has been argued that the Court below was wrong in deciding the issue of limitation against the plaintiff.

The first question, therefore, for our decision is what was the legal position of the defendant Indra Bahadur Singh with respect to the estate of Thakur Naipal Singh at the time when he executed the document upon which this suit is based. We have already mentioned that the Subordinate Judge has found that Indra Bahadur Singh had nothing more than a spes successionis.

The argument which was put forward in the Court below on behalf of the plaintiff, and which has been repeated here, is that at the time when this agreement was entered into Indra Bahadur Singh had in reality a vested interest in the property which was left by Naipal Singh, an interest which he was competent to transfer. In support of this argument the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred us to the scheme of inheritance which is laid down in section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869). Admittedly the provisions of this section contain the rule of inheritance which applies to the estates which were held by Naipal

Singh at the time of his death. Clause 7 of section 22 lays down the right of the widow of the deceased Taluqdar, or grantee, to succeed to the estate in default of any of the nearer heirs mentioned in the six preceding clauses. Clause 7 provides, moreover, that if there are more widows than one, the estate descends in the first instance upon the widow who was first married to the deceased Taluqdar, or grantee, but for her lifetime only. We are not concerned with clause 8 in the present case, nor with clause 9, for admittedly Thakurain Iklas Kuar was the first married wife of Naipal Singh and survived the junior widow Chhoti Thakurain. Consequently we have it that Iklas Kuar was entitled to the estate of her deceased husband for her lifetime only, and that upon her decease the estate descended to the present defendant Indra Bahadur Singh under the provisions of clause 11. It is pointed out by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the estate which the widow of a Hindu Taluqdar takes under this section is of a different nature to the estate which is enjoyed by a Hindu widow under the ordinary Hindu Law. The section expressly declares that she takes nothing more than a life-estate strictly speaking, and it is also the fact that under section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act the expression "heir" is defined to mean a person who inherits property otherwise than as a widow under the special provisions of this Act; and so we are asked to hold that when Naipal Singh died in the year 1873, there came into existence what is known in English Law as a particular estate in favour of the senior widow, and that the residue of the estate vested in Indra Bahadur Singh who took an interest in it in the nature of a vested remainder. The argument is that as a portion only of the full estate vested in the widow, the remainder must necessarily have vested in Indra Bahadur Singh who was the nearest male collateral relation of Naipal Singh at the time of the latter's death.

With regard to these arguments, which were advanced in the Court below also, we may note here the opinion expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge. He held that a vested interest or a vested remainder could only come into existence under a deed of grant and that there was no such deed in the present case. He was of opinion that the defendant could definitely claim to be the heir of Naipal Singh only after the death of the surviving widow, and in these circumstances he held, in accordance with the principles of English Law, that Indra Bahadur Singh continued to be an heir up till the date of the death of Iklas Kuar and that consequently he had only an expectation of an inheritance and had no estate or interest in the property which was capable of transfer. Referring to the argument based upon the definition of the expression "heir" in section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that that did not really affect the situation. He held that under this definition clause it is only for certain special purposes, that is of bequest and transfer, that the widow is excluded from the category of heirs. He pointed out that the widow's title to succeed her husband's property by inheritance is declared in section 22, and certainly it seems difficult to hold that she can take the estate of her deceased husband under any other title than that of inheritance. The Subordinate Judge referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhai Narindar Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (1) in support of the view that the collateral succession to a Taluqa, which has passed on the death of the last male owner to his widow for her lifetime, does not open until after the widow's decease, or in case a daughter succeeds to the widow, till after the death of the daughter. Fortified by this authority he held that up till the time when Iklas Kuar died Indra Bahadur Singh had nothing more than an expectancy of inheritance. We have come to the conclusion that in this matter the decision of the Court below is correct and ought to be maintained.

The question of the legal position of Indra Bahadur Singh with respect to the estate left by Naipal Singh must be determined with reference to the provisions of section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act. In the first place, we have to notice that the estates held by Naipal Singh being entered in List II the rule is that they must descend to a single heir. According to the scheme of inheritance, which is defined in section 22, there is no descent of the deceased's estate in a case like this until the widow's death. In other words, the single person out of those mentioned in clause 11 of section 22 cannot be ascertained until the time of the widow's death.

We are unable to entertain the argument that on the death of Naipal Singh the property descended so to speak piecemeal, that a life-estate descended to the widow and the residue of the estate vested at once in the defendant Indra Bahadur Singh. There is nothing in the language of section 22 which can be interpreted as showing that simultaneously with the devolution of the life-interest in the estate upon the widow, there descends a vested interest, comprising the residue of the estate, upon any of those who are declared to be the more remote heirs in the scale of succession.

Further we cannot conceive of an interest becoming vested in an unascertained person. It is clear that at the time of Naipal Singh's death Indra Bahadur Singh was not ascertained as the person who was entitled to take immediately after the death of the survivor of the two widows. According to the language of clause 11 the person entitled to the estate, in default of the heirs mentioned in the preceding clauses, is to be ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of the Taluqdar or grantee are subject; that is, in the present case the ordinary Hindu Law. Under that law the right of succession after the death of a Hindu female can only be determined with reference to the state of things existing at the time of the death of the female heir; and this principle has been judicially recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the ruling to which the Subordinate Judge refers in his judgment [Bhai Narindar Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (1)]. We might also refer in this connection to another judgment of the Privy Council relating to the same estate which is reported as Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kasim Husain Khan (2). It has been argued before us by the learned Advocate for the appellant that these judgments of their Lordships lay down no general rule of law relating to succession. It is stated that in the two cases before their Lordships there was no dispute regarding the rule, it being the case of both parties that succession to the collaterals could only open after the death of the female heir. We are of opinion, however, that the ruling of their Lordships is not to be interpreted in the narrow sense contended for by the appellant. It is quite clear from a reference to their Lordships' judgments in both the cases that they had before them the special rules of succession which are contained in section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act. We hold, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge was right in his view that up till the date of Iklas Kuar's death Indra Bahadur was nothing more than an heir with an expectation of succeeding to the estate. In our opinion, it is impossible to hold that at the time when Indra Bahadur Singh executed the deed upon which this suit has been brought he had vested in him any interest in the property left by Thakur Naipal Singh.

We come now to the second part of the argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiff appellant. The Subordinate Judge, having come to the conclusion that Indra Bahadur Singh had nothing more than the interest of an expectant heir at the time of the execution of the deed, held that the transfer which he purported to make was void in law by reason of the provisions of section 6, clause (a), of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The criticism of the learned Counsel for the appellant upon this finding is that as the deed in suit was executed in the year 1880, the transaction could not be affected by anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act which was not enacted till the year 1882. It is strange that this plea was not advanced before the learned Subordinate Judge. We can find no trace of any argument on these lines either in the proceedings or in the judgment of the Court below. We must, however, take notice of the fact that the Transfer of Property Act does not purport to operate retrospectively; and as the learned Counsel for the appellant points out, section 2, clause (c), of the Act saves any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before the Act came into force or any relief in respect of any such right or liability, and so it is argued that the question of the right of the plaintiff to enforce the agreement in suit is not to be determined by a reference to the language of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act. The argument is that even if it be held that all that Indra Bahadur Singh had in the year 1880 was an expectation of succeeding to the estate of Naipal Singh in the event of his outliving the surviving widow, there was at that time no legal prohibition against the transfer of such an expectancy or against the making of an agreement for such a transfer.

On the other hand it has been argued on behalf of the respondent that although the prohibition against the transfer of the chances of an heir succeeding to an estate was first definitely laid down by the Act passed in the year 1882, nevertheless even prior to the passing of this Act the transfer of an expectancy was forbidden by the Hindu Law. A number of cases have been cited to us upon this point, the earliest of which appears to be a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council which is reported as Doeli Chand v. Birj Bookun Lal Awasti (3). In the concluding portion of their judgment their Lordships say (vide page 532 of the report):—"The point on which the lower Court in part proceeded, and which has only been treated as doubtful by the High Court, namely, whether such an interest (that is the interest of a reversionary heir under the Hindu Law) could be the subject of a sale at all, is of general importance, and one which their Lordships, who do not sit here to determine abstract questions of law, would be unwilling to determine in a case in which no decree in favour of the plaintiffs can be passed. They are certainly not prepared to affirm that such an interest can be made the subject of a sale, still less that it can be made the subject of a sale highly speculative, as any such sale must be by a guardian acting or purporting to act on behalf of an infant. The decision of this Board, which has been cited by the Judge of the lower Court, is not precisely in point, but it goes far to show that the principle of English Law which allows a subsequently acquired interest to feed, as it is said, the estoppel does not apply to Hindu conveyances."

The next case which has been cited before us in this connection is the judgment of their Lordships in Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (4). There it was definitely laid down that a reversionary heir under the Hindu Law has no power to sell or mortgage his interest in expectancy. At page 80* of the report it is observed:—"In 1877 neither Achhan Kunwar nor Inayat Singh, even if he had been of age, could by Hindu Law make a disposition of or bind their expectant interests." This case has been frequently followed by the Courts in India. We may refer to the following cases:—Nund Kishore Lal v. Ramee Ram Tewary (5), Manickam Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (6), Hargawan Magan v. Baij Nath Das (7) and Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein (8). There is thus, in our opinion, abundance of authority for the proposition that the transfer by a reversioner of his expectant interest is not permitted by the Hindu Law.

But here again an attempt has been made to withdraw the present case from the purview of these authorities on the ground that Indra Bahadur Singh in the years 1880 was not exactly in the same position as an ordinary reversionary heir under the Hindu Law, expecting to succeed to the estate on the death of the Hindu widow in possession. Stress has again been laid upon the fact that under the scheme of inheritance propounded in section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act the widow of a Talukdar has an interest which is in many respects different from the interest held by a female heir under the ordinary Hindu Law. That no doubt is the case; but does the fact that there is such a difference between the estate of the widow under the special provisions of the Act and the estate of the widow under the ordinary Hindu Law make any difference in the nature of the legal position of the reversionary heir? We have already touched upon this matter in dealing with the first question, namely, whether after the death of Naipal Singh any interest in his property became vested at once in Indra Bahadur Singh. We are unable to see how it can be said that Indra Bahadur Singh during the lives of the two widows had any higher interest than that of the ordinary Hindu reversioner, for, as we have pointed out, it seems clear, both upon the Act and upon authority, that the succession to Naipal Singh's estate did not open until the death of Thakurain Iklas Kuar. While, therefore, it is not correct to say that the transfer of an expectancy, which Indra Bahadur Singh purported to make in the year 1880, was void by reason of the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, it seems to us that upon principle it was void by reason of its being contrary to the provisions of the Hindu Law. Indra Bahadur Singh, at the time the agreement was entered into, was subject to the Hindu Law and his position, so far as we can see, was no different from that of the ordinary reversionary heir. On the authority of Achhan Kunwar's case (4), therefore, we hold that the transfer of the mere spes successionis, which Indra Bahadur Singh had, was prohibited by the Hindu Law and that consequently no interest was transferred to Raghopal Singh under the deed in question.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has laid stress upon a certain passage to be found in the judgment of the Bombay High Court reported as Sumsuddin v. Abdul Husein (8). That was a case in which a Muhammadan lady had in the year 1895 executed a deed in favour of her father by which she purported to release her rights to the share of her father's estate, which would in ordinary course have come to her on her father's death. There the terms of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act were referred to, and it was held that such a release was prohibited by the Statute. The passage to which the appellant's learned Counsel has drawn our particular attention is to be found on page 172* of the report. It reads as follows:—

"Then we come to section 6 which provides that property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by the Act, and the first exception named is the chance of an heir-apparent. But this implies that, but for the exception, the chance of an heir-apparent would be property that might be transferred under the Act."

We are asked to hold that the learned Judge who made these observations intended to convey that it is only by reason of the enactment of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act that the transfer of the chance of an heir-apparent succeeding to the estate has been prohibited by law. Having regard to what is to be found in other passages in the judgment, we can hardly think that the learned Chief Justice intended to lay down the law in this sense, for at page 173* we have a reference to the authority which we have already quoted, namely, the case of Sham Sundar Lal v. Acahan Kunwar (4). The learned Chief Justice points to that ruling as declaring that a Hindu reversioner cannot either dispose of or bind his expectant rights. It was argued before the learned Chief Justice that the opinion expressed in the judgment just mentioned was only a dictum. But Sir Lawrence Jenkins pointed out that it was a dictum of the highest judicial authority and that in at least two later cases effect had been given to the opinion so expressed. It can hardly be said, therefore, that it was intended to lay down that the transfer of an expectancy by a Hindu reversioner only became unlawful for the first time after the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act.

To sum up this part of the case, it appears to us that the proper view to take is that Indra Bahadur Singh in the year 1880 had no right higher than that of a reversionary heir under the Hindu Law and that the transfer of an expectancy which he professed to make in favour of the plaintiff's husband was void, being contrary to the provisions of the Hindu Law.

This finding disposes of the case of the plaintiff-appellant. If it be argued, as it has been argued, that this Court, as a Court of Equity, ought to enforce the agreement entered into between the defendant and Rachhpal Singh on the 2nd of January 1880, the answer is that the principles of equity cannot be invoked for the purpose of enforcing a void agreement. Under the provisions of section 23 of the Contract Act, which was in force at the time this document was executed, every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void, and the section provides inter alia that the consideration of an agreement is unlawful if it is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law. In our opinion this document, viewed as an agreement to transfer in futuro, was a void agreement, and it is impossible for the plaintiff to argue that it should be enforced upon the principle that equity considers that done which ought to be done.

There remains the question of the other relief which the plaintiff sought, namely, relief in the shape of a money decree for one lac and twenty-eight thousand rupees. All that seems necessary to say with regard to this is that a claim for the return of the money with interest is barred by limitation for the reasons given in the judgment of the Court below. The Subordinate Judge applied Article 62 of the Limitation Act, which gives a period of 3 years, running from the date when the money is received, for a suit to recover money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. If there was a failure of consideration in the year 1880 at the time the deed was executed by which the whole agreement was rendered void, then limitation under this Article began to run at the very latest from the date upon which the deed was executed. Article 97 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act does not help the plaintiff-appellant. That Article relates to suits for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails and gives a period of 3 years from the date of the failure; but here there never was any existing consideration in the eye of the law; nor can it be said that there was any failure of consideration within a period of three years before the date of the present suit. For these reasons we have come to the conclusion that this appeal must fail.

We have only to remark before concluding our judgment that the Counsel for the respondent made a feeble attempt to support the judgment of the Court below, on the ground that it was proved that the document in suit was obtained from the defendant-respondent by the exercise of undue influence. The only particulars regarding the undue influence which the defendant put forward in his written statement are to be found in paragraph 22 of that document. There all that is made to appear is that Indra Bahadur Singh was in a helpless condition at the time he executed the deed and that the plaintiff's husband took undue advantage of the circumstance. The only evidence in support of this plea, to which the learned Counsel for the respondent has thought proper to refer us, is to be found in the deposition of the defendant himself who gave evidence in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has given convincing reasons in his judgment for disbelieving the story put forward by Indra Bahadur Singh for the purpose of explaining the circumstances in which this document came to be written. We may say, without further discussion, that we agree entirely with the estimate formed by the Court below of the value of the defendant's evidence. It is not, in our opinion, worthy of credit. We have not been referred to any evidence which would convince us that in the year 1880 Indra Bahadur Singh was in such a helpless condition that he was unable to resist the influence of the plaintiff's husband. He was at the time a man of about 38 years of age, for we find in the copy of the judgment delivered in the suit brought by him in the year 1878 that he was described there as having been 36 years of age at the time the suit was brought. Indra Bahadur Singh, according to his own statement, although he was not in affluent circumstances at this time, was nevertheless able to support himself from the income of certain sir lands which were in his possession. No facts have been brought to our notice from which it could reasonably be inferred that Thakur Rachhpal Singh was in any way in a position to dominate Indra Bahadur Singh's Will. As for the argument that on the face of it the terms of the agreement were harsh and unconscionable, we are not prepared to say that they can necessarily be characterized in this language. It is true that the property which Indra Bahadur Singh purported to convey was of considerable value. On the other hand he had received a substantial sum of money from Sher Bahadur Singh and his son Rachhpal Singh and his chances of coming into possession of Naipal Singh's estate were somewhat remote, considering the fact that both the widows left by Naipal Singh were young at the time of his death. As it turned out, Indra Bahadur Singh had to wait 38 years before he was able to enter upon possession of the estate left by Naipal Singh. Without discussing this question at greater length, we are content to say that we think the finding of the Court below upon the issue relating to undue influence is correct.

For the reasons given above the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

GANGA v. KANHAI LAL.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 29th May 1916.

Mr. Pannu Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal. The facts of the case are not in dispute. One Tika Ram was the owner of the property in respect of which this suit has been brought. He had a wife Musammatt Jhunia, two sons and two daughters. His two sons predeceased him and one of them left a widow Musammatt Ganga. Tika Ram died and his wife Musammatt Jhunia survived him. She died some 16 years before the present suit was brought. On her death two daughters Musammatt Dhanno and Musammatt Jethi were in law entitled to take the property. However, Musammatt Ganga took possession and obtained mutation of names in her own favour and admittedly has been in possession ever since. Neither Musammatt Dhanno nor Musammatt Jethi apparently opposed her. Musammatt Jethi died some eight years before suit leaving the three plaintiffs, her sons. Musammatt Dhanno is still alive. On the 6th of April 1915, Musammatt Ganga made a Will, bequeathing this property, as if it were her own, to the defendants Khachar Mal and Cheda Lal. The plaintiffs have brought the present suit. They allege collusion between Musammatt Dhanno and Musammatt Ganga. They pointed out that Musammatt Dhanno had allowed Musammatt Ganga to acquire title by prescription as against her, Musammatt Dhanno. They claimed that they were entitled to take possession on behalf of Musammatt Dhanno and to manage for her. They sought not only to recover possession of the property, but they also asked for a declaration which is relief A in their plaint. That runs as follows:—"On establishment of the plaintiffs' right it may be declared that the name of the defendant first party stands recorded against the property given below without any right, and that she has no adverse or proprietary right to the property aforesaid, nor has she any right to make the Will dated the 6th of April 1915." The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration that they are the owners of the property in suit as from the death of Musammatt Dhanno and that as against them, Musammatt Ganga's possession is not and cannot become adverse or proprietary and the Will of the 6th of April 1915 made by her is void and unenforceable. An examination of the lower Appellate Court's decree will show that this was not the declaration which was actually granted in the decree. In that decree it was declared that the plaintiffs have been in possession of the property in dispute since Musammatt Dhanno's death (a fact that nobody has asserted at any time, Musammatt Dhanno being still alive), secondly, that the possession of Musammatt Ganga neither is nor can be adverse or proprietary as against the plaintiffs, and that the Will dated the 6th of April 1915 executed by Musammatt Ganga is void and ineffectual. This is followed by an order that Musammatt Ganga should bear her own costs. This decree has been signed by the Judge and the Pleaders for the parties as well as by the Munsarim of the Court below. It is quite clear on the facts that the plaintiffs ought not in these circumstances to receive any declaration whatsoever. It is an absurdity to declare that the plaintiffs will be the owners of the property after the death of Musammatt Dhanno. It is impossible to predict that they will be alive at the time of her death, and no such declaration can or ought to be granted. As regards the declaration that Musammatt Ganga's possession is not and cannot become adverse as against the plaintiffs, there is no need for any such declaration at all. It is a question of law, which has been repeatedly decided, that possession taken by a trespasser during the lifetime of a Hindu widow or Hindu female with a life-interest is not adverse as against the reversioners until after the death of the widow; but the Courts in this country do not grant declarations on points of law simply for the convenience of parties. Thirdly, as regards the Will executed by Musammatt Ganga, the declaration in respect of it is a declaration which ought not to be granted. We would refer to the decision in the case of Umrao Kunwar v. Badri (1) and also to the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (2). We do not think it is necessary on this branch of the case to make any further observations. It is obvious that the declaration which the Court below sought to grant, ought not to be given any more than the absurd declaration which was entered in the decree. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in all Courts.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The facts relevant to the decision of this case are as follows:

In 1884 the plaintiffs, with other co-sharers who were no parties to the two cases before us, took a usufructuary mortgage of 42 bighas of land for a consideration of Rs. 2,372 and between that date and 1891 advanced sums amounting to Rs. 1,084 on simple mortgages on the 16 annas of the village. On the 30th July 1897 one Jakhar Mian took a second mortgage upon the 16 annas of the village and subsequently brought a suit and made the present plaintiffs parties to that suit, on the ground that they were purchasers of a part of the mortgaged property, and praying that the property might be sold subject to the plaintiffs' prior mortgage. The purchase referred to in this plaint was made on the 1st April 1898, and by that purchase the several mortgagees took each to themselves a definite share in the village on a consideration of a definite sum of money admitted by the mortgagor to be due at that date on that part of the property transferred to each of the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif was of opinion that this splitting up of the mortgage, the conversion of bighas into annas and the reduction of the property, 16 annas, to the property sold, approximately 6 annas resulted, in a transaction not covered by section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act and in addition relied on the oral statement made by the plaintiff himself to the effect that the lien on the mortgaged property was destroyed by the sales. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the matter could not be open to question, for the reason that by virtue of the decree made in Jakhar Mian's suit upon his mortgage it was res judicata that the plaintiffs' lien still subsisted upon the property. The auction-purchaser at Jakhar Mian's execution of his mortgage decree appeals against the order of the District Judge, on the ground, firstly, that the decision of the learned District Judge upon the question of res judicata was wrong and secondly, on the ground that the Munsif's decision upon the question of the effect of section 101 was right. It is settled law that property passing in execution of a mortgage decree is depend.

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

ent upon the terms of the plaint. In the plaint in the suit of Jakhar Mian and here the learned Munsif had made an error, it was clearly stated that the plaintiffs now before us were purchasers of a part of the mortgaged property. The learned Munsif says that the plaint in the former suit does not show that Jakhar Mian and others had any knowledge of the plaintiffs' purchases. The learned Munsif is wrong. Obviously the present plaintiffs would not have been described as purchasers in that suit if Jakhar Mian had not been fully aware of the fact that they were no longer mortgagees but had made a purchase of the property in extinction of the mortgages themselves; and having regard to the frame of the relief sought in the suit upon the mortgage, I am of opinion that the present defendants cannot contest the lien actually imposed upon the property in the plaint itself. The plaint having asked for the sale of the property subject to Jakhar Mian's lien, the auction-purchaser could not take it free of that lien. The only question, therefore, to decide is that of the account to be made. There is no definite ground of appeal upon the manner of making up the account in the decree by the learned District Judge. It was suggested only that credit should be given to the defendant of the profits made from the property since the entry of the plaintiffs into possession. This suggestion is based on section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act. This section is not applicable to the circumstances. The mortgage is in fact dead and from the date of the purchase the plaintiffs were no longer mortgagees. The lien surviving under section 101 survives intact. The defendants were required to redeem at the sums actually due at the time of the plaintiffs' purchase. Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal has shown us an account from which we are satisfied that this liability had been accurately estimated in the deeds of sale, and nothing has been suggested on the other side to show this account to be inaccurate. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Courts, J.—I agree.

Per Stuart, A. J. C.—Although the practice of begetting a putrika-putra son has fallen into disuse, it is nevertheless recognised by the Mitakshara Law. [p. 240, col. 1.]

Where a person succeeding to a taluka under the provisions of section 22, clause 4 of the Oudh Estates Act, dies issueless and intestate, the taluka goes to his heirs, and not to those of his maternal grandfather. [p. 230, col. 1.]

Where a witness, on being asked if he has had an interview with a particular person and what the purport of that interview was, replies that he has had such an interview and had noted the purport of it at the time in a written memorandum, and produces that memorandum, the memorandum is admissible in evidence. [p. 243, col. 1.]

In view of the provisions of sections 123 and 124 of the Evidence Act, no Court of Justice is entitled to call for and examine the secret archives of the State in order to satisfy itself of their confidential nature. [p. 248, col. 1.]

A Will duly executed is not to be treated as revoked, either wholly or partially, by a Will which is not forthcoming, unless it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence that the later Will contained either words of revocation, or dispositions so inconsistent with the dispositions of the earlier Will that the two cannot stand together. It is not enough to show that the Will which is not forthcoming differed from the earlier Will, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consisted. [p. 248, col. 2; p. 249, col. 1.]

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Where under a Will a talukdar gave to his second wife in supersession of his first wife a life-estate in the taluka and a power to adopt a son, and further stipulated that the adopted son would after her death succeed as full proprietor in the manner contemplated by section 22, clause 8, of the Oudh Estates Act, and the second wife then adopted a son:

Held, (1) that "clause 8" in the Will was merely a clerical error "for clause 5"; [p. 250, col. 2.]

(2) that the adoption was valid, inasmuch as the talukdar could give to his second wife the power to adopt a son irrespective of the Will and as the intentions of the talukdar under the Will were substantially carried out, for the estate taken by the adopted son retained the characteristics of a taluka. [p. 251, col. 2.]

An adoption under the provisions of section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act is merely a selection which need not be according to the conditions and the restrictions found in the personal law applicable to the person making the adoption. [p. 252, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law an adoption is not vitiated by the payment of a price for an adopted son [p. 255, cols. 1 & 2.]

A male Hindu under the Mitakshara Law can only change his gotra on adoption. [p. 235, col. 2.]

Per Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.—According to the Hindu Law, a son affiliated in the putrika-putra form is a valid substitute for a son. The ease with which a son could be obtained by adoption has had the effect in the course of time of rendering affiliation in the form of putrika-putra more or less uncommon, but it has by no means become obsolete and effect cannot legitimately be refused to an affiliation in the putrika-putra form if it is made. [p. 253, col. 2; p. 264, col. 1.]

The succession to a person, obtaining a taluka under the provisions of section 22, clause 4, of the Oudh Estates Act, and dying intestate, goes, in the absence of any male lineal descendant, to the line of the person who affiliated him and treated him in all respects as a son, and not to his natural line. [p. 264, col. 2.]

A Will duly executed cannot be treated as revoked, either wholly or in part, by a Will which is not forthcoming, and the contents of which cannot be definitely ascertained. It is not enough to show that the Will which is not forthcoming differs from the earlier one, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consists. [p. 269, col. 2.]

The supply of clothes or ornaments to the parents of the boy to be adopted or the payment of money therefor in anticipation of the adoption cannot invalidate the adoption or be taken to indicate that it was made from sinful or improper motives. [p. 270, col. 2.]

The performance of requisite ceremonies for adoption can be dispensed with, if the adoptive father and the adopted boy belong to the same gotra. [p. 271, col. 1.]

Where the junior wife of a talukdar validly adopted a son in pursuance of a Will made by the talukdar, under which the latter bestowed a life-estate upon her and gave her the power to adopt a son and further directed that the adopted son would take possession of the taluka only after her death, under the provisions of section 22, clause 8 of the Oudh Estates Act:

Held, that the adoption was good, as it did effectuate the intention of the talukdar as expressed in his Will and as the taluka could not lose its character of impartibility in the hands of the adopted son [p. 272, col. 2.]

(Case-law on all points discussed)

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

STUART, A. J. C.—This appeal relates to the succession to the taluka of Ajudhia. The nucleus of the property comprised in this taluka was acquired by Raja Bakhtawar Singh before the annexation of Oudh. He was the eldest of five brothers named Bakhtawar Singh, Shiva Din Singh, Darshan Singh, Incha Ram and Debi Prasad. Their father Purandar Ram was not a man of eminence, and there was no estate in the family, until this acquisition was made by Bakhtawar Singh. Raja Bakhtawar Singh died in 1855. He was succeeded by his nephew Hanuman Singh, better known as Man Singh, the youngest of the three sons of Darshan Singh, brother of Bakhtawar Singh. The names of the three sons were Ramadhin, Raghubir Dayal and Man Singh. The taluka was then known as the Mahdauna taluka. The name was subsequently changed to that of Ajudhia. The estate was held by Man Singh after annexation, and re-conferred on him in 1858 after confiscation: it was then considerably augmented. Man Singh made a Will on the 22nd April 1864, under the terms of which he devised his estate to his wife Maharani Subhao Kuar with power to nominate a successor. Man Singh was raised to the dignity of a Knight Commander of the Star of India in 1869. He died on the 11th October 1870, having attained the position of one of the most considerable land-holders of Oudh. His nearest relatives at the time of his decease were the Maharani Subhao Kuar, a daughter Brij Raj Kuar, who was married to Narsingh Narain Singh, and Pratap Narain Singh son of Brij Raj Kuar. Maharani Subhao Kuar succeeded to the estate under the terms of the Will. On 16th August 1872 she executed a document nominating as her successor Triloki Nath, son of Raghubir Dayal brother of Man Singh. On the 21st November 1872 Pratap Narain Singh, who was then of the age of 17 years, instituted a suit through his mother, who described herself as his sister and guardian, in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad. He claimed in this suit declaration of title to the taluka. The plaint (Exhibit 1) asserted that the execution of the Will of the 22nd April 1864 had been obtained by undue pressure exercised by Government officials, that the Will in question had been revoked by Sir Man Singh, and that Sir Man Singh had died intestate. It continued that Pratap Narain Singh had been selected in 1837 at the age of 12 as a successor by Sir Man Singh, that his gotra had in the same year been changed from that of his natural father to that of Sir Man Singh, that he had been treated by Sir Man Singh in all respects as his own son, and was thus entitled to succeed to the estate under the provisions of clause 4, section 22, Act I of 1869. It appears from certified copies of certain proceedings in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner (Exhibits A-15 and A-16) and from the judgment itself (Exhibit A-12) that in the course of hearing a plea, which had not been asserted in the plaint to the effect that Pratap Narain Singh was an adopted son of Sir Man Singh, was first asserted and then abandoned. Reliance was placed in support of the plaintiff's case on the evidence of a Mr. Carnegie, who deposed to an oral revocation of the Will by Sir Man Singh. Mr. King, the Deputy Commissioner, dismissed the suit on the 28th July 1873, finding that the Will was a valid document and that Mr. Carnegie's evidence taken with the other evidence was not sufficient to establish that revocation had taken place. He found that Pratap Narain Singh had been treated in all respects as a son by Sir Man Singh. An appeal was filed to the Court of Mr. Capper, Commissioner of Fyzabad. Mr. Capper found on the 24th December 1873 (judgment Exhibit A-13) that the Will was a valid document which had not been revoked, and that Pratap Narain Singh had not been treated in all respects as a son within the meaning of clause 4, section 22, Act I of 1869. Pratap Narain Singh appealed to their Lordships of the Privy Council. They decided in 1877 [Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Koor (1)] that Mr. Carnegie was a reliable witness to the fact that Sir Man Singh revoked orally the Will of 1864, that such a Will of a Hindu could be revoked by parol, and that the testamentary disposition had thus no effect. They held, that Pratap Narain Singh had been treated in all respects as a son by Sir Man Singh and was entitled to succeed under the provisions of clause 4, section 22, Act I of 1869. They declared Pratap Narain Singh to be entitled to the taluka of Ajudhia, but not to the personal or non-talukdari property of Sir Man Singh. Pratap Narain Singh obtained possession of the estate from the Court of Wards, who were in charge of it, on the strength of the declaratory decree in his favour. In 1878 Triloki Nath petitioned their Lordships of the Privy Council to re-hear the appeal. They dismissed his petition [Pertab Narain Singh v. Subhao Koor (2)] but permitted him, if he so desired, to open by suit in India the question whether he had been properly represented in the previous litigation in the Indian Courts. Triloki Nath then instituted fresh proceedings on 3rd June 1879 in the Court of the Additional Judge, Fyzabad, against Pratap Narain Singh, to have declared his right to the taluka in virtue of his having been appointed under a power of appointment given by the Will of 1864. The Court of first instance held that Triloki Nath had not been made a party to the former suit or represented in it, and that he was not bound by the proceedings of 1877 in regard to the question of revocation of the Will of 1864. The trial Judge found, however, that that Will had been revoked. Triloki Nath appealed to the Judicial Commissioner. The Judicial Commissioner held that the Maharaja's estate was not so completely represented by the widow in the former suit that Triloki Nath was bound by the decisions against her. He was of opinion that the Maharani divested her estate by the execution of the instrument appointing Triloki Nath in 1872. He found that Triloki Nath took as successor of the Maharaja, not of the widow, and that his interests vested on the 16th August 1872. He found further that the Will of the Maharaja had not been revoked. Pratap Narain Singh appealed to their Lordships of the Privy Council, who decided in July 1884 [Pertab Narain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (3)] that their previous order was binding on Triloki Nath. They decreed the appeal and dismissed the suit. Before their Lordships had decided the appeal in Triloki Nath's previous suit, Triloki Nath had filed another suit on the 15th August 1882 in the Court of the District Judge of Fyzabad for possession of the estate. The District Judge decreed the suit on 25th September 1882. An appeal was filed to the Judicial Commissioner on the 8th October 1882. The latter deferred decision till receipt of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the previous case. On receipt of that decision he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the 26th November 1884. An appeal was filed to their Lordships of the Privy Council, which was dismissed [Triloki Nath Singh v. Pertab Narain Singh (4)]. In their decision their Lordships interpreted their previous order of 1877 in certain particulars. At page 814 they say with regard to their previous order, "Their Lordships, therefore, merely declared Pratab Narain Singh's title to the taluks and whatever descended under Act I of 1869. As to other property which was not included in that Act, Pratab Narain would not have been the heir to the Maharaja during the lifetime of the widow. She would have taken the widow's estate in all property except that which was governed by Act I of 1869."

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Raja Pratap Narain Singh remained in possession of the taluka till his death. Like his predecessor, he attained a high position in Oudh. He was first created a Maharaja, and subsequently raised to the dignity of a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. He died on the 9th November 1906. He had married Maharani Suraj Kumari in 1868, and is stated by the defendants in these proceedings to have married Maharani Jagdamba Devi in 1888. The latter was aged between 10 and 11 on the date of her marriage. He had no issue by either wife. He executed a Will on the 17th July 1891, which was registered on the 20th July 1891. After his death he was succeeded by the junior Maharani, Jagdamba Devi. The estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards. On the 12th February 1909 Maharani Jagdamba Devi adopted as successor under the terms of the Will of 1891 Dukh Haran Nath Singh son of Adika Nath, a descendant of Incha Ram who was a younger brother of Darshan Singh.

On the 11th February 1915 Tribhawan Nath Singh son of Kashi Nath Singh, son of Ramadhin the eldest brother of Sir Man Singh, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, against Maharani Jagdamba Devi, Dukh Haran Nath Singh, the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad as in charge of the estate under the Court of Wards, and Maharani Suraj Kumari. It was alleged in the plaint that the Will of 17th July 1891 had been executed by Sir Pratap Narain Singh under undue influence exercised upon him by Maharani Jagdamba Devi, that it had been revoked, and that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was not the legally wedded wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. It was further alleged that that lady had been guilty of acts of unchastity both during the lifetime of Sir Pratap Narain Singh and after his death and that she was, therefore, incapable of taking benefit or exercising a power of adoption under the terms of the Will. It was further alleged that in no circumstances was the adoption of Dukh Haran Nath Singh valid, as (1) it had been made under undue influence, as (2) Maharani Jagdamba Devi, having not been legally married to Sir Pratap Narain Singh and also having been unchaste both during the lifetime and after the death of Sir Pratap Narain Singh, had not the power to adopt under the provisions of the Mitakshara, as (3) Dukh Haran Nath Singh had been purchased from his natural father, as (4) Dukh Haran Nath Singh's natural mother was of the gotra of Narsingh Narain Singh, as (5) Adika Nath was an outcaste, and as (6) the ceremony of adoption had not been properly performed. It was further alleged that the senior Maharani had been guilty of acts of unchastity during the Maharaja's lifetime. The conclusion drawn was that, Sir Pratap Narain Singh having died intestate, the senior Maharani being excluded from inheritance by her unchastity, and the junior Maharani having no title as she was not the legally wedded wife of the Maharaja, and even if she were the legally wedded wife, being excluded from inheritance by her unchastity, the plaintiff as son of Kashi Nath Singh, son of Ramadhin, in absence of all heirs under clauses 1 to 10, was entitled to succeed as heir under clause 11 to all the immovable and moveable properties of the estate and mesne profits, and in the alternative to a declaration that the Will and adoption were void as against him.

The defence was a denial of practically every allegation in the plaint. It was set up that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was the legally married wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh, that neither the senior Maharani nor she had ever been unchaste, that the Will of the 17th July 1891 had been duly and validly executed by Sir Pratap Narain Singh unaffected by undue influence, that it had never been revoked and that it had remained in force at the time of his death. It was further set up that it conferred a legal power of adoption on Maharani Jagdamba Devi, which she had legally exercised by making a valid adoption of Dukh Haran Nath Singh. It was further set up that the claim for moveable property was barred by limitation. The defendants asserted in addition that the plaintiff would not have title, even if Sir Pratap Narain Singh had died intestate, as the succession would have then passed to the family of Narsingh Narain Singh. In replication, the plaintiff asserted that the defendants were estopped from setting up the last plea.

The suit was transferred for hearing to Mr Jagat Narayan, Additional Judge, District Fyzabad. It was decided by him on the 19th October 1916. He found in favour of the Will and the adoption and against the plaintiff's title. He found the allegations against the moral character of the two ladies to be baseless calumnies. He found in favour of the plea that the claim for moveable property was barred by limitation. He, therefore, dismissed the suit. The present appeal is filed against his decree. Practically every point taken in the trial Court is re-asserted by the plaintiff in his grounds of appeal.

The appellant objected to the defendants' disputing his title to succeed on a plea that they were estopped from so doing. His case on this point was as follows: He alleged that, directly after the death of Sir Man Singh, Ramadhin had instructed a Pleader to file a suit for possession of the estate, that Narsingh Narain Singh then brought Pratap Narain Singh to Ramadhin, that Pratap Narain Singh fell at the feet of Ramadhin and protested that he was the putrika-putra son of Man Singh, and that Ramadhin recognizing the sacred nature of Pratap Narain Singh's relationship thereupon abstained from instituting proceedings. P. W. No. 101 Sheo Charan Lal was the only witness who deposed to the truth of this story. The learned trial Judge has discussed the value of this plea and the veracity of this witness at pp. 202 to 207 of the judgment.

Sir Man Singh died in 1870. He was succeeded by his widow. Pratap Narain Singh did not institute a suit till the end of 1872, and, when he instituted it, he did not assert a title as putrika-putra. The witness Sheo Charan Lal is, as the learned trial Judge found, an unreliable witness. If it were worth the trouble, the reasons for rejecting this plea could be largely increased. I reject it.

The appellant had first to establish his title to succeed Sir Pratap Narain Singh if the provisions of the Will were set aside. Sir Pratap Narain Singh having succeeded Sir Man Singh as his heir under the provisions of clause 4, section 22, Act I of 1869, the rule of succession is found in the same section. Clauses 1 to 10 clearly confer no right on the appellant who comes, if at all, under the provisions of clause 11. According to the rule of the Mitakshara Law which would govern the case in absence of special circumstances he cannot succeed. It is not alleged and cannot be suggested that Sir Pratap Narain Singh was the adopted son of Sir Man Singh, and Sir Pratap Narain Singh would ordinarily have been succeeded in event of intestacy and failure of heirs under the first ten clauses by the agnates of the family of his father Narsingh Narain Singh. The appellant, recognizing this obstacle, endeavoured to establish his title by an assertion in the plaint that the mother of Sir Pratap Narain Singh was specially appointed, under the practice of constituting in the person of a daughter's son a putrika-putra, to bear Sir Man Singh such a son and that thus the heirs to Sir Pratap Narain Singh under clause 11 were the agnates of Sir Man Singh's family. He subsequently raised a plea in argument, which was not taken in the plaint, that Sir Pratap Narain Singh should be succeeded in event of intestacy by the agnates of the family of Sir Man Singh under clause 11, owing to the circumstance that Sir Pratap Narain Singh had succeeded under the provisions of clause 4.

The practice of appointing a daughter, so that she can bear a son, who will be treated as her father's son, is recognized by the Mitakshara Law. The practice has so far fallen into disuse that only one instance can be found in reported cases, in which a daughter has been so appointed under the Mitakshara Law. This case will be found reported as Kumaran v. Narayanan (5). There such an appointment of a daughter in Malabar was recognized by the Courts. The disuse of the practice has been commented on in Nursing Narain v. Bhuttun Loll (6), Thakoor Jeelmath Singh v. Court of Wards (7) and Sri Raja Venkata Narasimha Appa Row Bahadur v. Sri Rajah Suraneni Venkata Purushothama Jaganadha Gopala Row Bahadur (8). It has not, however, been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a daughter cannot be so appointed and the law on the point never having been abrogated we should be bound to apply it, if it were established that the mother of Sir Pratap Narain Singh had been so appointed by Sir Man Singh.

The law is contained in a passage in the Mitakshara which is quoted in various text books—

"The son of an appointed daughter is equal to him; that is, equal to the legitimate son. The term signifies son of a daughter. Accordingly he is equal to the legitimate son; as described by Vasishtha: 'This damsel, who has no brother, I will give unto thee, decked with ornaments: the son, who may be born of her, shall be my son.' Or that term may signify a daughter becoming by special appointment a son. Still she is only similar to a legitimate son, for she derives more from the mother than from the father. Accordingly she is mentioned by Vasishtha as a son, but as third in rank: 'The appointed daughter is considered to be the third description of sons.'"

Commentary of Hemadri "The putrika-putra is of four descriptions: The first is the daughter appointed to be a son. She is so by a stipulation to that effect. The next is her son. He obtains of course the name of 'son of an appointed daughter,' without any compact. This distinction, however, occurs: he is not in place of a son, but in place of a son's son, and is a daughter's son. Accordingly he is described as a daughter's son in the text of Sankha and Likhita: 'An appointed daughter is like unto a son; as Prachetasa has declared: her offspring is termed son of an appointed daughter, he offers funeral oblations to the maternal grandfathers and to the paternal grandsires. There is no difference between a son's son and a daughter's son, in respect of benefits conferred.' The third description of son of an appointed daughter is the child born of a daughter, who was given in marriage with an express stipulation in this form; 'The child who shall be born of her, shall be mine for the purpose of performing my obsequies.' He appertains to his maternal grandfather as an adopted son. The fourth is a child born of a daughter who was given in marriage with a stipulation in this form: 'The child, who shall be born of her, shall perform the obsequies of both.' He belongs, as a son, both to his natural grandfather and to his maternal grandfather. But, in the case where she was in thought selected for an appointed daughter, she is 'so without a compact, and merely by an act of the mind'—Ghose's Principles of Hindu Law, Commentaries, Volume II, first edition, pages 130 and 131.

The law presents no difficulties. The appellant seems to assert that Sir Pratap Narain Singh was of the third or fourth description of sons. That is his main contention, although he is ready to accept any view of the law that could suit his case. The last sentence of the commentary of Hemadri can obviously only be applied in case where there is distinct evidence of the act of mind of the father.

The position of the appellant with regard to this plea is as follows:—In his written statements of claim made to the Deputy Commissioners of Fyzabad and Gonda [Exhibit A-129 and Exhibit A-129 (a)] he did not assert that Musammatt Brij Raj Kuar had been appointed to bear a putrika-putra son to her father. In his evidence he made a disingenuous attempt (which the learned trial Judge has found to be false) to explain this omission. In his plaint he asserted that Musammatt Brij Raj Kuar had been married under the putri karan form and that for this reason Sir Pratap Narain Singh was born a putrika-putra and had, therefore, been treated as a son. In the evidence he carried the matter further. He endeavoured to prove an appointment before marriage as well as marriage in the form, and relied on further evidence of conduct from which he endeavoured to establish a presumption that such an appointment must have taken place. He has called evidence to prove an allegation that Sir Man Singh in the year 1851, after obtaining the permission of Bakhtawar Singh, decided to appoint his daughter to bear him a putrika-putra son, that he sought a husband who would agree to marry her in the putri-karan form, that Narsingh Narain Singh agreed and married her in this form, and that when she bore Sir Pratap Narain Singh, the latter was considered from his birth to be the putrika-putra son of Man Singh.

In 1851 Man Singh was a man of 31 years of age. He had married twice. His first wife had borne him Brij Raj Kuar in 1839 or 1840. That wife had died. His second wife had borne him a daughter in 1851. That daughter had died. Man Singh was in the prime of life. His second wife had shown her capacity to bear children. He would ordinarily have had every hope of begetting male offspring. What reason then could he have had to be the only person in Oudh known to history who employed a practice by which he set aside his daughter to bear him a male heir? The answer is supplied by P. W. No. 77 Bandhan. This witness has deposed that, after the death of his second daughter, Man Singh went to Bakhtawar Singh and stated that he had expected a son to continue his line, that no son had been born to him, that his daughter was dead and that he was helpless, that Bakhtawar Singh then consulted pandits who examined Man Singh's horoscope and declared that he would never beget a son, that Man Singh then sought Bakhtawar Singh's permission to marry Brij Raj Kuar by the putri-karan ceremony, and that Bakhtawar Singh agreed. P. W. No. 11 Ganesh, P. W. No. 72 Ram Sarup, P. W. No. 8 Bindeshari, P. W. No. 95 Brij Lal and P. W. No. 98 Mahipat Singh gave direct evidence upon the point. Ganesh declared that his father was one of the emissaries sent by Man Singh to procure a bridegroom. Ram Sarup said that he was a member of the wedding party and was told by his father that the ceremony was in the putri-karan form, though he did not himself witness the ceremony. Bindeshari swore that Narsingh Narain Singh agreed in his presence that his first born son should be putrika-putra of Man Singh. Brij Lal gave evidence similar to that of Ram Sarup. Mahipat Singh deposed that he saw the marriage celebrated in the putri-karan form. The learned trial Judge disbelieved all these witnesses. He has given his reasons for so doing at length, except in the case of LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FIZ. BAD.

Ram Sarup and Mahipat Singh. We are informed by the Counsel for the respondents that the reason why the trial Judge did not discuss the evidence of Mahipat Singh was because the plaintiff's Counsel in the lower Court laid no stress upon the evidence of that witness. We have, however, been asked by the Counsel in appeal to arrive at a finding as to the value of this witness also, and I shall proceed to do so in due course.

The reasons of the learned trial Judge for disbelieving these witnesses are in some instances more weighty than in others. More important than his reasoning is the fact that he disbelieved them. The reasons may be varied or supplemented. Bandhan appears an absolute impostor. He has asserted that he was the intimate and favourite of Raja Bakhtawar Singh, one of the most influential noblemen of the King's Court. Thence, according to his own account, he has sunk to the position of a drug-sodden beggar. I disbelieve the account of his past. His story, that Man Singh abandoned all hopes of male posterity, because certain pandits pronounced against them after consulting his horoscope, is patently ridiculous. I am not satisfied that a man in the subordinate position held by the father of Ganesh would have been employed to seek a suitable bridegroom for the daughter of Man Singh. Ram Sarup appears an absolutely unreliable witness. His account as to how he came to give evidence is clearly untruthful. I need add nothing to the criticisms of the trial Judge on the evidence of Bindeshari and Brij Lal. I have examined the evidence of Mahipat Singh and find it equally valueless.

The learned Counsel for the appellant relies in addition on the evidence of P. W. No. 18 Someshar Dat which was rightly conceded in the lower Court to be worthless, and on the evidence of P. W. No. 53 Thakur Prasad, P. W. No. 4 Kewal Misir, P. W. No. 5 Ram Sabad, P. W. No. 146 Patandin, P. W. No. 152 Hardat, P. W. No. 130 Ram Narain, P. W. No. 142 Baidia Nath Singh, P. W. No. 122 Tribhawan Nath Singh plaintiff, and P. W. No. 86 Sant Bakhsh Singh. The evidence of these nine witnesses is to the effect that they had heard from relations or others that Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra son of Man Singh. It is unnecessary to discuss what the value of this evidence would be if those witnesses had received such information, as I am not satisfied that any one of them was ever told anything on the subject. The learned Counsel also refers to the evidence of P. W. No. 2 Rudra Nath Singh which adds nothing to the case, and lays stress on the evidence of P. W. No. 6 Hakimuddin. This witness deposed that he saw Man Singh shortly before his death, and that the latter declared in his presence that Pratap Narain Singh was his putrika-putra. This witness has given evidence as to other points in support of the plaintiff's case. His evidence has been rightly disbelieved by the trial Judge. The above evidence was found to be unreliable by the trial Judge. I find the whole of it to be false.

Man Singh treated Pratap Narain Singh in all respects as his own son. To use the words of their Lordships in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Koor (1), he "so exceptionally treated the son of a daughter as to give him in the family the place, consequence, and pre eminence which would naturally belong to a son if one existed, and would not ordinarily be conceded to a daughter's son, and has thus indicated an intention that the person so treated shall be his successor" (page 632). He brought him up in his own house. In 1867 when Pratap Narain Singh was invested with the Brahmanical thread at the ceremony of janeo, Man Singh "took that part in the ceremony which, in the ordinary course of things, would be assumed by the boy's natural father" (pages 633-634). It is to be noted, however, that according to the opinion of their Lordships nothing then was done which operated "either in law or in fact as a transfer of the boy from his own into the Maharaja's gotra" (page 634). At the time of the marriage of Pratap Narain Singh in 1868, Man Singh declared him to be his successor. There was also evidence that, when the provisions of Act I of 1869 were under consideration, Man Singh suggested and obtained the insertion of clause 4 into section 22. But in the Will which he made in 1864 and subsequently revoked, he did not nominate Pratap Narain Singh as his successor and left the selection to the choice of his wife. There is nothing in the evidence in this case which would justify an addition to their Lordships' conclusion that "however uncertain it may be when the notion of making the Dadwa Sahib his successor was first conceived, or when that notion first became a fixed intention, it is established that the Maharaja had that intention as early as the date of Dadwa Sahib's marriage; that, with that intention, he continually treated his grandson in fact as the son of the house would be treated, and not as a mere grandson by a daughter and that, in order to effectuate his intention by operation of law, rather than by Will, he caused the clause in question to be inserted in the Statute" (page 637).

The question as to whether Pratap Narain Singh was or was not the putrika putra of Man Singh was not before their Lordships. But this circumstance in no way invalidates the finding. The circumstance that Man Singh in 1864 had not declared Pratap Narain Singh to be his successor, that in the letters to Ramdhan father of Maharani Suraj Kumari at the time of her wedding in 1868, while declaring Pratap Narain Singh to be his heir and successor, he nowhere suggests that he was his putrika putra, and that he went out of his way to arrange for the insertion of a clause in section 22 to ensure the succession of Pratap Narain Singh (surely an act showing most excessive caution if the boy were his son putrika-putra), would go far to meet evidence that Brij Raj Kuar had been appointed to bear Man Singh a son in this form. It is to be noted that, had Pratap Narain Singh been a putrika putra, there would have been no force in the suggestion made by their Lordships at page 633 that Man Singh in 1861 was "reluctant to depart from the family custom and offend his relations by allowing the estate to pass out of his own gotra," because had Pratap Narain Singh been putrika-putra he would have been Man Singh's heir to the knowledge of his relations and in Man Singh's gotra. The value of the evidence to the contrary is, however, immaterial in view of my finding that the evidence to prove Man Singh's appointment of his daughter is false.

The learned trial Judge has discussed at considerable length the evidence of conduct of Pratap Narain Singh and other members of the family to indicate his or their belief on the point. I consider this portion of the evidence barely material, as we are concerned with what Man Singh did, and not with what any one else thought. The appellant has, however, failed to advance his position here. In the proceedings which culminated in the decision in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharajee Subhao Koor (1), it was not asserted that Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra of Man Singh. The case set up in his favour was that he had been treated in every respect as a son. Mr. King stated in his judgment (Exhibit A-12), "I must remark that the plaintiff's case underwent a not unimportant amount of modification during the trial, and it appeared to me that the exact position of the plaintiff was not entirely appreciated by his legal advisers, until a good deal of the evidence and counter-evidence had been delivered. The plaintiff at first alleged 'adoption' in the common sense of the word, i.e., that he had been adopted by the Maharaja as a son. This is not distinctly stated in the notes of the plaint taken by the Court, but it was clear from the tenor of the examination of their witnesses by plaintiff's Counsel. During the trial, the plaintiff repudiated the adoption in the sense in which this word is commonly used by Hindus in reference to a son."

The respondents had asserted that Pratap Narain Singh's legal advisers had never imagined the possibility of raising the plea that he was a putrika-putra. The appellant controverted that argument in the following manner. A certain Mr. Harrington, who had been Superintendent of the Encumbered Estates in Fyzabad from May 1872 to the middle of August 1875, had in 1872 prepared a statement of the case relating to the Ajudhia succession for the opinion of the Advocate-General. At some date prior to the 15th October 1872 Narsingh Narain Singh handed to Mr. Harrington a statement of the case set up by him in favour of his son, Pratap Narain Singh's claims. Exhibit 19 is put forward as an English translation of the statement of claim prepared by Narsingh Narain Singh prior to the institution of the suit of 21st November

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH V. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

1872. The appellant endeavoured to put this and another document in evidence. The trial Judge refused to receive them in evidence. The appellant has produced Exhibit 19 in this Court but has not produced Mr. Harrington's deposition. I consider that Exhibit 19 can be received in evidence. The case so stated to Mr. Harrington is clearly contained in Exhibit 19. The form in which it is produced is the ordinary form in which papers are printed for submission to the Privy Council, and Exhibit 19 is clearly a translation of these instructions which came on the record of the 1872 case and was subsequently translated for submission to the Privy Council. The actual Exhibit 19 is evidently one of the copies taken at the time. The matter is more than thirty years old. Those instructions contain at paragraph 7 the following plea:—

"The Maharaja and the Maharani have both married the Dadwa's mother by putri-karan (the condition, etc., at the time of marriage to the effect that the bridegroom will have nothing to do with the first child and the other children after the first child will be his, the bridegroom's) and in such case the first child be considered as own son or daughter of the grandfather (nana). 'Putri-karan of Mitakshara, page 71.'

"The Maharaja and the Maharani brought up the Dadwa from his infancy as their own son and invested him with the Brahmanical thread 'janeo' in Baisakh 1274 Fasli. The Maharaja and the Maharani made the Dadwa's 'juggo pawit', etc. (the ceremony in which the Brahmanical thread is given) and called him of the Girg gotra as himself and allowed him (Dadwa) to worship their (the Maharaja and the Maharani's) gods, and the Maharaja pronounced the gayatri munter over him (Dadwa) which is the duty of a father. All the other ceremonies usually bestowed by a father were also performed by the Maharaja in the capacity of a father.

"The witnesses to the above facts are Pandit Matr Dut, Pandit Ganga Dhar Shastri, and Pandit Dwarka Dut, etc., who have caused all these ceremonies to be performed; many of the Talukdars and the officials are well acquainted with all the ceremonies.

"From the time up to the present the Dadwa's shankalap had been made by 'Girg gotra'."

This is sufficient to prove that Narsingh Narain Singh stated to Mr. Harrington the plea that Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra of Man Singh. But this fact, so far from assisting the appellant, tells against him. Taken with the remaining evidence, it establishes that the plea was suggested, and abandoned. We are now asked to find that Man Singh formed a deliberate intention to appoint his daughter Brij Raj Kuar to bear him a son, that this intention was approved by Bakhtawar Singh, that a husband was sought and obtained who agreed to a marriage on this condition, that the pair were married in the putri-karan form, and that Pratap Narain Singh was born to them as the putrika-putra of Man Singh. Witnesses who have given evidence in these proceedings were then in existence. They now depose in unmistakable terms to the allegations set forth above. If the theory of the appellant be accepted, Narsingh Narain Singh and Brij Raj Kuar were necessarily aware of the conditions of their own marriage. They were instructing Pratap Narain Singh's legal advisers. Yet the plea was abandoned, while a plea of adoption was set up, which had to be abandoned afterwards. It cannot be suggested that this plea, if set up and proved, would have been other than the best plea that would have been taken. Not only was the position of Pratap Narain Singh as a putrika-putra stronger than his position under a clause with regard to the interpretation of which considerable doubt prevailed in Oudh, but as a putrika-putra he would have obtained the whole of the non-talukdari property valued at Rs. 7,00,000 (Exhibit 1) which he failed to obtain under their Lordships' decree. The abstention to take, or rather the abandonment of this plea in limine, is an eloquent commentary on the theory that Pratap Narain Singh's parents believed him to be a putrika-putra, and further furnishes an additional reason, if one be required, for distrust of the witnesses called on the point in this case. In support of the theory the appellant's

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Counsel has urged the fact that in the plaint Musammatt Brij Raj Kuar the mother of Pratap Narain Singh described herself as his sister. This peculiar description does not imply an assertion that Pratap Narain Singh was putrika putra of Man Singh. As their Lordships observed at page 631, the term was probably used to lend colour to the plea negatived in their judgment that treatment in all respects as a son by a Hindu was tantamount to an adoption in the Hindu Law.

The next piece of evidence relied on by the appellant was a portion of the statement of Pratap Narain Singh on the 5th January 1881 in the proceedings in the case instituted in 1879. The passages in question are as follows (Exhibit 34):—

"I belong to the Girg gotra, my father belongs to the Bharadwaj gotra. When I married I belonged to the Girg gotra. When I was married I was not the son of Babu Narsingh Narain, but I was the son of Maharaja Man Singh. Darogha Ramdhan was to the best of my belief a son of Maharaja Man Singh's mother's sister... I am the only son of my father. I was accounted as belonging to the Bharadwaj gotra till the time of my investiture with the Brahmanical thread..... Q. Are you adopted son of the Maharaja or are you his daughter's son? A. I do not know if I am an adopted son or only the daughter's son. That is a matter to be decided according to the Sastras. I do not know if the Maharaja really adopted me or not, the pandits have to decide that. I know my gotra was changed at the time of my investiture with the Brahmanical thread... Q. After ceremonies of janeo did you understand Bachi Sahaba (the wife of your father Babu Narsingh Narain) as your mother? A. Even before the ceremonies of investiture I looked on her as a sister. I considered her as such since I can remember. I did not consider Babu Narsingh Narain as a father. I considered him as a stranger, although a relative, just as other relatives."

This statement, which is supported by the second paragraph in Pratap Narain Singh's original plaint of 1872 (Exhibit 1), so far from supporting the appellant's plea, is against it. If Pratap Narain Singh were a putrika putra of Man Singh, he would have been born in the gotra of Man Singh and not, as he asserts, in the gotra of his father.

The mass of evidence as to the gotra of Pratap Narain Singh carries the point no further than this—Sir Pratap Narain Singh, after his claim to the estate had been recognized, undoubtedly described himself and considered himself to belong to the Girg gotra, i.e., the gotra of Man Singh, and not to the Bharadwaj gotra which was the gotra of his own father, Narsingh Narain Singh. It is not alleged that he cut himself adrift from relationship to his own father. He is admitted by the witnesses of the plaintiff to have made offerings to Narsingh Narain Singh and to have recited his Bharadwaj gotra (see evidence of P. W. No. 53 Thakur Prasad at o. p. 539). But ordinarily he retained the position, which he asserted in his deposition of the 5th January 1881, namely, that he had changed his gotra at the age of twelve when he was invested with the sacred thread. In addition he worshipped the family gods of Man Singh. He usually went into mourning when members of Man Singh's family died, and observed ashouch by abstaining from eating meat, acts of worship, and shaving on such occasions.

From these circumstances it cannot be deduced that Pratap Narain Singh changed his gotra. A male Hindu under the Mitakshara Law can only change his gotra on adoption, and it cannot be, and is not, alleged that Pratap Narain Singh was adopted by Man Singh. Pratap Narain Singh was born in the Bharadwaj gotra and, never having been adopted, remained in the Bharadwaj gotra, and the fact that he lived and died in the Bharadwaj gotra would not be affected by his honest belief and the honest belief of all the members of Man Singh's family that he had changed his gotra. Acting under the erroneous though honest belief that he had changed his gotra (he had clearly no authority to decide points of Hindu Law as will be seen from his deposition) he naturally worshipped Man Singh's family gods, observed ashouch on the deaths of members of Man Singh's family and performed other acts which would ordinarily be performed by members of the Girg gotra and not of the Bharadwaj gotra.

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

A simple explanation can be given of the desire of Pratap Narain Singh to be considered of the gotra of Man Singh. His father's family, though respectable, was obscure. The family of Man Singh, while of humble origin and of recent elevation, had become illustrious. Man Singh was eventually the most influential nobleman in Oudh. Pratap Narain Singh after a hard struggle, had succeeded in becoming recognized as his grandfather's successor. It was not surprising in the circumstances that he should seek to identify himself in every particular with the maternal grandfather who had treated him as a son and to whom he owed his estate, position, and fame: and, once he had reached the elevation of a premier noble in Oudh, it was unlikely that any of Man Singh's family would gainsay his claims.

Before Man Singh's death there had been peculiar differentiations in the treatment of Pratap Narain Singh. Man Singh had on the occasion of Pratap Narain Singh's first marriage performed the functions usually performed by the natural father of the boy. This point was noted by their Lordships and is deposed to by D. W. Tejmani examined on commission (o. p. 6) and D. W. Musammam Lekhraj Kuar examined on commission (o. p. 8). The latter lady has further deposed that at that marriage Maharani Subhao Kuar took the place of the bridegroom's mother and Musammam Brij Kuar took the place of the bridegroom's sister. But this leaves the matter as it was when it came before their Lordships in 1877. Their conclusion is not advanced by the fact that to make the treatment more marked the wife of Man Singh took the place of the boy's real mother, and their daughter, although the boy's real mother, took the place of his sister.

The law upon this point has been taken by me direct from the Mitakshara. It is substantially the law upon which the appellant's learned Counsel relies. Applying the law to the findings of fact at which I arrive I decide, agreeing with the learned trial Judge, that the plaintiff-appellant has completely failed to prove that Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra son of Man Singh.

The second plea advanced on behalf of the appellant's title will not be found either in the notice of the suit or in the plaint. It was, however, advanced in the arguments before the issues were framed, as it is found in the sixth issue, and was according to the judgment strenuously argued at the trial. It is to the following effect:—

As Pratap Narain Singh succeeded under the provisions of clause 4, section 22, Act I of 1869, as a daughter's son treated in all respects as the son of Man Singh, it is argued that on the principle on which section 22 is based the estate should not pass out of possession of Man Singh's family in any circumstances. The view suggested is that such a son is in every respect a son of the daughter's father. In Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Koor (1) their Lordships considered in detail the meaning of the words "treated in all respects as his own son" as they occur in clause 4, and explained in the first instance what they did not mean. Their judgment states that "the clause must be construed irrespectively of the spiritual and legal consequences of an adoption under the Hindu Law... Nor do they suppose that, in passing the clause in question, the Legislature intended to point to the practice (almost, if not wholly, obsolete) of constituting in the person of a daughter's son a 'patricaputra,' or son of an appointed daughter. Such an act, if it can now be done, would be strong evidence of an intention to bring the grandson within the fourth clause, but is not, therefore, essential in order to do so" (page 631). They were clear in affirming that the effect of the clause did not change the status of the person treated as a son. It would not subject "the grandson to prohibitions as to marriage which would not otherwise attach to him" (page 631). To fulfil the conditions of the section, "their Lordships are of opinion that wherever it is shown by sufficient evidence that a talukdar not having male issue has so exceptionally treated the son of a daughter as to give him in the family the place, consequence, and pre-eminence, which would naturally belong to a son if one existed, and would not ordinarily be conceded to a daughter's son, and has thus indicated an intention that the person so treated shall be his successor, such person will be brought within the enactment in question" (page 632). Can the fact that a person treated in such a manner has succeeded to a taluka operate to exclude his heirs under personal law from succession to the taluka in event of his intestacy and the failure of heirs under clauses 1 to 10? For this proposition I can find no support in the words of the section.

Should such a person die intestate, his succession as heir of a taludar is governed by the provisions of section 22. The succession would go in the first instance to one of his sons or one of their descendants under the provisions of clauses 1 to 3, then to a daughter's son treated as a son in all respects, then to an adopted son, then to a brother, then to an elder widow for life with remainder to a son adopted by such widow with permission, then to a junior widow for life with remainder to a son adopted by such widow with permission, and then to one of male lineal descendants not being najib ul tarfain. This concludes the first ten clauses. They present no difficulty. Then the succession opens to "such persons as would have been entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe of such.....heir..... are subject."

How can it be said that the agnates of the daughter's father are persons "entitled to succeed to the estate under the ordinary law to which persons of the religion and tribe" of the daughter's son are subject, in a case such as this where the ordinary law is the Mitakshara Law?

The peculiar statutory provision contained in clause 4—a provision which their Lordships found in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Kooer (1) was inserted in the Act by Man Singh to suit the identical case of Pratap Narain Singh and which they found would never have been enacted had Pratap Narain Singh not existed—must be interpreted exactly as it stands. In no circumstances should abstruse meanings be read into it. As their Lordships observe, "the clause is perhaps not very clearly or happily expressed" and in its words cannot be found designs to arrange for a succession of persons other than the lineal descendants of the daughter's son so treated. The argument, that it is contrary to reason to suppose that the originators of the clause intended invariably to divert the property from the stock of the daughter's father, ignores the circumstance that on the same argument it would be equally contrary to reason to suppose that the originators of the clause intended to make such a diversion in favour of male descendants of such daughter's son. Yet this latter provision is exactly what the clause enacts. A Hindu who chose to treat his daughter's son in the manner described by their Lordships diverted the property from his own adopted son (if any), from his brothers and nephews, removed it from his own gotra and transferred it to another gotra and another clan as long as such daughter's son's descendants existed. Thus a Bais taluka would fall into Amethia hands and vice versa. As their Lordships point out, a departure would be made from family custom and relations would be offended [Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Kooer (1)]. This is the rule to which the framers of the clause deliberately agreed, and in face of that anomalous state which might continue for ever, there is little force in the argument that the clause must be interpreted to prevent the continuance of an anomalous state which must continue for ever. Much stress has been laid in the appellant's argument on the circumstance that in the 5th clause the words are "in default of such son or descendants." The inference that the learned Counsel draws therefrom is that from the use of the word "son" it should be held that the daughter's son is equivalent in all respects to the daughter's father's son. The learned Counsel would have us read into clause 4, in view of the existence of these words in clause 5, some such words as "who shall thereby be given in all respects the position of his own son" after the words "his own son." But there is nothing to support this view. The words in clause 4 are "treated in all respects as his own son" and the meaning of those words has been settled once for all in Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanee Subhao Kooer (1), and the words "in default of such son" in clause 5 mean nothing more than "in default of such daughter's son."

It is true that in clause 6 the words "in default of such adopted son" are used instead of "in default of such son." But variety in the use of the same terms is not unknown in section 22. To show this it is only necessary to refer to clause 7, where the case of a single widow is first considered and then the case of the widow of first marriage is contemplated. In clause 8 the distinction is omitted. In clause 9 it is re-introduced.

As was laid down in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (9), a special rule of succession is laid down in the first ten clauses of section 22, and by clause 11 the parties are relegated to the situation in which they would have been found apart from the Statute. There that situation was found in the sanad. Here it is not so. The situation is found in the Mitakshara Law, and the appellant would have us legislate, rather than interpret, by adding words to the Statute which do not exist there, in order to correct a suggested anomaly in no way more at variance with what he considers the right rule than the anomaly which admittedly exists, and then utilize the addition, made by our legislative action, to abrogate the Mitakshara rule of succession which binds the members of Man Singh and Narsingh Narain Singh's family. I find against this plea.

I, therefore, decide that the appellant has in no circumstances title to succeed to Sir Pratap Narain Singh's estate, and might conclude my decision there as he has no right to question the validity of the Will or the adoption. I proceed, however, to the determination of other points, as my learned colleague and I do not interpret the law as to the appellant's title in exactly the same way.

The case of the appellant as presented in the lower Court with regard to the Will of 1891 was

- 1 that the Will was not executed,
- 2 that the execution of the Will was procured by undue influence,
- 3 that the Will was revoked,
- (a) by execution of two deeds of the 23rd December 1895 and the 12th July 1898,
- (b) by the Maharaja's conduct,

(9) 7 Ind. Cas. 724; 32 A. 599 at p. 610; 20 M. L. J. 917; 14 C. W. N. 1010; (1910) M. W. N. 693; 12 C. L. J. 303; 8 M. L. T. 273; 7 A. L. J. 1122; 12 Bom. L. R. 1015; 13 O. C. 316; 37 I. A. 168 (P. C.).

(c) by execution of another Will shortly before the Maharaja's death,

4 that Maharani Jagdamba Devi had no rights under the Will because she was not the legally married wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh,

5 that if she were the legally married wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh she had forfeited all her rights under the Will owing to misconduct prior to her husband's death,

6 that the terms of the Will conferred no right of devise to Dukh Haran Nath Singh.

The case of the appellant as presented in the lower Court with regard to the adoption was

1 that the adoption was invalid, having been procured owing to compulsion and undue influence,

2 that Maharani Jagdamba Devi not being a legally married wife could not make a valid adoption,

3 that Maharani Jagdamba Devi, even if a legally married wife, had by her unchastity both before and after marriage rendered herself incapable of making a valid adoption

4 that Dukh Haran Nath Singh was purchased from his natural father and that his adoption was, therefore, invalid,

5 that the adoption was invalid because Dukh Haran Nath Singh and his natural father were both out of caste at the time of the adoption,

6 that Dukh Haran Nath Singh's natural mother was of the Bharadwaj gotra, that she had entered the Girg gotra at the time of her marriage and that, therefore, the adoption was invalid whether Pratap Narain Singh belonged to the Girg gotra or the Bharadwaj gotra,

7 that the legal forms of the adoption not having been followed the adoption was invalid,

8 that on the interpretation of the terms of the Will Maharani Jagdamba Devi had no power to adopt Dukh Haran Nath Singh.

If the appellant had been able to succeed in setting aside the Will and the adoption and destroying the claims of Maharani Jagdamba Devi, he could not succeed under the provisions of clause 7, section 22

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Act I of 1869, during the lifetime of Maharani Suraj Kumari. To meet this difficulty he set up a plea that that lady had forfeited all her rights on account of her having "acted against the duties of a wife".

I take these pleas in order. The execution of the Will was not denied in the plaint but was denied before the learned trial Judge in argument. In the argument before us the execution was not denied and I do not understand the appellant to suggest now that the Will was not executed. But it is advisable to have a finding on the point. I find that the Will was validly executed. I am in accord with the decision of the learned trial Judge at o. pp. 400 to 404 of the judgment upon this point.

The appellant in his notices of claim [Exhibit A-129 and Exhibit A-129 (a)] despatched on the 13th October 1914 and the 17th November 1914 asserted that Maharani Jagdamba Devi had prior to July 1891 an adulterous intrigue with Adika Nath, a descendant of Incha Ram. This Adika Nath is the father of Dukh Haran Nath Singh, the boy subsequently adopted. The appellant next asserted that the Maharaja had executed a Will on the 14th July 1891, by which he gave Maharani Jagdamba Devi the power to adopt an heir from the family of Darshan Singh, that Adika Nath, discovering this fact and wishing to divert succession to one of his own descendants, exercised undue influence on the Maharaja, and that the Maharaja as a result of this influence executed the Will of 17th July, which was prepared by Adika Nath. According to this allegation Maharani Jagdamba Devi was given as a result of the aforesaid undue influence authority to adopt a boy from Adika Nath's own family and exercised that authority by adopting Dukh Haran Nath Singh.

The suggestion approached the ludicrous. In July 1891 Adika Nath was 13 or 14 years of age. Maharani Jagdamba Devi was 13 years of age. The Maharaja was 36 years of age. Dukh Haran Nath Singh (the boy subsequently adopted) was not born till 1904-1905. The story was that a boy, the son of a poor distant relative, had been carrying on a precocious intrigue with the girl-wife of the head of the family, who was one of the greatest noblemen in Oudh, that this youth, coming to hear that that nobleman had made a Will, under the provisions of which this wife might adopt a boy from one branch of the family under certain conditions, formed an idea of using undue influence to cause that nobleman to cancel that Will and make another Will, which would permit the lady to adopt a possible son of the intriguer—a son who on the story was not born till 13 years afterwards. The story continued that he worked this nobleman, who was a grown man of mature intellect, round to his purpose in three days, and during this period drafted a Will to secure his objects and compelled his dupe to sign it.

In the plaint which was filed on the 11th February 1915 a completely different story was told. It is there asserted that a Will was executed on the 14th July 1891 by the Maharaja, which gave Maharani Jagdamba Devi maintenance for life and power to adopt a successor from the Darshan Singh branch and that Maharani Jagdamba Devi (not a word is said about Adika Nath) by refusing food and threatening to commit suicide induced the Maharaja to alter his dispositions. The appellant's attempt to reconcile these inconsistencies is the subject of the finding of the learned trial Judge at o. pp. 103 to 121 of the judgment. I agree with that finding.

We have first an assertion that a Will was executed on the 14th July 1891. As the appellant contended that this Will was revoked, he introduced the allegation apparently to add colour to the plea of undue influence, the suggestion being that the Will of the 14th July would not have been revoked, unless undue influence had been used. The plea will be examined. The evidence to prove the execution of a Will on the 14th July is as follows. P. W. No. 6 Hakimuddin deposed that he drafted this Will and that it was signed in his presence by the Maharaja and two attesting witnesses. P. W. No. 17 Suraj Bakhsh supported this story. The Maharaja subsequently executed two deeds of endowment of property for religious and charitable purposes (Exhibit 2, dated the 23rd December 1895, and Exhibit 3, dated the 12th July 1898). In both these deeds he referred to his Will of the 14th July 1891. I have already discussed the evidence given by Hakimuddin on the plea that Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika putra of Sir Man Singh. I have found his evidence unreliable on that point. It is equally unreliable on this point. Suraj Bakhsh is also an unreliable witness. I add nothing to the comments of the learned trial Judge on their evidence at o. pp. 386 to 397 of the judgment. The reference in Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3 to a Will of the 14th July 1891 is thus the remaining evidence as to the existence of such a Will. That evidence is obviously insufficient to prove that such a Will existed, in view of the circumstance that there exists a genuine registered Will which was signed on the 17th July 1891 and registered on the 20th. If there had been a Will of the 14th July 1891 it stood revoked by the latter Will, and Pratap Narain Singh would not have referred to the terms of a revoked Will in Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3. There is nothing in the terms of Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3 really inconsistent with the terms of the Will of the 17th July 1891. I, therefore, concur with the finding of the learned trial Judge that the references in Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3 were meant to be to the Will of the 17th July 1891 and that the 14th was inserted by a clerical error.

The finding is thus, that there was only one Will executed at that period, namely, the Will of the 17th July 1891. The evidence to show that its execution was obtained by exercise of undue influence is that of Hakimuddin alone. It is unnecessary to discuss whether his evidence, if believed, would establish that the execution of the Will had been obtained by undue influence, as I do not believe his evidence. I, therefore, find that the execution of the Will of the 17th July 1891 was not obtained by the exercise of undue influence.

I now come to the plea of revocation.

The Will could only be revoked under the provisions of section 57, Act X of 1865, read with section 19, Act I of 1859.

The first point urged is that the action of the Maharaja in executing the two deeds Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3 shows that he revoked the Will. Under the terms of the Will the testator had declared that he was dedicating property yielding an annual profit of Rs. 12,000 for religious and charitable purposes, whereas by Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3 he dedicated property of an annual profit of about Rs. 18,000 for these purposes. There is no real inconsistency in this. He intended in 1891 to dedicate property for religious and charitable purposes. Later he considered it desirable to dedicate property of a greater value. In no circumstances could his later acts amount to a revocation of his Will. An even weaker plea is raised in the plaint. The Maharaja got the sons of his old opponent Triloki Nath admitted into the Colvin Talukdars School and paid the expenses of their education. It was asserted that this act amounted to a revocation of the Will. The pleas in support of revocation up to this point are untenable to a degree.

The next plea taken was that Sir Pratap Narain Singh revoked his Will of the 17th July 1891 shortly before his death by executing a subsequent testamentary instrument which has not been produced.

The appreciation of the value of this plea will be assisted by a statement with dates (when available) of certain facts which are established by the evidence on the record.

In the year 1906 Mr. R. E. Hamblin, who is proved now to be dead, was Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division. Mr. F. J. Perl was Deputy Commissioner. Mr. Perl went on six months' leave in April of that year. Mr. L. C. Porter officiated as Deputy Commissioner during his absence. The headquarters of the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner are in Fyzabad, within a few miles of Ajudhia. Sir Pratap Narain Singh was in financial difficulties, and was negotiating for a Government loan. He was discussing the question with the Commissioner who proposed in the alternative the placing of the estate under Court of Wards' management—the course which was adopted after the Maharaja's death. The Commissioner saw the Maharaja from time to time on this matter, and had also to see him in connection with the bestowal of the title of Mahamahopadhyaya which had been recently conferred by the Government on Sir Pratap Narain Singh. The Maharaja towards the end of the year found himself in failing health. His illness took a turn for the worse, and he died at the end of the year. In October the Maharaja communicated with Mr. Butler, Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow (who is now Sir Harcourt Butler), subsequently Lieutenant-Governor of Burma. Sir Harcourt Butler was an intimate friend of the Maharaja. He visited the Maharaja at Ajudhia on the 14th October 1906. The Maharaja's health was then in a precarious condition and he had made arrangements for medical attendance by a leading Bengali practitioner of the Ayurvedic School. This gentleman, Kaviraj Dwarka Nath Sen, arrived in Ajudhia on the 16th October. At some date between the 20th and 26th October the Maharaja received a visit from Sir Muhammad Ali Muhammad Khan, the Raja of Mahmudabad. On the 29th October Mr. Pert resumed charge of his duties on return from leave. Shortly afterwards the Maharaja received a visit from Thakur Harihar Bakhsh Singh, talukdar of Saraura. On 4th November Mr. Hamblin wrote to the Maharaja (Exhibit 79), in reply to a letter not produced, stating the information he would require before he could present proposals to Government for the improving of the financial condition of the estate. On the 6th November the Maharaja wrote to Mr. Hamblin (Exhibit A-351) asking for information as to the distinctive dress of holders of the title of Mahamahopadhyaya, as he wished to obtain it to wear at a Darbar to be held in the following January. He was evidently not dangerously ill to his knowledge when he wrote that letter. On the 8th November Mr. Pert wrote to Mr. Hamblin (Exhibit A-352) that the Maharaja was seriously ill and asked what he was to do if the Maharaja died? Mr. Hamblin wrote to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue (Exhibit A-390) conveying this information of Mr. Pert and adding other remarks. On the 9th November the Maharaja died. Mr. Hamblin communicated the fact to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue by telegram (Exhibit A-395). He wrote subsequently to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue letters dated the 10th November, the 13th November, the 13th November and the 15th November (Exhibits A-391, A-

To prove the plea of specific revocation the appellant called P. W. No. 136 Hakim Ismail Khan. This man is a petty medical practitioner, who asserts that he was first in the employment of the Maharaja and latterly pensioned by him. His story is that he had attended the Maharaja in a medical capacity for four or five months up to the date of his death. He deposed that some $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 months before his death i. e., in August 1906, he found a paper lying on the Maharaja's bed. I proceed to give his evidence in his own words—o. pp. 1351 to 1393.

"I guessed it might be a Will. I began reading it attentively. The Maharaja asked me what I was reading. I told him that the paper was in very neat writing and so I started reading it. He told me to read it first myself and then to read it out to him. I did so. I read it out to him. He asked the Bengali Vaid also to listen to it. I told him, he had already made a Will and what sort of Will this was. He replied it was the cancellation of the former Will. I enquired from him the reason of the cancellation. He explained that the acts for which he had deprived the senior Rani of the estate were committed by the junior Rani also. He then signed the neatly written paper himself and requested me and the Vaid to sign the same as witnesses. We both signed it. This was $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 months before the death of the Maharaja approximately. It is an old affair. The Maharaja died on the 25th day of the Vaid's treatment but he had arrived at the Maharaja's some months before his death."

Later on he stated what the contents of this alleged Will were. "Q. Did the Maharaja say anything else after you had attested the Will? A. I do not recollect. I do not recollect the full contents. I remember something of it. Probably it provided for a maintenance of Rs. 600 to the senior Rani and monthly maintenance between Rs. 500 and 600 to the junior Maharani and Rs. 100 a month to the Mahabrahmin who was in the keeping of the Maharaja. I do not remember anything else. It perhaps also provided that during his lifetime he was at liberty to adopt anybody he pleased but in case of his death a successor be appointed to him out of the senior line of Raja Darshan Singh's descendants."—o. pp. 1393 to 1394.

This witness's story is this, that in August 1906 the Raja had had a Will drafted by which he revoked all former Wills. Under the terms of this latter Will he assigned maintenance to his widows and bequeathed his estate to a successor to be appointed out of the senior line of Darshan Singh's descendants (that is to say, to the appellant or one of his sons who are the sole representatives of that senior line), that he signed this Will in the presence of Kaviraj Dwarka Nath Sen and the witness, and that the two latter signed as attesting witnesses. Passing over the minor improbabilities that such a small dependent as Hakim Ismail Khan would have the impertinence to take up a private paper of Sir Pratap Narain Singh and read it in front of him, and that the Maharaja would condone such impertinence, the first fact that gives the lie to this story is that Kaviraj Dwarka Nath Sen did not reach Ajudhia till the 16th October. The gentleman is now dead. The date of his arrival is proved beyond doubt partly by the evidence of his son D. W. No. 77, Kaviraj Jogendra Nath Sen, a respectable Ayurvedic practitioner, who has deposed to the best of his knowledge that his father left Calcutta for Ajudhia about the middle of October, and by the statement of Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal P. W. No. 56 (a witness whose main evidence is absolutely discredited, but whose admission here is important against the appellant) that he was sent to fetch the Kaviraj in October, but mainly by a letter from the Kaviraj (Exhibit A-359) requesting payment of his bill for attendance. The charge which he made was accepted and paid. The daily fee was Rs. 500. The fact that he received fees of this amount completely disposes of the suggestion made by Hakim Ismail Khan that the Kaviraj would have been content to remain in Ajudhia for two months or more before he commenced medical attendance on the Maharaja, doing and receiving nothing.

It is superfluous to consider the other reasons why Hakim Ismail Khan's evidence should be disbelieved, but it is advisable to do so as in appeal great stress has been laid on this man's evidence on behalf of the appellant. Sir Harcourt Butler was examined by commission on interrogatories. He was asked six questions—

"1. Was Your Honour acquainted with the late Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh of Ajudhia ?

"2. If so, on what terms were Your Honour and he ?

"3. Has Your Honour ever visited him ?

"4. If the answer to question 3 is in the affirmative, please state when Your Honour visited him last and kindly state fully all that passed between Your Honour and him at the last interview ?

"5. On or about the date of the interview did Your Honour make a memorandum of the same ?

"6. If so and if it is in Your Honour's possession, kindly produce it."

He replied to these questions together (o. p. 3352)—"I am the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma. I used to be a member of the United Provinces Civil Service. I was acquainted with the late Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh of Ajudhia. We were on very friendly terms. I visited the Maharaja Saheb on 14th October 1905 for the last time. I understood he died shortly afterwards. On my return to Lucknow the same day I made a record of the interview which I produce. I wish it to be sent. It need not be returned. I found it amongst my private papers."

He put in at the same time the record Exhibit A, which is as follows:—"I visited the Maharaja of Ajudhia to-day. At the end of the interview he informed me that he had made a Will in favour of the second Maharani which was registered with Colonel Currie, and he committed the Maharani to my care. The Maharani was behind the parda and I asked no question as to the terms of the Will, whether it gave her power to adopt or not (I mention this as Mr. L. C. Porter, Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad, on whom I called afterwards, asked me if I knew whether the Maharani had been given power to adopt). The Maharaja laid the Maharani's hand in mine and I told her that I would be a true friend to her as I was to her husband. The Maharaja was in perfect possession of his faculties and we discussed some public affairs; he said he hoped to be well in December and to take up and push on the High Court question. He could walk and gave me 'pan' and scent and garlanded me before my departure."

The evidence of Sir Harcourt Butler is very valuable. In this Court the learned Counsel for the appellant confined himself to contesting that Exhibit A was inadmissible in evidence. That contention cannot be supported. The witness was asked in effect—Did you have an interview with the late Maharaja and what was the purport of that interview? He replied that he had had such an interview, that he noted the purport of it at the time in a written memorandum and he produced the memorandum. He could have read out the contents of the memorandum to refresh his memory. This evidence is admissible.

D. W. No. 66 the Raja of Mahmudabad gave the following evidence as to his interview with the Maharaja—that the Maharaja asked other persons who were present to go away and that the witness had some conversation with him in private, when they had gone; the Maharaja told the witness that he did not hope to survive the disease he was suffering from and that he wanted to make a testamentary bequest; the Maharaja then told him that, according to the terms of a draft which he had shown to the Raja at Lucknow about a year or a year and a half before, he had made a Will in favour of Maharani Jagdamba Devi, the first proviso of which was that the Raja of Mahmudabad should always assist the Maharani in every way, the second proviso of which was that the management of the estate should be undertaken by a European manager under the supervision of the Local Government, the control of the Court of Wards being avoided if possible, and the third proviso of which was that the Maharani should not be permitted to adopt a son from the family of Triloki Nath. I have given the purport of this witness's evidence, as the Commissioner's translation of the vernacular is both ungrammatical and inaccurate.

The next witness is D. W. No. 54 Thakur Harihar Bakhsh Singh. His account of his last interview with the Maharaja contains the following statements—"He also stated that in case he died I should respect the junior Maharani as much as I respected him, and that I should help her as he had executed and registered a Will in her favour in which he had given her full powers after him." (o. p. 2807)

I shall revert later to the value of the evidence of the Raja of Mahmudabad as proving revocation, apart from the revocation alleged by Hakim Ismail Khan. At this point it is sufficient to state that Hakim Ismail Khan deposed to the execution of a document in August 1906 by which the bequest to Maharani Jagdamba Devi made in 1891 was cancelled and she was given a bare right of maintenance and that three gentlemen of high position have deposed that they were told independently by the Maharaja on dates subsequent to August 1906 that he had made a Will devising his estate to Maharani Jagdamba Devi. The manner in which Hakim Ismail Khan came to give his evidence was as follows. He said that between 10.30 and 11 A. M. on a day between the 11th and 16th February 1916 he met the appellant in Ajudhia on the road and that he asked the appellant if the Will which he had seen had been registered and acted upon. They had no previous conversation on the point, and according to the witness he put the remark out of mere curiosity. The appellant said that it was not registered but did not give any definite reply. They were both in a hurry, and they passed on. About that hour on the 11th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th February the appellant was giving evidence in Fyzabad a few miles away. On the 13th February which was a Sunday, Hakim Ismail Khan on his own showing was at Partabgarh. On the 20th February which was also a Sunday he was on his own showing in Allahabad. He gave his evidence on the 21st of February. The appellant, when under cross-examination on the 17th February, was asked what his case was as to the revocation of the Will, and he made no reference to the fact that he proposed to produce Hakim Ismail Khan and made no assertion as to a specific revocation.

I find Hakim Ismail Khan's evidence utterly unreliable. His statement is a shameless fabrication. This was the view taken by the learned trial Judge.

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

The next witness on whom the appellant relies is P. W. No. 56 Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal. This witness is now in the employment of a printing press at Allahabad on a small salary. He says that he was once a wealthy man, but has now admittedly no private means. He has been on his own showing a participant in champertous litigation and has speculated on the result of civil suits. For some years he was in the confidence of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. He was employed by the Ajudhia Estate before the latter's death and assisted in administrative and secretarial work. He was in Ajudhia at the time of the Maharaja's death, and he remained there for some time afterwards in the employment of the Court of Wards. His story is that on the 26th October 1906 he made a draft of a letter for Sir Pratap Narain Singh, that he faired out the draft, and that Sir Pratap Narain Singh signed the fair copy which was then sent to Mr. Hamblin by mounted messenger. He produced what he asserted was the draft which he said he found in October 1915 amongst his private papers. The learned trial Judge refused to admit this draft in evidence, holding that it was a fabrication. It is raised in appeal that this is a genuine draft. I proceed to consider its contents. It was filed as Exhibit 76. It is a pencil draft written on the back of an old used envelope. It is as follows:—

"26th October 1906,

"My dear Mr. Hamblin,

"Just a line to repeat, as I told you the other day, that none of my former Wills stands, all three having been cancelled. My last Will I spoke to you about, has now been executed, and I hope to be able to meet you shortly in connection therewith. In case I am unable to stir about, I must, of course, ask you to take the trouble to come over.

"I am much as usual, though my Calcutta physician has great hopes of my ultimate recovery.

"Yours faithfully,
Maharaja.

"R. E. Hamblin, Esq.

"Commissioner,
"Fyzabad."

The object of proving this alleged letter from Sir Pratap Narain Singh was apparently to corroborate the evidence of Hakim

Ismail Khan as to the execution of the alleged Will of August 1906. The letter as it stands could not operate as revocation under the provisions of section 57, Act X of 1865, and as the evidence of Hakim Ismail Khan has been rejected on its merits as absolutely false, it is really immaterial to decide whether the alleged draft is genuine or not. But as the appellant's learned Counsel has argued at great length in support of the genuineness of the draft, I shall decide the point.

The circumstances attending the alleged writing, preservation, and production of this draft are sufficient in themselves to justify the finding of the learned trial Judge that the draft has been fabricated for the purposes of this case. The witness is a man possessed of some education. He has considerable knowledge of affairs. He asserted that he was not an ordinary servant of the estate and alleged that he was in the confidence of the Maharaja. If such were the case, he was in a position to realise both before and after the Maharaja's death the consequence of the revocation of the Will of the 17th July 1891. Once the Maharaja was dead the position would have been very clear to the witness. If the cancellation stood alone, the estate passed under the provisions of clause 7, section 22, Act I of 1869, to Maharani Suraj Kumari for life. If the "last Will" to which reference is made in the draft, were a valid and enforceable testamentary disposition, the estate passed under its terms—terms of which the witness was admittedly ignorant. It was his obvious duty in his position to inform the Manager of the Court of Wards, into whose service he passed on the Maharaja's death, of the facts. On his own showing he informed no one and did nothing, and watched silently the succession of Maharani Jagdamba Devi. He has given as the reason of his inaction that grief for the death of the Maharaja drove all recollection from his memory. He supplemented this lame explanation while under re-examination by an equally lame explanation to the following effect:—

"The Maharaja was very particular that the matter of the revocation of the Will should not leak out and the Commissioner knew all about it, and so I did not see any necessity for disclosing it to anybody. I also did not disclose it after his death, as the Will which he had executed was a waste paper not being signed by Mr. Hamblin, nor even registered." (o. p. 634.)

I next take his explanation as to how he came to discover the draft. The witness stated that his mind remained a blank as to the existence of this letter from November 1903 to September or October 1914, that is to say, for eight years. The appellant called on him in September or October 1914 and asked him whether the Maharaja had ever written to any person in authority about the revocation of his Will. A glimmer of recollection then came to the witness, and he said that there might be such a letter. He commenced looking among his papers a year afterwards in October 1915 and eventually found the draft. When the appellant called on him again in October 1915, he told him the purport of the draft but refused to give it to him. He produced it in Court on the 17th December 1915.

On the above facts I find the witness's story absolutely unworthy of belief; but more has to come. It is the appellant's case that Mr. Hamblin received the letter, as he would ordinarily have received a letter sent by messenger. On the 4th November 1906 Mr. Hamblin wrote to the Maharaja (Exhibit 79) a letter in which he referred to a previous meeting and discussed in detail the conditions precedent to Government action for the relief of the financial condition of the estate. He made no reference to a revocation of a Will nor to the execution of a new Will. On 6th November 1906 the Maharaja wrote to Mr. Hamblin the following short letter (Exhibit A-351):—

"My dear Mr. Hamblin,

"I am told Government bestows certain special dress as well as distinctive medals on the recipients of the title of Mahamahopadhyaya.

"I shall be highly obliged if you will kindly make enquiries and obtain the same for me. I should like to have the dress and medals before the Darbar at Agra in January next, if possible.

"Yours sincerely,

"Pratap Narain Singh, Mahamahopadhyaya,
"Maharaja of Ajudhia."

Mr. Hamblin made the following endorsement on the letter:—

"Ask Government in sequence to the letter about my conferring title.

"R. E. H."

"6—11—06".

There is no reference to Mr. Hamblin failing to acknowledge or reply to the letter of the 26th October. The witness alleged that Mr. Hamblin called on the Maharaja on the 6th or 7th November but that the Maharaja was too ill to receive him. On the 8th November Mr. Pert wrote to Mr. Hamblin Exhibit A-358. It is as follows:—

"My dear Hamblin,

"On my return from leave I find that the Maharaja of Ajudhia has been seriously ill and at the present moment is far from well. He is not being attended by Colonel Pratt, so I cannot say definitely what is the matter with him. In the event, however, of a fatal termination to his illness I should be much obliged if you would give me instructions as to what steps, if any, I should take; as far as I know, the Maharaja has left a Will in favour of his young Maharani. She is hardly likely to be capable of managing this large and seriously indebted estate and I think we should be prepared beforehand. I see there has been some talk of a loan of 60 lakhs to the Maharaja, but I have no correspondence left me by Porter beyond his letter of the 15th August forwarding the Maharaja's memorial.

"Yours sincerely,

"F. J. Pert.

"8th November 1906".

Mr. Hamblin wrote on the same date Exhibit A-390 to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue. He quoted Mr. Pert's letter and continued:—

"Pert had spoken to me and I had said we should take under the Court of Wards, but later the matter seemed so big that I thought he should write so that I might get the Board's instructions. I also am told the Maharaja has made a Will in favour of the junior Maharani. The difficulty in taking over on his death would be as to whether the estate was not hopelessly involved, but if the Board agrees I could now have inquiries made as to the income and debts from Deputy Commissioner. The necessity for this may not arise but you know the dilatoriness of men in the Maharaja's position. He has applied to the Government about the rents of his taluka being unduly low, and as to a loan of 60 lakhs being advanced him by Government to pay off his debts and replace them by a loan at a lower rate of interest, he proposed this loan should be a mortgage. The Government refused the former, and as regards the latter said that Court of Wards' management is necessary, this was on the 6th September but the Maharaja has not yet applied. I have seen him and he has told me he wishes to make conditions with Government before he agrees to accept Court of Wards' management. I have said he should let me have the list of his conditions and then I would ask the Board; I have said that when he lets me have the details of his position I will have them tested D. O. by Deputy Commissioner, he does not want the fact of his Court of Wards negotiations till orders can issue. When he lets me have the conditions and his statements of accounts I will forward the former to you and ask D. C. to verify the latter so as to save time.

"His Honour has been told by me of the state of the Maharaja's health.

"Yours sincerely,

"R. E. Hamblin."

From this letter it would appear that Mr. Hamblin had not called on the Maharaja on the 6th or 7th November, though he had seen him on an earlier date as the contents of Exhibit 79 disclose. The Maharaja died next day. On the 10th November 1906 Mr. Hamblin wrote to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue (Exhibit A-391). He there said: "It will be ascertained as soon as possible who is the heir under the Will; it is at present believed the junior Maharani will succeed and that she has been given power to adopt." On the 13th November he wrote to the Secretary again in Exhibit A-392 giving an abstract of the terms of the Will of the 17th July 1891, and on the same date wrote a second letter Exhibit A-393 containing information as to the wishes of Maharani Jagdamba Devi and giving the date of the Will (he made a mistake in the date, for he gives it as the 16th July 1891). On 15th November he wrote to the Secretary of the Board of Revenue (Exhibit A-394), requesting orders as to the future management of the estate on the understanding that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was entitled to possession for life.

These letters show the late Mr. Hamblin to have been a careful and competent officer, whose desire was to have the management of the estate placed on a satisfactory basis and to carry out the wishes of the Maharaja. D. W. No. 31 Mr. Hailey, the Secretary of the Board of Revenue to whom the above letters were addressed, and D. W. No. 60 Mr. Pert have given evidence which shows Mr. Hamblin in the same light. What then was the situation if the witness Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal is believed and the appellant's suggestion be accepted that Mr. Hamblin had received the letter of the 26th October or had been previously informed by the Maharaja of his revocation of his Will? Mr. Hamblin, having reason to believe that the Maharaja had revoked all his Wills and executed a new Will, made no attempt to ascertain the facts in the Maharaja's lifetime and after the Maharaja's death refrained from disclosing his information to his superior officers with the result that the estate passed under the Will of 17th July 1891, which he had reason to believe was revoked, to Maharani Jagdamba Devi. If all Wills stood revoked by a valid testamentary disposition, Mr. Hamblin had to ascertain the terms of that disposition. According to the witness Mr. Hamblin did not do so and concealed his knowledge on the point. If the Wills stood revoked without a valid testamentary disposition, the estate passed to the senior Maharani. On this hypothesis Mr. Hamblin would have been party to a fraud. One of two conclusions must be drawn. If the witness be believed, Mr. Hamblin was guilty of most improper conduct. The other conclusion is that the witness is not telling the truth. The latter conclusion is the conclusion of the learned trial Judge. It is also my conclusion.

I shall here decide an objection of the appellant embodied in the third ground of appeal. The appellant had applied on the 19th and 27th July 1915 in two applications, Exhibits 74 and 75, direct to the Commissioner of Fyzabad and not through the Court, asking permission to search the Commissioner's office for documents which might be favourable to his case. The Commissioner passed certain orders on those applications. On the 8th December 1915 the appellant applied to the Court for the production of 13 documents from the office of the Commissioner of Fyzabad. The learned trial Judge refused to send for one document. The appellant withdrew his application for the production of another. The Court eventually directed the production of 11 documents. The first two documents summoned were the original applications Exhibits 74 and 75, which the appellant asked should be returned to him with all the proceedings therewith. The fourth document summoned was the original of the alleged letter of the 26th October 1906. The Commissioner sent the first two documents with portions of the margin cut off. He explained that after he had received the documents he had written notes of a confidential character on the margins and that as he refused to let those notes be seen, he had cut the margins off before despatching the documents. He replied that there was no letter despatched by Maharaja Pratap Narain Singh to the Commissioner of Fyzabad declaring his intention to cancel or cancelling the Will of the 17th July 1891. The learned trial Judge was then asked by the appellant to compel the Commissioner to produce the marginal notes which were stated to be confidential. The Judge by an order of the 20th December 1915 refused to take such action. The appellant then attempted in his evidence on the 11th February 1915 to prove what he stated were the marginal endorsements by oral evidence—o. p. 1231. He was not permitted to do this. On the 16th February 1916 (o. pp. 1305 to 1309) the trial Judge was asked to revise his order of the 20th December 1915. He refused to do so.

The position of the appellant on this point is as follows:—He sent two applications to the Commissioner, not through the Court, asking permission to search the Commissioner's office at his will, to see if he could find anything to help his case. The request showed the same assurance which has distinguished the conduct of the case throughout. The Commissioner, instead of replying, as he well might have replied, by a short negative, permitted the appellant to examine three files. On the applications he made certain endorsements which he says were confidential. The appellant has deposed (o. p. 1231) that he read those endorsements. No explanation has been vouchsafed, as to how he obtained possession of them. He clearly could not have done so by legitimate means. While making an intense grievance of the matter, he has refused to file an affidavit as to the purpose for which he requires to prove the endorsements, or as to their contents. In this Court, we gave him the opportunity to file such an affidavit. His learned Counsel were equally reticent. One suggested that the endorsements might contain a reference to the alleged letter of the 26th October 1906. Another suggested that they might contain a reference to an alleged file as to an inquiry into the pregnancy of Maharani Jagdamba Devi after the death of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. As the Commissioner had denied that either such a letter or such a file was in his possession these allegations, if they mean anything,—allegations that are unsupported by affidavit or any evidence—were that the Commissioner was not telling the truth. The case is very clear. Certain documents were called from a certain officer. He says that no such documents are in his possession. He is asked to produce certain private notes of his own. He refuses saying that they are confidential. His refusal settles the matter. The provisions of sections 123 and 124, Act I of 1872, are clear—"No one shall be permitted to give any evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, except with the permission of the officer at the head of the department concerned, who shall give or withhold such permission as he thinks fit. No public officer shall be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence, when he considers that the public interests would suffer by the disclosure."

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH V. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

The words in these sections can only be interpreted to show that the officer's refusal to disclose is final. It was not the intention of the Legislature that a Court of Justice (from that of a third class Magistrate upwards, for all would be alike) should be entitled to call for and examine the secret archives of the State in order to satisfy itself of their confidential nature. This proposition has been laid down clearly in Nagaraja Pillai v. Secretary of State (10) and Jahangir v. Secretary of State (11).

As a result I find Exhibit 76 to be a fabricated document and the evidence of Niradh Chandra Ghoshal completely false. This was the view taken by the learned trial Judge.

The next witness on whom the appellant relied is P. W. No. 159 Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterji. In October 1905 he was Assistant Surgeon at the District Hospital, Fyzabad. He deposed that he saw Sir Pratap Narain Singh between the 20th and 27th October 1906. He was not treating him as a physician. His allegation is that he saw him as a friend. This is his deposition on the point:—"The Maharaja was suffering from dropsy and was rather anxious about his health, and asked me to state frankly what I thought about his illness as some of his doctors said one thing and some other. I asked him why he was so anxious about it and tried to comfort him. He said he had some very important business to finish. I said what. He said concerning the Will. I said every one knows that you have made a Will in favour of the junior Maharani. He hesitated and seemed as if he did not like the question. But after a short time he said that she is not worthy of it or does not deserve it. I changed the topic immediately and assured him that he would recover" (o. p. 1540). It is difficult to see why this evidence was introduced. So far from supporting Hakim Ismail Khan it contradicts him. It would show that the Will had not been revoked before the 20th October. The evidence established no revocation in law. The learned trial Judge has dismissed this witness's evidence contemptuously, but not too contemptuously (o. p. 373). I find the witness absolutely unreliable.

The last argument on behalf of the appellant on the point of revocation is that the evidence of the Raja of Mahmudabad established revocation of the Will of 17th July 1891. This gentleman's evidence on the point has already been noted. It does not establish revocation. At the best it would be secondary evidence of the contents of the alleged revoking Will, and it is not shown that secondary evidence is admissible. But taking the matter on a broader reasoning and examining the value of the witness's evidence, it is to this effect. He says that Sir Pratap Narain Singh had told him that he had made a fresh Will. Sir Pratap Narain Singh may have meant no more than that he had prepared a draft which met with his approval. It cannot be taken from this evidence that Sir Pratap Narain Singh said that he had executed a Will which he had signed in the presence of two attesting witnesses as required by law. In any circumstances such evidence would not be sufficient to establish the revocation of the former Will. According to the witness the Maharaja had stated that he had made his fresh Will in favour of Maharani Jagdamba Devi, subject to conditions slightly different from those prevailing in the Will of the 17th July 1891. Their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down in Sahib Mirza v. Umda Khanam (12): "It is well settled that a Will duly executed is not to be treated as revoked, either wholly or partially, by a Will which is not forthcoming, unless it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence that the later Will contained either words of revocation, or disposition so inconsistent with the dispositions of the earlier Will that the two cannot stand together. It is not enough to show that the Will which is not forthcoming differed from the earlier Will, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consisted. It is also settled that the burden of proof lies upon the person who challenges the Will that is in existence. These propositions have been established in this country, both in this tribunal and in the House of Lords.....and as they are founded on reason and good sense they must be regarded as of general application." I, therefore, find that the Will of the 17th July 1891 was duly executed, was not executed under undue influence, and that it was never revoked.

It remains to consider the appellant's last plea on the point of the Will, to the effect that as it stands it is unenforceable or at the best devises nothing more than a life-estate to Maharani Jagdamba Devi and maintenance to Maharani Suraj Kumari and that the succession to the remainder devolves as in intestacy.

The Will (Exhibit A 318) is not a perfectly worded document.

Paragraph 1 revokes all previous Wills.

Paragraph 2 recites the fact that the testator has two married wives, Maharani Jagdamba Devi, being the second married wife. Here the appellant makes his first criticism. His argument is that if he succeeds in showing that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was not the legally married wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh all bequests to her are void. As I shall subsequently show, the marriage of Maharani Jagdamba Devi is absolutely established, but the point is bad in any circumstances, for on the appellant's own case, if Maharani Jagdamba Devi were not a legally married wife of the testator, the fact was known to the testator, and the bequest was then to her in her individual capacity and not in the capacity of wife under the Mitakshara Law.

The 3rd paragraph laid down that if he had any male issue from his second wife the said issue and their descendants should inherit. The portion of the paragraph relating to subsequent succession is unenforceable.

The 4th paragraph laid down that in case there was no such issue and his second wife bore a daughter, the descendants of the second wife's daughter should succeed one after another. Here again the attempt to lay down a rule as to succession is unenforceable. These facts in no way invalidate the value of the Will, for the contingencies have not arisen.

The 5th paragraph devised, in absence of issue from his second wife or male issue from a daughter of the second wife, a life-estate to Maharani Jagdamba Devi without power of alienation. This devise, as I read it, was not conditional on her good conduct. But the point is unimportant as the accusations of unchastity against her are found by me, as I will subsequently show, to be absolutely unfounded.

The 6th paragraph refers to the contingency of a daughter being born to his second wife.

The 7th paragraph is the important paragraph. It may be rendered into English as follows:—"In event of failure of issue from my second wife and of heirs mentioned in paragraphs 3, 4, 5 and 6, and in event of my not having formally adopted a boy by registered instrument during my lifetime, my second wife is authorised to adopt a boy from my paternal or maternal family. Any such adopted son shall after her death succeed as full proprietor to my moveable and immoveable property in the manner contemplated by clause 8, section 22, Act I of 1869, but shall not be entitled to possession until after my second wife's death. She shall not have power to deliver him possession of the said property during her lifetime." The contents of the remaining paragraphs are immaterial.

Paragraph 7 is undoubtedly badly worded. The contingency of the failure of an heir under paragraph 5 is clearly not contemplated, for it is the heir under paragraph 5 who is to exercise the power of adoption. The reference to clause 8, section 22, Act I of 1869, cannot be read as it stands, for the power to adopt under clause 8, section 22, is given to the elder wife only. It is under clause 9, section 22, that the power to adopt is given to a junior wife. Further the succession of an adopted son under section 22 is intestate succession, whereas the succession of the adopted son here is by testamentary disposition.

A Court should be guided in interpreting a Will by certain well-known rules which were summarized in 1913 by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Par.

thasarathy Appa Row (13). "In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain from the language of the testator what were his intentions, i.e., to construe the Will. It is true that in so doing they are entitled and bound to bear in mind other matters than merely the words used. They must consider the surrounding circumstances, the position of the testator, his family relationships, the probability that he would use words in a particular sense, and many other things which are often summed up in the somewhat picturesque figure: 'The Court is entitled to put itself into the testator's armchair.' Among such surrounding 'circumstances' which the Court is bound to consider none would be more important than race and religious opinions, and the Court is bound to regard as presumably (and in many cases certainly) present to the mind of the testator influences and aims arising therefrom. But all this is solely as an aid to arriving at a right construction of the Will, and to ascertain the meaning of its language when used by that particular testator in that document. So soon as the construction is settled, the duty of the Court is to carry out the intentions as expressed, and none other. The Court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. If they transgress any legal restrictions, they must be disregarded. If they leave any eventuality unprovided for, the estate must, in case that eventuality arises, be dealt with according to the law which provides for succession of property in the absence of testamentary directions applying thereto. But the Court never adds to a Will anything which needs to be done by testamentary disposition. In all cases it must loyally carry out the Will as properly construed, and this duty is universal, and is true alike of Wills of every nationality and every religion or rank of life."

The contention of the appellant resolves itself into this:—He urges that the Will gives Maharani Jagdamba Devi only the power to adopt a boy who would succeed as a son adopted under clause 8, section 22, Act I of 1869, and that in event of such succession not being open to such boy (13) 23 Ind. Cas. 166; 37 M. 199 at p. 221; (1914) M. W. N. 299; 12 A. L. J. 315; 18 C. W. N. 554; 26 M. L. J. 411; 15 M. L. T. 285; 16 Bom. L. R. 328, 41 L. A. 51; 19 O. L. J. 396 (P. C.).

the power of adoption cannot be exercised. He thus derives his conclusion that the Will confers at the best only a life-estate on the junior widow and maintenance to the senior. He argues that authority to adopt under clause 8 cannot be treated as authority to adopt under clause 9. He suggests that under section 15 of Act I of 1869 (which on the argument that he had a vested interest in 1906 is not affected by the Amending Act) succession to an adopted son succeeding under the Will would be as though he had bought the property and that the estate would cease to be impartible and would cease to bear the characteristics of a taluka. From this he argues that as it cannot be held to be the intention of the testator to take away the characteristics of impartibility from the estate, adoption cannot be permitted.

The introduction of the figure 8 may be more than a clerical error. It is possible, that the person responsible for the drafting (who on the face of it was not a trained conveyancer) argued that inasmuch as the claims of Maharani Suraj Kumari had been superseded by those of Maharani Jagdamba Devi, the latter would take the position of senior widow, and that the provisions of clause 8 would operate in her favour, should the testator die intestate after giving her authority to adopt. Be that as it may, the Maharaja had the power to give Maharani Jagdamba Devi authority to adopt under the provisions of clause 9 while refusing to give Maharani Suraj Kumari authority to adopt under the provisions of clause 8. That is how I interpret the words of clause 9 after consideration. They justify that conclusion, and any other interpretation would be repugnant, involving, as it would, the deprivation of a Hindu of his right to authorise his junior wife to make an adoption, while refusing such authority to his elder wife. The Maharaja had thus the power to give Maharani Jagdamba Devi such authority. He gave her that authority, but by error (clerical or other) referred to clause 8 instead of clause 9. Can that error invalidate the authority? I do not consider that it can possibly do so. To continue the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the decision previously quoted—pages 222, 223*

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

—“That native testators should be ignorant of the legal phrases proper to express their intentions, or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect, is one of the most important of the ‘surrounding circumstances’ which the Court must bear in mind, and it is justified in refusing to allow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the carrying out of the testator’s true intentions. But those intentions must be ascertained by the proper construction of the words he uses, and once ascertained they must not be departed from.”

This conclusion disposes of the last objection. The words authorising Maharani Jagdamba Devi to adopt can be taken out of the Will. So taken out they constitute a power to adopt in event of intestacy. Authority for that proposition will be found in Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal Kunwar (14) and Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (15), a sequel to the former case. There the senior Maharani of Sir Digbijai Singh, K. C. I. E., Maharaja of Balrampur, succeeded on his death to a life-estate under the provisions of an unregistered Will. She would have succeeded in event of intestacy under the provisions of clause 7, section 22, Act I of 1869, to a similar life-estate. She made an adoption. At I. L. R. 16 Cal. 562, their Lordships say: “In the next place, it was contended that the adoption was invalid, and the bequest to the adopted son of no effect, so far at any rate as regards the Talukdari property, because the adopted son was not a person who could take the Talukdari property under an unregistered Will. It is obvious that this objection assuming it to be well-founded, would not better the position of the appellant if the senior widow had authority in writing to make the adoption, and did in fact make the adoption in the manner prescribed by the Act of 1869. The adopted son would not take until the widow’s death, but still he would take to the exclusion of the appellant. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the objection is not well founded. In order to make the objection good, the appellant has to establish the proposition that the adopted son is not within the exception contained in section 13, sub section 1, of the Act, that he is not a person who, under the provisions of the Act or under the ordinary law to which persons of the testator’s tribe and religion are subject, would have succeeded to the Talukdari estate or to an interest therein if the Maharaja ‘had died intestate’. The appellant endeavoured to support that proposition by arguing that if the Maharaja had left no Will, there would have been no authority to adopt in existence. And then, in regard to succession to the estate, Udit Narain Singh would have ranked as the son of Guman Singh. But the word ‘intestate’ in sub-section 1 evidently means intestate as to his estate, that is, his estate, as that expression is defined by the Act, the Taluk or immoveable property to which alone the Act is declared to extend. This is plain on consideration of section 13 taken by itself, but it is made still plainer, if possible, by reference to section 22, which is closely connected with section 13, and which expresses what otherwise would necessarily be implied, and qualifies the word ‘intestate’ by the addition of the words ‘as to his estate.’”

Such being the case, such an adopted son would be a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act “to the estate..... if the..... testator had died without having made the transfer and intestate”—section 14, Act I of 1869. The rule of succession laid down in Act I of 1869 would apply in this case and the property taken by him retains the characteristics of a taluka.

The appellant cannot succeed on any view of the case. If the devise to an adopted son is a good devise the adopted son succeeds under that devise. If it is a bad devise the adopted son succeeds under clause 9, section 22, Act I of 1869. Thus effect is given to the desire of Sir Pratap Narain Singh, which is disclosed by the contents of the Will read as a whole, to retain the property as a Taluka in the hands of the adopted son. The whole of the controversy has actually turned on the use of the figure 8 instead of the figure 9 in paragraph 7.

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH V. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

I, therefore, decide that under the terms of the Will, Maharani Jagdamba Devi succeeded to a life-estate with full power to adopt a boy to succeed to the remainder from the paternal or maternal families of her deceased husband.

I now come to the validity of the adoption. The adoption may be viewed in two aspects, either as an adoption under the terms of the Will, or as an adoption under the provisions of clause 9, section 22, Act I of 1869. On my findings it is an adoption under the Will, but I am ready to consider its validity on either hypothesis. I go further and shall consider its validity under the provisions of the Mitakshara Law, although I am of opinion that an adoption under the provisions of clause 9 is merely a selection which need not be according to the conditions and the restrictions found in the Mitakshara Law. This appears a necessary consequence of the fact that Muhammadans and persons of other religions can equally with Hindus adopt legally under the provisions of Act I of 1869. But on my decision it is not necessary to relax any restriction. The conditions imposed by the Mitakshara and those imposed under clause 9 have all been complied with by the act of adoption made.

Dukh Haran Nath Singh son of Adika Nath, a lineal descendant of Incha Ram brother of Darshan Singh, was adopted in February 1909 by Maharani Jagdamba Devi with all the rites prescribed by the Mitakshara Law. The ceremony was formal and public, attended by a large number of people including gentlemen of the highest position. A mass of evidence has been given to prove the above facts. A deed of adoption, Exhibit A-319, was executed on the 12th February 1909 by Maharani Jagdamba Devi. This deed was signed by her in the presence of attesting witnesses and registered on the 12th February 1909.

Neither in the notices nor in the plaint was it suggested that the adoption was bad, on an allegation that the deed of adoption was not "executed and attested in a manner required in case of a Will and registered", as stated in clauses 8 and 9, section 22, Act I of 1869, read with section 19 of the same Act. The notices attacked the adoption on certain grounds. The plaint attacked it on those and additional grounds. This particular ground was never mentioned. The point was not taken in argument in the lower Court and is not stated in the grounds of appeal. In this Court, however, the appellant, relying on the words "if made" in paragraph 18 of the plaint, challenged the adoption at the outset, on the ground that there was no evidence that the deed was signed by Maharani Jagdamba Devi in the presence of two attesting witnesses. It is sufficient to refer to the evidence of Indra Dawan Singh (o. p. 2141), one of the attesting witnesses. This is to the effect that Maharani Jagdamba Devi signed the deed in his presence and that afterwards he signed it. There was also other evidence of due execution. I find the evidence of execution reliable and decide that the deed was duly executed.

The second plea taken was that the adoption was invalid having been procured by undue influence. The learned trial Judge has treated this point at o. pp. 459 to 478 of his judgment. I have little to add to his remarks. It appears that Sir John Hewett, who was then Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, addressed Maharani Jagdamba Devi in a letter of the 18th July 1908 (Exhibit 276), in which he pointed out the advisability of her proceeding to make an adoption as provided for in the Will. On the 23rd July 1908 she received a deputation of seven gentlemen amongst whom were some of the leading Talukdars of Oudh. They had been sent to her by Sir John Hewett to advise her to the same effect. On the 7th August 1908 she wrote a letter to Mr. Butler (as he then was)—Exhibit 266. It is clear from this evidence, which is all the evidence upon which the appellant relies to support this plea, that, while she was advised to adopt a boy, no one attempted to compel her to do so, and that no one exercised any improper influence upon her. The choice of the boy to be adopted was left absolutely to her. She adopted the boy whom she wished to adopt. I agree entirely with the conclusion of the learned trial Judge upon the point and find that no undue influence or compulsion was exercised on Maharani Jagdamba Devi in the matter.

The next plea raised is that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was not the legally wedded wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh and thus could not make a valid adoption. I propose to consider this plea only on one point. Was she the legally wedded wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh? In the notices no suggestion was made that the lady was not the legally wedded wife of the Maharaja.

In the plaint, paragraph 8, it was asserted that she was not a married wife and did not belong to the biradari of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. But it was not asserted that she was not a Brahmin and it was admitted that she came from Bhagalpur. The denial of marriage was apparently then based upon a suggestion that the ceremony was void, because it was performed while the Maharaja was alleged to have been in mourning. On the 18th August 1915 before settlement of issues Mr. Mitter stated on behalf of the appellant that the caste of Maharani Jagdamba Devi was not known but that she was of some low caste. The issue framed on the point is—"Was defendant No. 1 legally married to and could be and was a wife of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh?"

In June 1916 at the end of the case the plaintiff examined on commission in Muttra five witnesses, who deposed that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was a Vaishya girl called Jhanjhan, who had been kidnapped from her father's house in Muttra in 1884 or 1885 (Maharani Jagdamba Devi was then 7 or 8 years old) on behalf of Sir Pratap Narain Singh to be entertained by him as a mistress. Such evidence of these witnesses as is relevant is a mass of impudent perjuries. In this Court the appellant has placed no dependence upon the evidence of these witnesses, but he challenged the evidence produced to prove the Maharani's marriage and repeated his plea that she was not the wife of the Maharaja. The learned trial Judge has treated the question at length at o. pp. 207 to 292 of his judgment. It will serve no useful purpose for me to go over the same ground as I agree with his conclusions. It is sufficient to note my findings. They are as follows:—

The evidence to the effect that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was the legitimate daughter of Raghunath Misra, a respectable Brahman gentleman of Bhagalpur whose social standing was at least as high as that of Purandar Ram, father of Darshan Singh, and whose respectability and position were considerably higher than those of the appellant and many of the other living members of Darshan Singh's and Incha Ram's families, and that she was married by the rites of the Mitakshara to Sir Pratap Narain Singh, is reliable. The evidence to the contrary is unreliable. The point that Sir Pratap Narain Singh was under a disability at the time of his marriage owing to impurity due to the death of the widow of Raja Darshan Singh is treated by the learned trial Judge at o. pp. 477 to 480 of the judgment. It has been given up in argument before us. I find that Sir Pratap Narain Singh was under no disability at the time that he contracted his marriage.

I, therefore, find that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was the legally married wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh and that she was ahl-i-biradari.

The 4th plea is that Maharani Jagdamba Devi forfeited all rights owing to her unchastity before and after the death of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. It is only necessary for my purposes to arrive at a finding on the point of unchastity.

With regard to the allegations of unchastity during her husband's lifetime, we have not only the evidence to which I have previously referred of Sir Harcourt Butler, the Raja of Mahmudabad, and Thakur Harihar Bakhsh Singh, but also the evidence of D. W. No. 78, Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore. This evidence shows that up to the time of his death the late Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh referred to Maharani Jagdamba Devi in the presence of gentlemen of absolute credibility in terms of the sincerest love and trust. In view of this evidence it is astonishing to find that Mr. Mitter persisted in the Court of the trial Judge in arguing strenuously in favour of the credibility of the witnesses who supported the following story. This story was that Maharani Jagdamba Devi, commencing at the age of 12 or 13, carried on during her husband's life with his knowledge a series of adulterous intrigues with seven different men. She is charged with adultery with Adika Nath, Lakhpat Rai, Rai Ragho

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH V. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Prasad, Mahadeo, Kunj Lal, Narsingh Nath, and Gajadhar Nath. Witnesses were called who deposed that the Maharaja discovering the facts thrashed Adika Nath, Lakhpatt Rai, Mahadeo, and Narsingh Nath, and killed Rai Ragho Prasad, thrashing the Maharani on every occasion. Witnesses deposed that the Maharaja was aware of his wife's adultery with the two remaining men. The witnesses who supported these allegations were the scum of the bazar, dismissed servants, or partisans of the appellant. I need not discuss their evidence. The learned trial Judge has discussed it sufficiently at o. pp. 297 to 331 of the judgment. He has not touched therein on the allegations of misconduct with Narsingh Nath and Gajadhar Nath, as I understand, Mr. Mitter withdrew the allegations against these persons during his argument. In this Court the Counsel, being better advised than Mr. Mitter, withdrew all allegations of misconduct in the Maharaja's lifetime. The witnesses who deposed in favour of these allegations are, of course, absolutely unworthy of belief.

The appellant, however, maintained the allegation that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was unchaste with a certain Jagannath Das, otherwise known as Ratnakar, after her husband's death. This man was the Maharaja's private secretary and continued to perform the same duties for the Maharani after her husband's death.

Ram Harakh, the first of these witnesses, is a member of the family of the Incha Ram branch. He used to be employed in a subordinate capacity in the estate but was dismissed for dishonesty. He has been criminally convicted of cheating, and has been declared insolvent. He produced two documents which he alleged he obtained clandestinely from a servant of the Maharani. These he alleges support the story that he tells, to the effect that Jagannath Das was the Maharani's lover. He says that he surprised them together. The learned trial Judge finds at o. pp. 332 to 341 of the judgment that the witness is not telling the truth. I agree with the learned trial Judge. I find that it is not proved that the documents in question (Exhibits 61 and 62) were written by Maharani Jagdamba Devi.

Baijnath Dube deposed that in 1915 (six years after the adoption) he saw the Maharani and Jagannath Das travelling from Kathgudam to Naini Tal in the same tonga. Even if this were true it would not help to prove unchastity before 1909, and the incident in itself would prove nothing. Indian ladies travel by tonga without loss of self-respect or propriety. The driver must necessarily be in the tonga also. If a male attendant sits with the driver and a parda be placed between the driver and the lady with another parda over the lady no breach of propriety arises. There is nothing, however, to show that Baijnath Dube can be trusted. The learned trial Judge finds his evidence unreliable on the point—o. pp. 363 to 365 of the judgment. I agree.

I have already noted the value of the evidence of Dr. Mohini Mohan Chatterji in connection with another incident. His evidence on the point under consideration is in my opinion absolutely false. He deposed that he attended the lady medically in the rains of 1907 and that he remained on one side of the parda while she remained on the other. He deposed that Jagannath Das went behind the parda with the Maharani and that he heard them laughing and talking in a familiar and improper manner. The witness showed his bias by a suggestion (most improper in a medical man) as to the cause of an alleged illness of Maharani Jagdamba Devi. I consider him quite unworthy of credit.

I have nothing to add to the remarks of the learned trial Judge on the evidence of Musammatt Brijraji, Patandin, Baidia Nath, Musammatt Bhuri, Nagmani, Musammatt Mohan Dei, Kamta Dat, and Gudar, at o. pp. 341 to 362 of the judgment. The above witnesses are so palpably false that further comment is unnecessary. P. W. Rudra Nath is a member of the

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Raghubir Dayal branch. He deposed that Maharani Jagdamba Devi had been put out of caste. This statement is disproved by a mass of other evidence and is absolutely untrue. P. W. No. 29 Amiruddin is a retired Sub Inspector. He deposed that a certain Preonath, now Police Inspector, was ordered to make an inquiry into the chastity of Maharani Jagdamba Devi. If this were true the fact would prove nothing. Inspector Preonath, D. W. No. 6, has, however, denied that he was ever ordered to make such inquiry. I believe Inspector Preonath and disbelieve Amiruddin on the point.

The appellant further laid stress on immaterial facts such as removal of certain old servants on the death of Pratap Narain Singh and their re-placement by others, which he contended showed an immoral disposition on the part of Maharani Jagdamba Devi.

This closes the evidence on the point. Only one conclusion is possible upon it, and that is the conclusion at which the learned trial Judge arrived, to the effect that the charge of unchastity against Maharani Jagdamba Devi after her husband's death is not established. I agree with that conclusion. I consider it necessary to add some comments on the manner in which Maharani Jagdamba Devi has been treated in this case. Upon the evidence the only findings at which a Court can arrive are that Maharani Jagdamba Devi is a Brahman lady of good family who was married to a nobleman of Oudh and lived with him honourably as his wife for some seventeen years. After his death she has conducted her life and her affairs with all regularity and decorum. It is a scandal that she should have been exposed to the wanton and unfounded charges which have been levelled against her in this case. She has been stigmatised as a kept woman and accused of shameless depravity both before and after Sir Pratap Narain Singh's death, and these charges have been based on palpably fabricated evidence.

The appellant set up the plea that Dukh Haran Nath Singh was purchased from his natural father Adika Nath. He argued that the adoption was invalid for this reason. Apart from the fact that there is no authority in Hindu Law for the proposition that an adoption is vitiated by the payment of a price for an adopted son, there is no evidence that a price was paid. The decision in Eshan Kishore Acharjea Chowdhry v. Hurish Chunder Chowdhry (16) is relied on by the appellant, as showing that the adoption of a son after payment of price is not recognized in the present day. An opinion to that effect was given by the Judges who decided that case. But the point was only incidentally before them and the opinion was based on no authority. The view of the law which I accept is stated in a comparatively recent decision of the Madras High Court in Murugappa Chetti v. Nagappa Chetti (17). It is as follows:—"The receipt of money by the natural father in consideration of giving his son and the payment of such by the adoptive father, though illegal and opposed to public policy, do not make the adoption invalid, as the gift and acceptance of the boy is a distinct transaction clearly separable from the illegal agreement and payment." Thus even if the appellant had proved that a price had been paid he would not have succeeded on the point. He has, however, completely failed to prove the allegation. It is in evidence that when the ceremony of adoption was performed, clothes and jewels were purchased by the estate for presentation not only to Adika Nath but also to other members of the family, and that the unexpended balance of the grant devoted to this purpose was subsequently presented to Adika Nath. But this evidence does not show that Adika Nath sold his son or accepted a price in consideration of giving his son in adoption. My finding is, therefore, that Dukh Haran Nath Singh was not purchased from his natural father.

The next plea was that Adika Nath was out of caste at the time of the adoption, that this fact placed Dukh Haran Nath Singh out of caste, and that the adoption was invalid. The learned trial Judge has discussed the evidence and stated his finding on this point at o. pp. 299 to 312 of the judgment. I agree with his view of the evidence and findings, and decide (16) 21 W. R. 381; 13 B. L. R. Ap. 42.

(17) 29 M. 161; 16 M. L. J. 22.

that Adika Nath was never put out of caste.

The next plea was that the adoption could not be legal, because under the Mitakshara Law the male for whom the son was adopted (here Sir Pratap Narain Singh) must have been in a legal position to have married the natural mother of the adopted boy. On the view of the evidence which I take, Adika Nath the natural father of the adopted boy belonged to the Girg gotra. Musammatt Chandra Kali, the boy's natural mother, originally belonged to the Mabris gotra and passed into the Girg gotra on her marriage, and Sir Pratap Narain Singh belonged to the Bharadwaj gotra. But there would have been nothing in the point, even had Sir Pratap Narain Singh and Musammatt Chandra Kali belonged to the same gotra as a marriage in the same gotra is not illegal amongst Sakaldipi Brahmans. I decide against this plea.

The plea that the legal forms of adoption not having been followed the adoption was necessarily invalid, was abandoned in this Court. On the evidence the legal forms of adoption were clearly followed.

As I have decided on the question of the interpretation of the Will, Maharani Jagdamba Devi had legal authority under the terms of the Will to perform the adoption which she actually performed.

The suggestion that Maharani Suraj Kumari had forfeited her rights under the Will or intestate succession owing to misconduct was abandoned in this Court. The evidence to the effect that the unfortunate estrangement between this lady and her husband was due to her misconduct is discussed at o. pp. 493 to 495 of the judgment. I agree with the conclusions of the learned trial Judge on the point. Maharani Suraj Kumari was married nearly fifty years ago and is now an old lady. She and Maharani Jagdamba Devi are entitled to the fullest sympathy as the victims of unprovoked and absolutely unfounded charges.

The question of limitation can hardly arise on the previous findings. The learned Judge's decision on the point is correct.

There remains the question of costs. Separate Counsel appeared for Maharani Suraj Kumari, Maharani Jagdamba Devi and for the adopted boy, who was represented by the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad. The learned trial Judge allowed costs in respect of Counsel's fees to each separately. This was quite correct on principle, as each had a separate interest in the proceedings. But the learned trial Judge overlooked the provisions of paragraph 272 of the Oudh Civil Digest. - Under the provisions of this paragraph no fee to any legal practitioner not appearing for the Crown or Government or the Court of Wards or a local authority as a party shall be allowed on taxation between party and party or shall be included in any decree or order except in the case of an order under paragraph 66, unless in suits and other original proceedings before the commencement of the arguments.....there shall have been filed in Court a certificate signed by the legal practitioner certifying the amount of the fee or fees actually paid to him for his own exclusive use and benefit by or on behalf of his client. Neither the Counsel for Maharani Suraj Kumari nor Maharani Jagdamba Devi filed certificates until after arguments in the lower Court had commenced. These parties were appearing as independent parties. The minor was represented by the Court of Wards. The rule is in my opinion needlessly inelastic, but it must be applied as it stands. As, however, the appellant omitted to make Maharani Suraj Kumari a respondent in this suit, this technical plea against her fails on a technical ground. The order as to costs must, however, be modified by deleting the amount of Rs. 3,000 payable by the appellant in respect of the Counsel's fee of Maharani Suraj Kumari.

I wish to put on record my appreciation of the care and ability which distinguished the work of the learned trial Judge throughout these lengthy proceedings. Most of the evidence adduced by the appellant was false. Much was irrelevant. The conduct of the plaintiff's case in the lower Court was not to the credit of those responsible for it, and the patience of the learned Judge was tried to the utmost. He has in addition written an excellent and well reasoned judgment. It has been suggested in appeal that the criticisms which he has made on some of the witnesses are unnecessarily severe. This suggestion is not established. The learned trial Judge has on the contrary been moderate in his strictures.

I now decide formally on the grounds of appeal.

1. The first ground is general. The appeal fails as a whole.

2. The second ground is partly general. No argument was directed in this Court to admission of inadmissible evidence on the side of the defendants. In so far as the argument was directed in this Court to refusal to admit evidence on the side of the plaintiff decision will be found on other grounds.

3. The learned trial Judge rightly refused to issue process for the production of the marginal notes on Exhibits 74 and 75, and to allow secondary evidence as to their contents.

4. The learned trial Judge rightly decided the question of limitation.

5. The plaintiff is the nearest male agnate to the late Sir Man Singh. But the point is immaterial.

6. Sir Pratap Narain Singh was not the putrika putra of Sir Man Singh.

7. The practice of appointing a daughter's son to bear a son to a Hindu is permitted by the Mitakshara and is enforceable.

8. The evidence contained in the previous litigations concerning the Raj and in the admissions, statements, and conduct of Sir Pratap Narain Singh and his parents has been correctly appreciated by the learned trial Judge.

9. The evidence as to the statement of Narsingh Narain Singh before Mr. Harrington has now been admitted.

10. Sir Pratap Narain Singh remained in the Bharadwaj gotra all his life.

11. The terms of the Will of Sir Man Singh have been considered by the learned trial Judge.

12. The treatment of Pratap Narain Singh by Sir Man Singh does not establish that the former was a putrika-putra of the latter.

13. The ground is irrelevant and was not pressed in argument. The property was acquired by Bakhtawar Singh who devised it to Man Singh. There was no joint acquisition.

14. The learned trial Judge did not arrive at an incorrect decision on the inferences to be deduced from the use of the word "sister" in the plaint in question.

15. The plea is immaterial. The question has been decided by me irrespective of the evidence afforded by the defendants' documents in question.

16. The explanation given by the appellant on this point is false.

17. The evidence as to the performance of the ceremony of putri-karan is false. The evidence taken as a whole does not establish that any such ceremony was performed.

18. Due weight has been attached to the conduct of members of Sir Man Singh's family and other persons and to their treatment of Sir Pratap Narain Singh.

19. I have decided this point against the appellant.

20. This plea is now immaterial. My decision has proceeded on this point.

21. The defendants are not estopped from pleading that Sir Pratap Narain Singh belonged to the Bharadwaj gotra.

22. The evidence establishes that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was the legally married ahl-i binadari wife of Sir Pratap Narain Singh. The point as to invalidity owing to the alleged impurity of Pratap Narain Singh at the time of marriage was dropped in argument.

23. The gotra of Sir Pratap Narain Singh has been decided by the learned trial Judge and by me.

24. The appellant has not proved any act of unchastity on the part of Maharani Suraj Kumari or Maharani Jagdamba Devi. Exhibits 61 and 62 are not proved to have been written by Maharani Jagdamba Devi and are on the faces of them forgeries.

25. This plea was not argued. The evidence in question was admissible.

26. Ram Harakh and Dr. Mohini Mohan Chatterji are unreliable witnesses.

27. It is not proved that the Will of the 17th July 1891 was revoked.

28. It is not proved that a Will was executed on the 14th July 1891. It is not proved that the execution of the Will of the 17th July 1891 was obtained by undue influence.

29. The adoption of Dukh Haran Nath Singh is valid in law.

30. This plea was abandoned before this Court.

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

31. As it is not proved that Maharani Jagdamba Devi was unchaste, the plea is bad.

32. It is not proved that Dukh Haran Nath Singh was purchased from Adika Nath. The plea is bad in any case.

33. As neither Maharani Jagdamba Devi nor Dukh Haran Nath Singh were out of caste, the plea is bad.

34. This plea has been decided under grounds Nos 27 and 28.

35. I decide against the appellant on this point.

36. The adoption of Dukh Haran Nath Singh was not caused by undue influence exercised on Maharani Jagdamba Devi.

37. I decide against the appellant on this point.

38 and 39. The points are immaterial on my finding that the appellant had no title to sue.

40. The statement in question is proved. My decision has not proceeded on it.

41. The general conclusions of the learned trial Judge as to the falsity of the evidence and the fabrication of documents are correct.

42. This point was abandoned in argument.

43. The amount of costs must be reduced by Rs. 3,300, the amount awarded as Counsel's fee to Maharani Suraj Kumari.

I have discussed the pleas raised in grounds Nos. 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 43, at length in the body of my judgment.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal and direct that the appellant pay his own costs of the appeal and those of the respondents. I uphold the decision of the learned trial Judge on all points in issue, but direct that the order for costs be modified by reduction of Rs. 3,000, the amount awarded as Counsel's fee to Maharani Suraj Kumari.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The dispute in this case relates to what is known as the Ajudhia estate, belonging to the late Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh. The estate was founded by Raja Bakhtawar Singh and was bequeathed by him to his nephew and adopted son Maharaja Man Singh. Maharaja Man Singh was also given certain villages by the British Government for services rendered by him during the Mutiny of 1857. In 1859 a sanad in the ordinary form was granted to him in respect of Mahdauna, Bahrauli, Ahiair and Tulshipur properties, and later on a primogeniture sanad was granted to him in respect of the Bishambharpur property, now forming part of the Ajudhia estate. His name was entered at No. 219 in List I, No. 54 in List II and No. 36 in List V, appended to Act I of 1869. Maharaja Man Singh died on the 11th October 1870, leaving a widow, Maharani Subhao Kuar, a daughter by a predeceased wife Musammatt Brijraj Kuar, better known as Bachchi Sahiba, and a grandson by that daughter named Maharaja Pratap Narain Singh alias Dadua Sahib. After the death of Maharaja Man Singh, Maharani Subhao Kuar nominated Triloki Nath, a nephew of the Maharaja, as his successor to the estate after her death. Maharaja Pratap Narain Singh contested the right of Maharani Subhao Kuar and her nominee to succeed to the estate, on the ground that he was adopted by Maharaja Man Singh and was brought up and treated in all respects as a son within the meaning of section 22, clause 4, of Act I of 1869. The plea as to adoption was subsequently given up, and he eventually succeeded in establishing his title to the estate under section 22, clause 4 of Act I of 1869, and got a decree from the Privy Council on the 19th July 1877.

Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh died on the 9th November 1906 without issue. He left, according to the defendants, two widows Maharani Suraj Kumari, known as the senior Maharani, and Maharani Jagdamba Devi, known as the junior Maharani. The marriage of the latter with the Maharaja is denied by the plaintiff. On the 17th July 1891 he had executed and registered a Will, by which he had disinherited the senior Maharani, giving her only a maintenance allowance of Rs. 600 per mensem, and bequeathed a life-interest in his estate to the junior Maharani, giving her also a power to adopt a boy from his paternal or maternal family. The Will further provided that the boy, so adopted by her, was to be the successor and absolute owner of the estate after her death, as contemplated by clause 8 of section 22 of Act I of 1869. On the 12th February 1909 Raja Jagdambika Pratap Narain Singh was, it is stated, adopted by the junior Maharani.

The plaintiff asserts that the Will of the 17th July 1891 was revoked by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh in his lifetime and that in consequence of that revocation and for other reasons the said adoption, if made, was invalid. He further asserts that both the senior and junior Maharanis forfeited any rights they had in the estate by unchastity, existing from the lifetime of the Maharaja, and that on his death the estate devolved, according to the family custom of primogeniture as also according to the snad and law, on his father Lal Kashi Nath Singh, who represented the senior line among the agnates of Maharaja Man Singh. Lal Kashi Nath Singh died before the institution of the suit, leaving the plaintiff his sole heir. The ground on which he seeks to divert the estate from the real or natural agnates of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh is that the Maharaja was the putrika-putra of Maharaja Man Singh and was brought up in all respects as his own son.

The defendants denied the allegations of unchastity made in the plaint and the right of the plaintiff to claim the estate. They controverted the suggestion that Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh had revoked his Will of the 17th July 1891 or that he was the putrika putra of Maharaja Man Singh, and asserted that the junior Maharani was the lawfully married wife of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh and that the adoption made by her was in every respect valid in law.

The learned Additional Judge found on almost every point against the plaintiff. He held that Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh was not the putrika-putra of Maharaja Man Singh, that the plaintiff had no right of suit, that the junior Maharani was lawfully married to the Maharaja and that the Will executed by the Maharaja in her favour was never revoked. He repelled the various contentions urged against the validity of the adoption.

The first question raised for consideration in this appeal is, whether Maharaja

Sir Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra of Maharaja Man Singh and if not, whether the plaintiff has otherwise any right to sue. According to the Hindu Law a son affiliated in the putrika-putra form is a valid substitute for a son. This may be done by the special appointment of a daughter to be a son, as if she were a son, or by a special arrangement by the father of the girl with her prospective husband that the son who may be born of her shall be his son. Manu says (IX, 127) that he who has no son may make his daughter an appointed daughter by saying "the son born of her shall perform my funeral rites." The son of an appointed daughter, according to him (Manu, IX, 133), takes the whole estate of his maternal grandfather, as if he were his son's son, for "between a son's son and the son of an (appointed) daughter there is no difference either with respect to worldly matters or sacred duties; inasmuch as their father and mother (respectively) sprang from the body of the same (man)." Vashishtha says (XVII, 16, 17): "It is declared in the Veda, 'A maiden who has no brothers comes back to the male ancestors (of her own family); returning, she becomes their son;' with reference to this the verse is, 'I shall give thee a brotherless damsel decked with ornaments; the son whom she may bear shall be my son.'" Baudhayana (II, 2, 3, 15) similarly says: "(The male child) born of a daughter after an agreement had been made is a putrika putra; otherwise he is a daughter's son." Gautama (XXVIII, 18) also declares: "A father who has no (male) issue may appoint his daughter, presenting burnt offerings to fire and the lord of creatures, and addressing (the bridegroom): 'For me be (thy male) offspring.'" He then proceeds to say (XXVIII, 19): "Some declare that a daughter becomes an appointed daughter solely by the intention (of the father)." Both Vrihaspati (XXV, 38) and Vishnu (XV, 6) seem to consider that a daughter can be appointed to bear a son to her father even otherwise than by an express declaration. Yagnyavalkya (II, 128) declares the son of a putrika-putra (appointed daughter) to be equal to a son, and commenting on that text, the author of the Mitakshara observes: "The son of an appointed daughter (putrika putra) is equal to him; that is, equal to the legitimate son. The term signifies son of a daughter. Accordingly he is equal to the legitimate son; as described by Vasishtha; 'This damsel, who has no brother, I will give unto thee, decked with ornaments; the son who may be born of her shall be my son.' Or that term may signify a daughter becoming by special appointment a son. Still she is only similar to a legitimate son; for she derives more from the mother than from the father. Accordingly she is mentioned by Vasishtha as a son, but as third in rank: 'The appointed daughter is considered to be the third description of sons.'"—(Mitakshara, Chapter I, section XI, Para. 3). Hemadri enlarges on the same subject, his views as summarized by Colebrooke being: "The putrika putra is of four descriptions. The first is the daughter appointed to be a son. She is so by a stipulation to that effect. The next is her son. He obtains of course the name of 'son of an appointed daughter,' without any compact. This distinction, however, occurs: he is not in place of a son, but in place of a son's son, and is a daughter's son. Accordingly he is described as a daughter's son in the text of Sankha and Likhita: 'An appointed daughter is like unto a son; as Prachetasa has declared: her offspring is termed son of an appointed daughter: he offers funeral oblations to the maternal grandfathers and to the paternal grandsires. There is no difference between a son's son and a daughter's son, in respect of benefits conferred?' The third description of son of an appointed daughter is the child born of a daughter, who was given in marriage with an express stipulation in this form: 'The child, who shall be born of her, shall be mine for the purpose of performing my obsequies.' He appertains to his maternal grandfather as an adopted son. The fourth is a child born of a daughter who was given in marriage with a stipulation in this form: 'The child, who shall be born of her, shall perform the obsequies of both.' He belongs, as a son, both to his natural grandfather and to his maternal grandfather. But, in the case where she was in thought selected for an appointed daughter, she is so without a compact, and merely by an act of the mind." (Ghose's Hindu Law, Volume II, page 131.) "The appointment of a daughter," observe West and Buhler, "appears to have been conceived in two ways. According to the one, the appointed daughter herself took the place of a son, and then her son naturally succeeded her by representation. She was given for inheritance the place of a male, a place as a source of further succession, such as the Vyavahara Mayukha assigns her in the devolution of property not included amongst the special varieties of Stridhana. According to the other conception she was merely the instrument by which an heir to her father could be produced in the person of her son." (West and Buhler's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Volume II, page 888.)

It is not alleged or shown in this case that Musammât Brijraj Kuar was appointed to be a son, so that she might be treated as a son and her son treated as a son's son within the meaning of the first two descriptions. What is asserted is, that there was an express stipulation at the time of her marriage with Narsingh Narain Singh that a son born of her shall belong to her father, as if he were his own son. The evidence on this point consists of the statements of a few witnesses who profess to have been present at the time of the marriage of Musammât Brijraj Kuar with Narsingh Narain Singh or at the time when the marriage was negotiated by Maharaja Man Singh with Narsingh Narain Singh and his father. The learned Additional Judge has disbelieved the evidence adduced on the point and has given satisfactory reasons for discrediting it. Genesh (P. W. No. 11), the first witness on this point, describes himself as 87 years old and asserts that he and his father were in the service of Maharaja Man Singh, who deputed his father and two others to search a good bridegroom for Musammât Brijraj Kuar who might be willing to stay at the house of the Maharaja after his marriage and to agree that the first son born of such marriage would be the son of the Maharaja. He goes on to say that his father and the other two persons brought Narsingh Narain Singh and his father and the latter accepted the terms of the Maharaja in his presence

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

According to his own statement he entered the service of Maharaja Man Singh at the age of 12 or 13 years after the death of his uncle Beni Singh, which occurred 60 years ago. If that statement be accepted, his age at the time of the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar which took place in 1851 could not be more than 7 or 8 years. He asserts that Raja Bakhtawar Singh was dead when the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar was settled, but he is contradicted on that point by Bandhan (P. W. No. 77), another witness of the plaintiff. He was dismissed by the Court of Wards a month or two after the death of Maharaja Man Singh, and both from his position as the Jamadar of the doorkeepers and his age at the time of the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar, the story of his having been present at the time of the alleged conversation or of his having remembered it is extremely improbable.

Bindeshari (P. W. No. 88) states that he was present at the time of the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar and that Maharaja Man Singh had made an understanding with Narsingh Narain Singh and his father that the first born son of the lady would be the son of the Maharaja. He has made misstatements, however, about various contemporary events. He says that the mother of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar was alive at the time of her marriage, though it is an admitted fact that she had died in 1844. He asserts that his uncle, Rameshurdāt, was the priest of Maharaja Man Singh and had officiated at the marriage, but he admits that Rameshurdāt died 18 or 19 years ago and was 30, 35 or 40 years old at the time of his death, showing thereby that he could not have been alive in 1851.

It is admitted by the witness for the plaintiff that a daughter was born to Maharaja Man Singh in the very year in which Musammāt Brijraj Kuar was married. His wife Maharani Subhao Kuar was then 19 years old and the age of Maharaja Man Singh was 31 years. It is hardly likely that at that age either Maharaja Man Singh or his wife could have so much despaired of having a male issue as to enter into a special arrangement with Narsingh Narain Singh and his father at the time of the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar to take her first born son from them. The explanation given by Bandhan, P. W. No. 77, for that arrangement is that after the death of the daughter born of Maharani Subhao Kuar, Maharaja Man Singh told his uncle Bakhtawar Singh that he had expected a son to continue his line but was disappointed. He asked him as to the course he should adopt, and it is suggested that Raja Bakhtawar Singh sent for the horoscope of Maharaja Man Singh and consulted several astrologers, who declared that Maharaja Man Singh would have no son, that Maharaja Man Singh then asked his permission to celebrate the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar and to take the son born of her as his son and that Raja Bakhtawar Singh consented to the arrangement. Bandhan is the only witness who has been produced to support this story. He is a professional beggar, addicted to ginja and bhang and other intoxicating drugs, and his statement is not entitled to any weight.

Brij Lal (P. W. No. 95) has come forward to state that he was present at the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar, and that at the time of panigrahan or the gift of the daughter the sankalp was made in the putrika-putra form. He, however, admits that he was not at the place where the marriage ceremony was celebrated, and that the bedi or the sacred fire, before which Hindu marriages are consecrated, was inside the parda, while he was outside it. His statement that he was 32 or 33 years old when the marriage took place is contradicted by his subsequent assertion that he was 20 or 25 years old at the time of the marriage of Dadua Sahab, which took place in 1868. The manner in which he came forward to give evidence is also significant, for he states that about a month prior to his giving evidence, the plaintiff had met him and told him he should come when he was called, though he professes to have had no conversation with the plaintiff as to what he knew.

Mahipat Singh (P. W. No. 98) similarly states that he was present at the time of the marriage of Musammāt Brijraj Kuar and that he learnt from the priests officiating at the ceremony that Maharaja Man Singh had made a sankalp at the time of the marriage that the son born of her would be his son and would come into his got

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

One of the three priests, from whom he heard, is stated to have died, but it does not appear whether the other two are dead or alive. There was no occasion for the priests to have given the above information to Mahipat Singh who was then a sepoy in the service of Maharaja Man Singh, aged 18 years. He mentions a conversation between Lachhman Pandit and Bhawani Singh, but Lachhman Pandit is not described by Brij Lal (P. W. No. 95) as one of the priests who officiated at the marriage of Musammât Brijraj Kuar.

The other evidence adduced in the case consists of the statements, said to have been made to the witnesses either by Maharaja Man Singh or his officials or by their relations, who are described as dead. The learned Additional Judge has discussed their evidence in detail and without repeating what he has said, it might safely be asserted that much of it is concocted and such of it as relates to the statements alleged to have been made by persons deceased is not entitled to any weight.

On behalf of the plaintiff reliance is next placed on the plaint in the previous suit (Exhibit 1) filed by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh, in which Musammât Brijraj Kuar, acting as the guardian of the Maharaja, had described herself as the sister of the Maharaja instead of his mother. In the instructions given by Narsingh Narain Singh to Mr. Harrington, the officer in charge of the Court of Wards (Exhibit 19), it was mentioned by the former that Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh was the putrika-putra of Maharaja Man Singh, but that statement was made after a contest had arisen in regard to the estate of Maharaja Man Singh and, even if admitted in evidence, is not entitled to any greater weight than as a statement of an interested party. The statement made by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh in one of the previous suits on the 5th January 1881 (Exhibit 34) is open to a similar objection. In that statement he asserted that he belonged to the Girg gotra at the time of his marriage and that he was married as the son of Maharaja Man Singh, but he admitted that he was not in a position to know whether he was his adopted son or only his daughter's son. In the first suit brought on the 21st November 1872, the estate was claimed by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh against Maharani Subhao Kuar and her nominee, Triloki Nath Singh, who were in possession. In the second suit which was filed on the 3rd June 1879, the estate was claimed by Triloki Nath Singh under the Will of Maharaja Man Singh and was a nominee of his widow. In the third suit which was filed on the 15th August 1882 a similar title was set up. The estate has thus been under litigation since 1872, and any statements made during the pendency of those suits or in connection with them or by way of a preparation for launching them cannot, therefore, be considered to be of any value.

It is next contended on behalf of the plaintiff that even if there was no evidence to prove a marriage in the putrika-putra form, a presumption should be made in favour of such a marriage from the conduct of Maharaja Man Singh and that of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh and the treatment meted out by the former to the latter. There is a considerable amount of evidence showing that Musammât Brijraj Kuar and Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh lived with Maharaja Man Singh, that Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh was born in his house and was brought up by him from his infancy and that the ceremony of investing him with the sacred cord and his marriage were performed by Maharaja Man Singh, as if he had been his own son. There is also considerable evidence to show that Maharaja Sir Paratap Narain Singh treated himself as belonging to the Girg gotra, that is, to the gotra of Maharaja Man Singh, that he worshipped the family gods of the Maharaja and observed mourning and impurity on the occasion of the death of the Maharaja's paternal kinsmen and acted and behaved throughout as if he was the son of Maharaja Man Singh. Maharaja Man Singh in turn treated him as such and got clause 4 inserted in section 22 of Act I of 1879 when it was on the legislative anvil, giving to the son of a daughter "treated in all respects as a son" a statutory position much higher than that of an ordinary son of a daughter.

In Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharanes Subhao Koor (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "So matters stood when the Maharaja, as one of the leading members of the British Indian Association of Talukdars, went down to Calcutta in order to take part in the discussions and negotiations which resulted in the passing of Act I of 1869. This must have been in the latter half of 1868. Imtiaz Ali, the Vakil concerned in the drafting and preparation of this Act on the part of the Talukdars, has sworn that clause 4 of the 22nd section originated with the Maharaja; that it was opposed by some of the Talukdars, but finally approved of by the Select Committee of the Governor-General's Legislative Council on the Bill, and passed into law. He also says that he was told by the Maharaja that his object in pressing this clause was to provide for the Dadwa Sahib." They then went on to refer to the contradictory evidence adduced on the point on behalf of the other defendants and observed: "The scale, however, is conclusively turned in favour of the testimony of Imtiaz Ali on this point by the evidence of Mr. Carnegy. Mr. Carnegy, whatever may be the effect of his evidence upon the questions of revocation, which will be hereafter considered, cannot, their Lordships think, be disbelieved as to the fact that a conversation did take place between him and the Maharaja in January 1870, and that in the course of that conversation the Maharaja did make a statement to the effect that he had had a clause inserted in Act I of 1869 to suit the identical case of the Dadwa. That statement is very material, inasmuch as it shows that the Maharaja considered that he had treated his grandson in all respects as a son. The Deputy Commissioner (Mr. King), speaking possibly in some measure from personal knowledge, says:—"It is not saying too much, the Court believes, to say that if the plaintiff had not existed, the clause as it stands would never have been enacted." Their Lordships, weighing the evidence in the cause, and proceeding on that alone, would come to the same conclusion. It appears, then, to their Lordships that, however uncertain it may be when the notion of making the Dadwa Sahib his successor was first conceived, or when that notion first became a fixed intention, it is established that the Maharaja had that intention as early as the date of the Dadwa Sahib's marriage; that, with that intention, he continually treated his grandson in fact as the son of the house would be treated, and not as a mere grandson by a daughter; and that, in order to effectuate his intention by operation of law, rather than by Will, he caused the clause in question to be inserted in the Statute."

The question then arises whether from the state of his mind, as indicated by his conduct, and the subsequent treatment, accorded by him, an inference can be drawn that he intended that the son of Musammatt Brijraj Kuar was to be his putrika putra in case no male issue was to be born to him by his wedded wife. There are indications, afforded by the Vedas, that in the earliest times a putrika-putra was constituted by the daughter being merely accorded the position of a son in the family, for a "brotherless female" was described as coming back to her father's family (Ghose's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, Volume I, pages 105 and 107). Manu says: "Through that son whom (a daughter), either not appointed or appointed, may bear to (a husband) of equal (caste), his maternal grandfather (has) a son's son; he shall present the funeral cake and take the estate." (Sacred Books of the East, Volume 25, page 354.) Gautama similarly says: "Some declare that (a daughter becomes) an appointed daughter solely by the intention (of the father)." (Ibid., Volume II, page 301.) So also Vishnu: "A damsel who has no brother is also (in every case considered) an appointed daughter, though she has not been given away according to the rule of an appointed daughter." (Ibid., Volume VII, page 62.) Other writers, however, took up a more stringent position as to the method in which a putrika-putra was to be constituted. Vrihaspati gives currency to both the views prevalent in his time and says: "Gautama has declared that a daughter is appointed after performing a sacrifice to Agni and Prajapati, others have said that she is an appointed daughter (putrika) who was merely supposed to be one by a man having no male issue." (Ibid., Volume XXXIII, page 376). The author of the Viramitrodaya observes: "That a son born of a daughter who is given in marriage without such express declaration may be the putrika-putra is determined in the following passage of the Mitakshara in the book of Scharya:—The epithet 'having brother' has been used to prevent the apprehension of the bride's appointment; by this it appears that a daughter may be appointed, though not declared to be so." (Sarkar's Viramitrodaya, page 103.) A mental declaration has thus been accepted by many writers as one of the recognised methods of appointing a daughter and of constituting her son a putrika putra. The ease with which a son could be obtained by adoption has had the effect in course of time of rendering affiliation in the form of putrika putra more or less uncommon, but it has by no means become obsolete, for the Mitakshara gives the putrika-putra the second or predominant position after the legitimate son and treats him in every respect as his substitute. In fact the institution of an illatom son-in-law in vogue in Malabar [Rumaran v. Narayanan (5)] or khanadamad recognised in the Punjab are but relics of the same [Roy's Customary Law, page 508, and Fateh Ali v. Muhammad Hayat (18)], and effect cannot legitimately be refused to an affiliation in the putrika-putra form, if it is made (Ghose's Hindu Law, Volume I, 3rd Edition, page 738; Sastri's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 129; Sarvadhikari's Hindu Law, page 252, and Sarkar's Law of Adoption, 2nd Edition, pages 132 and 166 A). How far a mental declaration, not published or made known to others and not accompanied by conduct of an unequivocal character, can be enforced against the husband of the daughter after her marriage may well be doubted; but in the case of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh, no such difficulty arises, because after the death of Maharaja Man Singh, his father practically set up a claim on the strength of an affiliation in some such form. In any event, the insertion at the instance of Maharaja Man Singh of a clause in section 22 of Act I of 1869 to give statutory recognition to an affiliation by treatment is not without its significance.

Whatever the actual position of Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh may have been under the Hindu Law, the statutory recognition extended by section 22, clause 4, of Act I of 1869 placed him in any case, for purposes of succession to Maharaja Man Singh and for constituting a stock of descent to his line, in the position of a son next only to a legitimate son. As the son of a daughter, his position but for clause 4 of section 22 would have been relegated to clause 11 of that section; and it would hardly be consistent to accede to him the position of a son inferior only to a legitimate son for the purpose of obtaining succession and to assign to him the position of the son of a daughter for the purpose of giving succession to the line in which he was affiliated. If the object of the affiliation was to bring him into the stock for the purpose of succession, as if he were "in every respect" a son, that object would be defeated by assigning to him the position of a son of a daughter within the meaning of clause 11 of section 22 and thus diverting the succession from the affliator's line. The son of a daughter treated by a Talukdar or grantee or his heir or legatee in all respects as his own son is described in clause 5 of section 22 as the "son" of such Talukdar, and not as his daughter's son; and if he is to be regarded as a "son" of the Talukdar, the diversion of the succession on his death, if he died without issue, from the paternal line of such Talukdar to the paternal line of the natural father of such son could hardly have been intended. He cannot be treated as a son for the purpose of clauses 4 and 5 of section 22 and the son of a daughter for the purpose of clause 11. The succession to such a son in the absence of any lineal descendant should, therefore, go to the line of the person who affiliated him and treated him in all respects as a son, and not to his natural line. Such a son is a creature of the Statute, and the position which the Statute assigns to him will regulate the succession after him. The plaintiff represents the senior branch of the family, to which Maharaja Man Singh belonged, and as such he would be entitled to succeed to the estate left by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh, if the latter be supposed to have died intestate.

The Will executed by Maharaja Sir Pratap Narain Singh and the adoption made by his junior widow in pursuance of the Will are, however, insuperable obstacles in the plaintiff's way. The Will was executed on the 17th July 1891 and registered on the 20th July 1891. The plaintiff does not any longer dispute the genuineness of that

LAL TRIBHAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Will. He asserts that it was obtained by the junior Maharani by means of undue influence and that it was subsequently revoked by the Maharaja himself. The story of undue influence, said to have been exerted by the junior Maharani, is not borne out by any reliable evidence. The suggestion is that on hearing that the Maharaja intended to execute a Will by which the Maharanis were to get a fixed maintenance allowance, the junior Maharani stopped taking food until a Will was executed by the Maharaja conformable to her wishes. Hakimuddin (P. W. No. 6) states that he was in the service of the Maharaja from 1879 to 1885 or 1886, that thereafter he did other odd works for the Maharaja at different times at Barabanki, Ajudhia and Gonda, that in July 1891 the Maharaja got him to write out a Will for him and signed it, and that on the next day he found the Maharaja uneasy and learnt from him that the junior Maharani had given up food and drink since the preceding night, saying that she would not live and give up her life, if he did not leave the estate to her. Hakimuddin then goes on to say that the Maharaja asked him and two other gentlemen stated to be dead and decided in consultation with them to execute another Will to put an end to the unpleasantness. The Maharaja had previously executed a Will on the 8th August 1877 (Exhibit 19), which was duly registered, and it is unlikely that he would have executed another Will in revocation of the same without getting it registered. Hakimuddin admits that he was heavily indebted to the Maharaja, a decree for arrears of rent having been obtained against him towards the end of 1884, which was several times executed, and in satisfaction thereof his property had been sold by auction. He was declared an insolvent in 1896 or 1897. The junior Maharani had also obtained a decree for arrears of rent against him since the death of the Maharaja. A notice of ejectment was issued against him in the year 1319 Fasli. He has about 302 bighas of land in his cultivation. He was not a likely person whose services could have been requisitioned by the Maharaja to have a Will faired out by him or whom he would have consulted as to the measures to be adopted to appease the wrath of the junior Maharani. The Will of the 17th July 1891 makes no reference to any such prior Will, and the story of an unregistered Will having been executed on the 14th July 1891 appears to be an entire myth. Suraj Bakhsh (P. W. No. 17) supports Hakimuddin as to a Will having been read out by the latter to the Maharaja, who signed it; but he is a man who has been out of employ for some time, having been indebted to the extent of about Rs. 3,000 from 14 or 15 years and adjudicated insolvent in consequence. He professes that he was in the private service of the Maharaja in 1889, but he admits that his pay will not be found entered in the estate accounts.

There is, moreover, evidence to show that the Maharaja got a Will drafted in consultation with the late Mr. Conlan, Barrister-at-Law of Allahabad, and sent a copy of that draft to the Local Government either for information or for approval. On the 2nd October 1890 Sir John Woodburn, the then Chief Secretary to the Local Government, returned the draft, saying that the Lieutenant-Governor had read it and that the Maharaja had done well to take the advice of a practised lawyer like Mr. Conlan (Exhibit A-20). The draft which accompanied that Will has also been produced and, except in regard to disinherision of the senior Maharani and the selection of a boy for adoption either from the paternal or maternal family, is very much similar to the Will executed by the Maharaja on the 17th July 1891 to which reference has already been made (Exhibit A 318). Is it likely that having consulted Mr. Conlan and having obtained the approval of the Local Government to the draft prepared by him, the Maharaja would seek the counsel or assistance of a person of the character and position of Hakimuddin and get a Will executed only to be revoked by a Will executed and registered more or less in accordance with the draft, which had been sent to the Local Government several months earlier?

In the declaration of trust executed by the Maharaja on the 23rd December 1895 (Exhibit 2) and another executed by him on the 12th July 1898 (Exhibit 3) a reference is made to a Will of the 14th July 1891. An improper advantage has evidently been taken of the mistaken date there referred to, to bolster up a Will of that date. In the declarations of trust aforesaid, the Maharaja stated that he had previously expressed a desire by a Will for the dedication of some property to religious purposes but the alleged Will of the 14th July 1891, a summary of which has been given by Hakimuddin (P. W. No. 6), contained, so far as the version of Hakimuddin went, no reference to any such declaration of intention; whereas the Will of the 17th July 1891, which had been faired out a day earlier and bore the 16th July 1891 as the date of its execution, and the draft sent to the Local Government prior to the 2nd October 1890, contain paragraphs, bearing out such an intention, and expressing a desire to carry it out thereafter. The reference to the Will of the 14th July 1891 in the place of that of the 17th July 1891 in the declarations of trust aforesaid was obviously due to some clerical mistake or to a mistake of memory, and it does not in any way support the theory which the plaintiff has set up.

The alleged revocation of the Will of the 17th July 1891 by a letter, said to have been written to the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division on the 26th October 1906, is also not borne out by any reliable evidence. The first witness adduced on the point is Hakim Ismail Khan (P. W. No. 136), who claims to have been in the service of the Maharaja up to four or five years prior to his death. He asserts that about two months and a half or three months prior to the death of the Maharaja, he happened to visit him and found a paper lying neatly written, which he guessed might be his Will. He had, according to his own statement, the imprudence to start reading it attentively, and on the Maharaja enquiring what he was reading and finding that it was his Will, he was asked by the Maharaja to read it first himself and then to read it out to him. He goes on to say that he read it out to him and asked him what sort of a Will it was, as he had previously made one before. The Maharaja is said to have replied that he wrote it in cancellation of the previous Will and explained that the acts, for which he deprived the senior Maharani of the succession to his estate, had been committed by the junior Maharani also. It is said that the Maharaja then signed that paper himself and requested him and his Ayurvedic physician, Dwarka Nath Sen, to attest it as witnesses. No such Will has, however, been produced. It is not suggested that it was registered. Kaviraj Dwarka Nath Sen, before whom the said Will is stated to have been executed, is dead, and the falsity of this witness is apparent from the fact that he states that Dwarka Nath Sen was present when the alleged Will was executed 2½ or 3 months before the death of the Maharaja, whereas from the letter of the Kaviraj to the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad dated the 13th January 1907 (Exhibit A-359) and another to the Special Manager of the Ajudhia Estate dated the 23rd June 1907 (Exhibit A-360) demanding payment of the bill for his attendance on the Maharaja, it is apparent that he did not visit Ajudhia and start his medical treatment till the 16th October 1906, that is, till long after the date of the alleged revocation. It is unlikely that the Maharaja would have taken into confidence a person of the position of Hakim Ismail Khan by talking to him about the misconduct of either his senior or junior Maharani, and it is still less likely that had he intended to revoke his previous Will, he would have done so except by means of a registered instrument. The witness appears to have been approached by the plaintiff about 5 or 6 days before he gave his evidence. He pays no income-tax and is a man of no position, and his evidence is not entitled to any weight.

Dr. Mohini Mohan Chatterji, another witness of the plaintiff (P. W. No. 159), says that in the course of a conversation with the Maharaja, the latter told him that he had an important business to finish in connection with the Will which he had previously executed in favour of the junior Maharani, inasmuch as he said "she is not worthy of it or does not deserve it;" but apart from the improbability of the Maharaja making such statement to him, his evidence is too vague to be entitled to any weight. According to him, the Maharaja said so to him when he went to see him otherwise than for his treatment between the 20th and 27th October 1906, but Hakim Ismail Khan suggests that a Will, revoking the previous one, had already been executed by the Maharaja about $2\frac{1}{2}$ months or 3 months before his death.

The next witness on the point is Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal (P. W. No. 56), who was in the service of the Maharaja and, after his death, of the Court of Wards till his resignation in 1913. He claims to have been doing the confidential work of the Maharaja and has produced from his custody the draft of a letter (Exhibit 76), which the Maharaja is alleged to have sent to the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division on the 26th October 1906. The draft purports to inform Mr. Hamblin, the Commissioner, that the Maharaja had cancelled all his previous Wills, that the last Will about which he had spoken to him was not executed and that he hoped to be able to meet him shortly in connection therewith. It also contained a request that in case he was unable to stir about, Mr. Hamblin might take the trouble to come over. It is impossible, however, that any such letter could have been written by the Maharaja or sent to Mr. Hamblin, for on the 6th November 1906, a day before the death of the Maharaja, Mr. Hamblin wrote to Mr. Hailey, the Secretary to the Board of Revenue (Exhibit A-390), that the Maharaja was reported to be seriously ill and that at that moment he was far from well, that as far as he knew the Maharaja had made a Will in favour of his junior Maharani and that in the event of his illness terminating fatally, instructions might be issued as to what steps, if any, he should take. In that letter, he stated that he had seen the Maharaja in connection with the loan of 60 lakhs, which he asked for from the Government, and the conditions he wanted to make before he accepted the management of his estate by the Court of Wards; and it is unlikely that had he received any letter from the Maharaja of the kind suggested, he would not have referred to it and contented himself with saying that as far as he knew the Maharaja had made a Will in favour of his junior Maharani. On the 4th November 1906 Mr. Hamblin had written a letter to the Maharaja himself in reply to one of his, which contained no reference to any such revocation (Exhibit 79). In another letter sent by Mr. Hamblin to Mr. Hailey, a day after the death of the Maharaja (Exhibit A-391), Mr. Hamblin reiterated: "It will be ascertained as soon as possible who is the heir under the Will; it is at present believed the junior Maharani will succeed and that she has been given power to adopt." A Will of such a character would be entirely inconsistent with what Hakim Ismail Khan and Dr. Mohini Mohan Chatterji would ask us to believe. Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal states that Mr. Hamblin called on the Maharaja on the 6th or 7th November 1906, after a letter corresponding to the draft (Exhibit 76) was sent, but the Maharaja was too ill to meet Mr. Hamblin. The draft does not bear the signature of the Maharaja, and from the evidence of Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal, it would seem that the execution of the alleged last Will had not been completed, for the Maharaja had told him that he would have to sign the Will and that he could see it then.

The manner in which the draft was produced and the stage at which it was tendered also render its genuineness as a draft, dictated by the Maharaja, open to serious suspicion. On the 10th November 1906, Babu Balakram handed over the original Will of the Maharaja dated the 17th July 1891 on behalf of the junior Maharani to Mr. Pert, the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad (vide the evidence of Mr. Pert, D. W. No. 60, and Exhibit A-361). Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal continued in the service of the Court of Wards till 1913. A dispute arose on the death of the Maharaja in the mutation proceeding in consequence of an objection filed by the senior Maharani. The junior Maharani wrote to Rai Sri Ram Bahadur, the legal adviser and friend of the late Maharaja, in connection therewith. Rai Sri Ram Bahadur wrote in reply (Exhibit 81) that he was much grieved to hear that the senior Maharani had failed to respect the wishes of the late Maharaja and filed an objection in the mutation proceeding against the entry of the name of the junior Maharani in the revenue register. On the back of that letter was endorsed a draft in pencil of the reply sent by the junior Maharani to Rai Sri Ram Bahadur, thanking him for his letter and for the assurance of help and sympathy conveyed to her in her affliction. If the Maharaja had revoked his Will of the 17th July 1891 in favour of the junior Maharani within the knowledge of Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal, as is now suggested, is it likely that Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal would have remained silent and mentioned to no one that the Maharaja had revoked his Will and sent a letter to the Commissioner to that effect?

Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal admits that he had an interview with the plaintiff in September or October 1914, before he had given evidence, and that he did not tell him at the time that the Maharaja had sent such a letter to the Commissioner. He pretends that he did not then remember it and discovered the draft among his papers at Allahabad in October 1915, when the plaintiff asked him again to look for it. He is not a man holding any property, and, according to his own admission, has been connected with a speculative claim to another estate in which his brother was financing the claimant to the extent of a 5½ annas share on their joint behalf. His brother had financed another litigation before, and from the past conduct of the witness in not having made any mention of the revocation before and his character as a person interested in speculation, the authenticity of the alleged drafts seems to be open to serious doubt.

There is, on the other hand, a considerable amount of independent evidence to establish that the Maharaja was passionately attached to his junior Maharani and had earnestly entreated all his friends in position or authority to help her in the event of his death. Sir Harcourt Butler visited the Maharaja on the 14th October 1906, and from his evidence and the note of his interview which he made at the time (Exhibit A) it is clear that the Will in favour of the junior Maharani dated the 17th July 1891 was the last Will which the Maharaja had executed up to that date. Sir Harcourt Butler states that at the end of the interview the Maharaja informed him that he had made a Will in favour of the second Maharani which, as he said, was "registered with Colonel Currie," or more accurately speaking, attested by him, and, laying the hand of the Maharani who was inside the parda in his, he committed her to his care. The Raja of Mahmudabad similarly visited the Maharaja about 15 or 20 days before his death and had conversed with him in private. The Maharaja told him that he did not hope to survive the disease from which he was suffering, and his death-bed request to him was that he should help the junior Maharani, in whose favour he had already executed a Will according to the draft, which he had shown him at Lucknow, and that the Raja should try that his estate should not be put under the management of the Court of Wards in a regular way but might be put under the management of a European manager under the supervision of the Local Government in the event of his death, that he should not let the Maharani adopt a boy from the family of Lal Triloki Nath Singh and further that he should try as far as possible to save the estate from being sold in lieu of his debt. The Raja says that the draft of that Will had been shown to him at Lucknow about a year or a year and a half before the death of the Maharaja and that the Maharaja had shown him several drafts "probably after 1895", all of which were in favour of the junior Maharani. It is possible that the Raja may have had a very hazy idea of the date or period, or that what the Raja describes as a draft was really a copy of the Will, which the Maharaja had executed on the 17th July 1891. It is also possible that the Maharaja may have prepared drafts after 1895 with the object of altering that Will in certain particulars; but it is extremely unlikely that the Maharaja had executed a Will, such as Hakim Ismail Khan suggests, revoking that of the 17th July 1891 and diverting the bequest from the junior Maharani for the Raja deposes that all the drafts which were shown to him were in favour of the junior Maharani and the last conversation which the Raja had with the Maharani about 15 or 20 days before the death of the latter tended in the same direction. It is not improbable at any rate that the drafts to which the Raja refers may have been shown to him before 1891, for the Raja has no positive recollection of the exact time when he saw them.

Thakur Harihar Bakhsh Singh (D. W. No. 54), a respectable Talukdar, holding estates in the Sitapur and Bara Banki districts and paying a revenue of Rs. 54,000 a year, also bears testimony to having seen the Maharaja for the last time 8 or 10 days before the death of the latter, while he was under the treatment of Kaviraj Dwarka Nath Sen. The Maharaja then told him that in case he died, the witness should respect the junior Maharani as much as he respected him and that he should help her because, he said, he had executed and registered a Will in her favour in which he had given her full powers after him.

Baqar Husain (D. W. No. 9), who was one of the attesting witnesses to the Will of the 17th July 1891, states that he had visited the Maharaja several times during his illness and that the Maharaja had told him that he had a mind to adopt a boy of the family and then to lead the life of a sanyasi and that, when reminded of the Will, he said that his Will was the same.

Maharaja Prodyot Kumar Tagore (D. W. No. 78) also states that on the occasion of a visit of the Maharaja to Calcutta the latter told his father, Maharaja Sir Jotindro Mohan Tagore, with whom he was staying, that it was not possible for his junior Maharani to visit Calcutta on account of her ill-health and that she was a very devoted wife and used to look after him and nurse him very much in spite of her bad health. He further told him that he had made a Will in which he had given the Maharani the power to adopt and also made provision for the future management of his estate. The evidence of these witnesses has not been controverted and leaves hardly any room for doubt that the Will of the 17th July 1891 is the last and subsisting Will of Maharaja and that the Maharaja intended that the junior Maharani should succeed him after his death.

In any event no Will revoking that of the 17th July 1891 is forthcoming and in its absence the Will of the 17th July 1891 must have legal effect. Section 57 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), which has been extended by section 19 of Act I of 1869 to the Wills of talukdars, lays down that no unprivileged Will shall be revoked otherwise than by another Will or codicil, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same and executed in the manner in which an unprivileged Will is required to be executed or by the burning, tearing or otherwise destroying the same by the testator or by some person in his presence and by his direction with the intention of revoking the same. The original Will of the 17th July 1891 was in this case not destroyed and its revocation has not been proved in the manner required by law. In Lachman Singh v. Umrao Singh (19), where a Will made by a testator was said to have been revoked in a written statement and a plaint filed by him in other cases, it was held that such a revocation could not take effect under section 57 of the Indian Succession Act. In Haidar Ali v. Tasadduk Rasul Khan (20), where a Will made by a talukdar was stated to have been revoked by another Will executed after Act I of 1869 came into force but not registered in accordance with section 20 of that Act, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the latter, being inoperative as to the talukdari estate, could not revoke the previous Will, which was not rendered inoperative by any of its provisions. In Sahib Mirza v. Umda Khanam (12), Lord Macnaghten pointed out that a Will duly executed could not be treated as revoked, either wholly or in part, by a Will which was not forthcoming, and the contents of which could not definitely be ascertained, and that it was not enough to show that the Will which was not forthcoming differed from the earlier one, if it could not be shown in what the difference consisted. This observation applies with particular force to the several drafts which the Raja of Mahmudabad says the Maharaja had shown to him. It is also noticeable that the form in which the Maharaja used to subscribe himself in his letters to Mr. Hamblin (Exhibit A 351) is different from that in which the draft produced by Nirodh Chandra Ghoshal (Exhibit 76) described him. The story of the alleged revocation appears to be entirely unfounded.

In pursuance of the above Will the junior Maharani adopted Dukh Haran Nath Singh, the second son of Adika Nath Singh, on the 12th February 1903, naming him Jagdam-bika Pratap Narain Singh after his adoption. The adoption is proved by the evidence of several respectable witnesses, including the junior Maharani, and is also corroborated by the deed of adoption, formally executed and registered by her on that date (Exhibit A-139). The fact of the adoption has not been seriously disputed by the plaintiff either in this Court or in the Court below, and it is unnecessary to refer to that evidence in detail. Apart from the alleged revocation of the Will of the 17th July 1891 by the Maharaja, which has not been established, the plaintiff impeaches the validity of the adoption on several grounds. It was suggested that the junior Maharani was not the married wife of the late Maharaja, that she was unchaste and was not, therefore, qualified to make the adoption according to the Hindu Law, that the natural mother of the boy adopted was of the same gotra as the natural father of the late Maharaja, in consequence of which a marriage between the late Maharaja and the natural mother of the adopted boy could not have been legal, that Adika Nath Singh, the natural father of the adopted boy, was an outcaste, that the boy was purchased for a money consideration, and that the requisite ceremonies of adoption had not been performed.

It is not now disputed that the junior Maharani was married to the late Maharaja. There is nothing to show that that marriage was not absolutely legal. The evidence adduced to prove the alleged unchastity of the junior Maharani with Adika Nath Singh or other persons has been rightly disbelieved by the learned Additional Judge, and I agree with my learned colleague, who has discussed that evidence in detail, that the imputations made are baseless and without any foundation.

The gotra of Adika Nath Singh was Girg and that of his wife, Musammatt Chandra Kali, the mother of the adopted boy, before her marriage, as stated by Bishwa Nath (D. W. No. 18) and Ramdeo (D. W. No. 20) and other witnesses, was Mahris. The Maharaja belonged originally to the Bharadwaj gotra and had according to his own statement gone into the Girg gotra by reason of his affiliation by Maharaja Man Singh. In either view the gotra of the natural mother of the adopted boy before her marriage was different from that of the late Maharaja and the validity of the adoption cannot, therefore, be impugned on that ground. The evidence produced by the plaintiff that Ram Sahai, the father of Musammatt Chandra Kali, belonged to Bharadwaj gotra is refuted by the evidence of persons belonging to the family of Ram Sahai, and cannot be trusted.

There is, moreover, evidence to show that among Sakaldipi Brahmans, that is, in the caste to which the Maharaja belonged, marriages can take place between the same gotra. Such marriages are generally condemned by Hindu law-givers, but where owing to the smallness of the community or other cause, they do take place outside the pale of prohibited degrees, they are apart from custom not necessarily void. The principle of factum valet applies to them (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 103, and Shastri's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, Volume I, pages 99 and 100).

The evidence adduced to establish that Adika Nath Singh was outcasted by the Maharaja owing to his intrigue with the junior Maharani is also unsatisfactory, and the allegation that the boy was purchased by the junior Maharani for taking in adoption is not borne out by any reliable testimony. The supply of clothes or ornaments to the parents of the boy to be adopted or the payment of money therefor in anticipation of the adoption cannot invalidate the adoption or be taken to indicate that it was made from sinful or improper motives. In Murugappa Chetti v. Nagappa Chetti (17) and Mahableshwar Fonda v. Durgabai (21) adoptions were upheld, though in each case it was shown that some money had been paid or promised to the natural father of the adopted boy in consideration of his giving his son in adoption. Adika Nath Singh (D. W. No. 51) states in his evidence that he got a shawl and other clothes on the occasion of adoption, as did the other members of the family of Maharaja Man Singh and Babu Narsingh

LAL TRIBJAWAN NATH SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD.

Narain Singh. Adika Nath Singh was himself a relation of the late Maharaja, and the present of articles of that character to relations at the time of adoption, as in the case of a marriage in the family, is not uncommon.

The evidence of Ganesh Dat Shastri (D. W. No. 13), Lal Adika Nath Singh (D. W. No. 51) and the junior Maharani (D. W. No. 53) shows that the requisite ceremonies for adoption were duly performed. In fact, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shri Shrinivas Pandit (22), the performance of ceremonies can be dispensed with, if the adoptive father and the adopted boy belong to the same gotra, which would be the case, if the late Maharaja was the putrika-putra of Maharaja Man Singh.

It is also contended that the adoption was brought about by the pressure, exercised by the officials of the time and some of the talukdars on the junior Maharani; but the only evidence which has been pointed out in support of that contention is a letter sent by Sir John Hewett, the then Lieutenant-Governor of these provinces, to the junior Maharani on the 18th July 1906, advising her to adopt a boy in accordance with the wishes of her late husband (Exhibit 276), and the statement of the junior Maharani (D. W. No. 53) in the present case that if she had not been advised to make the adoption, she would have made it after 12 years, so that she might have been spared the disgrace of being dragged into Court by the present suit. An advice given from the best of motives does not, however, amount to the exercise of undue influence. The letter sent by the junior Maharani to Mr. (now Sir) Harcourt Butler on the 7th August 1908 (Exhibit 266), which was sent after the junior Maharani had received the letter of Sir John Hewett, and a deputation of some of the leading talukdars, moreover, clearly show that the Maharani had voluntarily agreed to make the adoption, realising that it was to the interests of herself and her estate that she should do so, so long as her personal comfort, that is the possession of the estate by her for her life, was not interfered with. Throughout the process of selection and the ceremonies which attended the adoption, legal advice was available to her; and however much she may now feel pestered by the suit and the imputations which have been made against her in it, the suggestion that she was induced to make the adoption by undue influence cannot for a moment be entertained.

It is next argued that the adoption made did not effectuate the intention of the testator as expressed in his Will and that the devise in his favour consequently failed: in other words, it is contended that the intention of the testator was that his estate was to remain impartible and that the adopted son was to succeed to the property on the death of the junior Maharani under section 22, clause 8 of Act I of 1869, so as to render the rule of succession laid down in section 22 applicable to its subsequent devolution. As a general rule, a devise in favour of an undesignated or unascertained person in a particular character may fail, if the person in whose favour the devise was made fails to occupy that character. A bequest in favour of an adopted son may, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (23) and Lali v. Murlidhar (24) fail, if the adoption subsequently proves to be invalid and the devisee does not fulfil the character in which the devise was made. But the adoption in the present case is not invalid. The boy adopted by the junior Maharani fulfils the character of an adopted son, though he succeeds to the property as a devisee and not under clause 8 of section 22 of Act I of 1869. By clause seven of his Will, the testator provided that the junior Maharani shall be competent to adopt a boy from his paternal or maternal family, and that, after the death of the junior Maharani, such adopted son shall, as contemplated by clause 8 of section 22 of Act I of 1869, be the successor and absolute owner of all the moveable and immoveable properties belonging to him. The intention of the testator was to emphasize that the son to be adopted by the junior Maharani was not to dispossess her during her life, for in addition to his referring to clause 8 of section 22, which empowered a widow making an adoption to remain in possession for her life, he went on to say that the son to be adopted shall not be entitled to possession till after the death of his junior Maharani and that the junior Maharani too shall have no power to give him possession during her lifetime. The junior Maharani was not an heir to the estate within the meaning of clause 8 of section 22, because the senior Maharani was alive at the time of the death of the testator. No power to adopt was given to the senior Maharani. The adoption was in fact made by the junior Maharani, and clause 8 of section 22 could not, therefore, apply to him. Apart from the devise, the adopted son could have succeeded to the estate only under clause 9 of section 22 on the death of both the senior and the junior Maharanis; but whether he does succeed to it under the devise or under clause 9 of section 22 or under clause 11 of section 22, the estate continues to be impartible in his hands. If the Maharaja had died intestate after authorizing the junior Maharani by a writing to adopt a son but without making any devise in her or his favour, the son so adopted would have succeeded to the estate after the death of the senior and the junior Maharanis or, in other words, to a vested remainder therein under clause 9 or clause 11; and if so, sections 13 and 14 of Act I of 1869 are wide enough to keep the estate within the Act. Where property goes to a widow for her life with a vested remainder to another, the combined interest of the former and the latter constitutes the bundle of rights known as the estate within the meaning of section 2 of Act I of 1869 and the interests of the former as much as of the latter may in that sense be regarded as different portions of the same estate. In Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal Kunwar (14), where a talukdar, who died childless but leaving two widows, bequeathed to the senior Maharani his entire estate and gave her a power to adopt a son to him and at the same time provided maintenance for both his widows after such adoption, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that as, if there had been no Will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, there was an interest which brought her within the meaning of section 13, paragraph 1, of Act I of 1869, so as to make the maintenance bequeathed to her by the Will payable out of the entire estate though the Will was unregistered. In Bhaiy Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (15) it was held that the word "intestate" in section 13, sub-section 1 of Act I of 1869, meant intestate as to the talukdari estate, and that a son adopted under authority conferred in writing by a talukdar was not excluded from the exception contained in that section. The adoption being valid under the Hindu Law, the adopted son would in any case succeed to the vested remainder under clause 11 of section 22, and it cannot be said that the estate has been excluded from the operation of section 22 and has become partible in his hands.

In regard to the other points raised in the appeal, I have nothing to add to the judgment of my learned colleague, with whose conclusions I am in entire agreement. I, therefore, agree in dismissing the appeal with costs except in regard to the extra fee of Rs. 3,000 awarded by the Court below to the senior Maharani, which will be expunged from the decree, inasmuch as it was not certified to that Court before the commencement of arguments as required by the Rules.

Appeal dismissed.

DIVAKAR SINGH v. RAMAMURTHI NAIDU.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 660 OF 1917.

March 15, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Phillips and Mr.
Justice Krishnan.DIVAKAR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

versus

A. RAMAMURTHI NAIDU—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 165, 173—Search for stolen property, when can be allowed—Investigation by Police after submission of report, legality of.

Section 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not authorize a general search for stolen property. A search for specific stolen property is, however, allowed by the section.

Bisser Misser v. Emperor, 20 Ind. Cas. 229; 41 C. 261; 17 C. W. N. 1209; 14 Cr. L. J. 405, followed.Prankhang v. Emperor, 17 Ind. Cas. 76; 16 C. W. N. 1078; 13 Cr. L. J. 764, distinguished.

The number of investigations into a crime that can be made by the Police is not limited by law and the Police, after submitting a report of an investigation, have power to make further investigation on receipt of further information.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 154 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 18 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Ramadoss (with him Mr. V. Rathnasomanathan), for the Appellant.—The search was illegal and is not authorised by the terms of section 165, Criminal Procedure Code. Bajrangji Gope v. Emperor (1). The second investigation by the Police was illegal, as the result of the first investigation was embodied in a report.Mr. C. Narasimhachariar, for the Respondent.—The search was for specific stolen property and was legal. Bisser Misser v. Emperor (2). The search was bona fide and plaintiff could not claim damages. The Police have ample powers of investigation on receipt of fresh information.

JUDGMENT.—Upon the finding that the Sub-Inspector of Guntur conducted the search there can be no question of defendant's jurisdiction over the place searched. The finding is objected to on the ground that no specific issue was raised on the point, but the plea that the defendant did not himself conduct the search, but only searched the house as the Sub-Inspector's assistant, was specifically raised in the written statement and comes within the scope of issue I. Even otherwise it is questionable whether defendant, as investigating Police Officer, was not attached to Guntur Police station by the orders of his superiors, but this point does not seem to have been considered.

(1) 9 Ind. Cas. 64; 38 C. 304; 15 C. W. N. 343; 13 C. L. J. 639; 12 Cr. L. J. 8.

(2) 20 Ind. Cas. 229; 41 C. 261; 17 C. W. N. 1209; 14 Cr. L. J. 405.

The contention chiefly relied on by Mr. Ramadoss is that the search was wholly illegal inasmuch as section 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not give authority to search for stolen property. This is a somewhat startling proposition put in this way, and it is based on the rulings in Bajrangji Gope v. Emperor (1) and Prankhang v. Emperor (3). These two cases were considered in Bisser Misser v. Emperor (2), where it was held that they were only authority for the proposition that section 165, Criminal Procedure Code, does not authorise a general search for stolen property, as opposed to a search for specific stolen property. This latter form of search, which is the form in the case now under our consideration, was expressly held to be legal and it was remarked that its legality had never been questioned since the case decided in Mahomed Jackariah and Co. v. Ahmed Mahomad (4). We agree in their view and hold that the present search was not illegal. It has been found to have been made bona fide and, therefore, plaintiff is not entitled to damages.

Another contention is put forward that when a report of investigation has been sent in under section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Police has no further powers of investigation, but this argument may be briefly met by the remark that the number of investigations into a crime is not limited by law and that when one has been completed another may be begun on further information received.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Court, duty of, to pass orders on petitions.*

Both under the Criminal Procedure Code and under section 107 of the Government of India Act, the High Court has power to direct a Sessions Judge to re-hear an appeal after obtaining additional evidence. [p. 275, col. 1.]

When petitions are made to the Court, it is improper merely to direct them to be filed with the record. [p. 275, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Patna.

Messrs. Yunus, Yunus Muhammad and Rai
Trithulan Nath Sahay, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioner Zamiruddin has been sentenced under section 498, Indian Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for one year and the petitioner Nurul Wahab to rigorous imprisonment for nine months and a fine of Rs. 200.. Nourangi and Thakur Singh have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months each under sections 498 and 114, Indian Penal Code. The woman in regard to whom these offences are alleged to have been committed is Saleha, the wife of Saiyid Hassan.

It appears that the petitioners were defended by Counsel before the Deputy Magistrate who took cognizance of the case and that in spite of a full and protracted trial, numerous petitions were made to the Court by the accused protesting inter alia on the ground that evidence likely to assist the defence had been improperly excluded. These complaints were repeated before the Sessions Judge in appeal but were found to have no substance. Dissatisfied with the learned Judge's order the petitioners have come to this Court in revision.

We have heard the parties at great length and have come to the conclusion that the learned Sessions Judge should have followed the procedure prescribed by section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, and have directed the trial Court to allow the accused to adduce the additional evidence which they desired him to take.

The two witnesses from Mirzapore were clearly necessary for the defence of the accused Nurul Wahab and we are not satisfied that there was any such negligence on the part of the accused in the matter of taking out process as would have warranted a refusal to procure the attendance of the witnesses. It is said that the accused made no clear and definite prayer on the 11th May for issue of fresh processes. It is difficult to understand this explanation in the face of the accused's Counsel's repeated protests on the 11th May that he was not prepared to argue the case till his defence was completed. The learned Deputy Magistrate also states in his explanation that it was the accused's duty to supply the certified copy of a document the original of which he had summoned one of the Mirzapore witnesses to produce, and likewise to deposit the diet and travelling expenses of the witnesses. The answer to these objections is that the Court never asked the accused to take these steps. On the contrary the Court issued processes twice for the attendance of these witnesses without making any such demands. In our opinion the Court having once issued process was bound to exhaust all the processes allowed by law, unless it was clearly shown that the accused was guilty of wilful obstruction and delay.

We are also of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge should have directed the trial Court to recall Abdul Karim for further cross-examination in regard to the validity of the marriage. We are not satisfied that the questions which the accused's Counsel desired to put were irrelevant.

We also think that the request to recall Musammât Sabuzni should have been granted. The learned Magistrate has unfortunately kept no record of the questions which he disallowed on the ground of irrelevance.

In this connection we have to observe that it is to be regretted that the learned

TAPRINESSA v. EMPEROR.

Deputy Magistrate, who appears to have otherwise tried the case with great care and patience, should have omitted to record orders on the numerous petitions filed by the accused, and that he should have allowed the impression to be created that the imputations as to his conduct of the trial remained unchallenged. It has been repeatedly held that when petitions are made to the Court, it is improper merely to direct them to be filed with the record.

The result is that the order of the learned Sessions Judge dismissing the appeal is set aside and the appeal restored. We direct that the appeal be re-heard after due attention to the observations herein made. Upon receiving the additional evidence certified by the trial Court the learned Judge will dispose of the appeal according to law.

The learned Counsel for the petitioners contends that this Court, in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, has no authority to make this order and he relies upon the case of Gajanand Thakur v. Emperor (1). That case does not deal with the powers of this Court as a Court of revision and is certainly no authority for the contention that in the present case we cannot interfere except to direct a re-trial. In our opinion both under the Criminal Procedure Code and under section 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915, this Court has full jurisdiction and power to direct the learned Sessions Judge to re-hear the appeal after obtaining the additional evidence. It would be utterly unreasonable to accede to the demand that because two defence witnesses have not been examined and because the cross examination of two prosecution witnesses was not sufficiently full, the whole case should be re-tried de novo.

As the Sessions Judge of Patna has already formed an opinion on the evidence we transfer the appeal to the file of the Sessions Judge of Shahabad and direct that the petitioners be released on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate of Patna to appear before the Sessions Judge of Shahabad when called upon to do so.

Let the record be sent through the Sessions Judge of Patna to the District Magistrate of Patna and then by the last named officer to the Sessions Judge of Shahabad, who will pass the necessary orders under section 428, Criminal Procedure Code.

THORNBILL, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 204 OF 1918.

June 28, 1918.

TAPRINESSA—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 201, 203, 211, offences under—Accomplice, whether can be convicted under ss. 201, 203—False information to Police implicating innocent man—Offence—Intention.

A person who gives false information to the Police, accusing another of an offence of murder in order to screen the real offender, commits offences not only under sections 201 and 203, Indian Penal Code, but also under section 211. [p 276, col 2; p. 277, col. 1.]

The husband of the accused having been murdered at night, she gave information to the Police falsely implicating a certain person:

Held, that although there were circumstances of grave suspicion against the accused woman, as being an accomplice, yet as it would be impossible on the record as it stood to hold that she was the murderer or one of the murderers, she could be convicted under sections 201 and 203, Indian Penal Code. [p. 277, col. 1.]

Empress v. Behala Bibi, 6 C. 789; 8 C. L. R. 207; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 511 and Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress, 22 C. 638; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 425, doubted and distinguished.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hemendranath Basu, for the Appellant.—On the facts found by the Sessions Judge and on the conclusions arrived at by him, it would appear that the Judge held the accused to be an accomplice in the murder of the deceased. An accomplice could not be convicted under section 201 of the Penal Code. If she was an accomplice, as held by the Sessions Judge, the statement she had made to the Police was only to exculpate herself by implicating another. Refers to Empress v. Behala Bibi (1) and Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (2).

TAPRINESSA v. EMPEROR.

The statement must have been made not in answers to questions but must have been volunteered. Refers to Queen v. Joynarain Patro (3). So the only statement on which any conviction could be based was the first information, which was only voluntary.

[TEUNON, J.—The learned Judge does not convict her under section 211, but under section 201 of the Penal Code as he says she gave false evidence only to screen herself and not to inculpate any other man. But if she cannot screen herself without inculpating another, then section 201 applies.]

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant before us one Taprinessa has been convicted under sections 201 and 203 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced under the first named section to three years' rigorous imprisonment and under the second to two years' rigorous imprisonment, the two sentences to run concurrently. It appears that on the night of the 13th July 1917 the husband of this woman named Sanghi was murdered, it would seem, shortly after midnight. The medical evidence shows that the cause of death was a blow with some cutting weapon, such as a dao or knife, on the right side of the neck cutting the anterior and internal jugular veins and also cutting into the third cervical vertebra and resulting, in the opinion of the medical officer, in instantaneous death. On the following morning the appellant accompanied the village Chowkidar, one Idhai, to the local Thanah and there with a number of details gave an account of the murder. She charged one Afruddin, her next door neighbour, as one of the murderers.

The substantial question in the case before the learned Sessions Judge and in this appeal before us is whether that charge and the account given were false and were known by the appellant to be false. Afruddin has been examined as a witness in this case and he has denied the commission of this murder or being any party thereto. His denial is corroborated by the absence, as the Judge finds, of any motive on his part to commit this murder and by all his subsequent conduct. We have no doubt, therefore, that in so far as she charged this man with murder, that charge was not true.

The further question is, whether she knew that it was a false charge that she was making. The circumstances on which the Judge relies as showing that the woman was in fact an accomplice in the murder, though not sufficient to enable him or us to come to such a finding, are yet sufficient to show that in naming Afruddin as one of the murderers she knew that she was stating what was not true. These circumstances, shortly stated, are these: The fact that to the neighbours whom she saw in the morning following the occurrence she named no one; that she named Afruddin for the first time on her way with the Chowkidar to the Thana; that on the next following day she made to the investigating Sub-Inspector an entirely different statement implicating three others and that on the 26th July she submitted from jail a petition in which she combines her two stories. That the charge was intentionally false is also clear by the delay that the woman made in giving the alarm or in arousing her neighbours, by the fact that at an earlier stage of the night she sought to call out one of her neighbours on a false pretext, by the fact that on the clothes she was wearing there were no stains of blood and by the absence of any signs of use of force or violence in the house in which she and her husband went to bed for the night. All these circumstances go to show that she knows far more about this murder than she was prepared to admit either at the time when she gave the first information or now. The reasonable inference from all this is that she in fact knew who the murderers were and that from some motive best known to her, possibly because of her quarrels some days before with Afruddin's wife, she chose intentionally to implicate him.

There can be no doubt, therefore, that the conviction under section 201 has been properly arrived at, and indeed we are unable to understand the process of reasoning by which the Judge was led to acquit the woman of the charge under section 211, Indian Penal Code. We can only suppose that he has overlooked the distinction between motive and intention. Not content with screening the real offenders the woman proceeded further falsely to implicate an innocent person. It cannot be supposed that a person who falsely brings such a grave charge against another does not know that the inevitable result will be injury to that person, and on general principles it should have been held that she intended that injury.

Lastly it has been argued in law that as the circumstances point to this woman being an accomplice in the murder she could not in law be convicted of the offence charged under sections 201 and 203, and in support of this contention reliance is placed upon the cases reported as Empress v. Behala Bibi (1) and Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (2). We have, however, pointed out that though there are circumstances of grave suspicion against this woman, it would be impossible on the record as it stands to hold that she was the murderer or one of the murderers. That being so, even assuming that the cases reported as Empress v. Behala Bibi (1) and Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (2) are properly decided on their own facts, still the present case may be distinguished and in this connection we may refer to the case of Sumanta Dhupi v. Emperor (4). As we have said in the present case the conviction, in our opinion, is legal and proper.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal.

Before concluding we desire to say that we do not agree with the Sessions Judge in his criticisms on the action of the Magistrate before whom the woman Taprinessa was produced on the 17th July. Though it might have been more happily worded, the caution given by the Magistrate to the woman was in substance sound and proper.

Appeal dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 117, 528, 530—Bad livelihood proceedings—Notice, issue of, by Magistrate to person not within jurisdiction, legality of—Proceedings drawn up on reference by District Magistrate, effect of, on want of jurisdiction—Joint trial of two persons, legality of—Misjoinder—Undivided members of Hindu family, liability of, for misconduct of particular members—Evidence, nature of—Rumour and hearsay, admissibility of—'Repute', meaning of—Notice to accused, form and contents of—Landlord keeping tenants of bad character, liability of—Forest offences—Statements in office files, admissibility of.

The issue of notice under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a formal matter and the section limits the power to issue the notice to the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the accused is. [p. 278, col. 2.]

The issue of a notice under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, is a judicial act to be exercised after due consideration of the materials placed before the Magistrate, and not merely an executive order to be passed as a matter of course on a complaint by the Police. The issue of a notice by a Magistrate without jurisdiction cannot be justified on the ground that it was drawn up under orders from the District Magistrate. [p. 278, col. 2; p. 279, col. 1.]

A defect in the issue of the notice is not a mere irregularity, but the question is one of jurisdiction and falls under section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 279, col. 2.]

Ohiduddin Choudhury v. Emperor, 44 Ind. Cas. 122; 19 Cr. L. J. 266, dissented from.

It is not legal to try two persons jointly charged under section 110 (f) of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 280, col. 1.]

The test to be applied in cases where a plea of misjoinder is raised is whether there has been habitual association between the persons charged in respect of the misconduct alleged in the complaint. [p. 279, col. 2.]

The fact that persons are members of an undivided family would not by itself render each member liable for the misconduct of any other member, and, where they are living separately, there is not even the presumption that one member knew and assented to the misdeeds of the other. [p. 279, col. 1.]

Evidence of general repute does not mean hearsay evidence. [p. 280, col. 1.]

The belief of a class of persons, that a particular individual has done particular acts or has characteristics of a certain kind because there are rumours to that effect in a particular place, is not admissible as evidence of repute where no facts are mentioned to indicate that there were sufficient reasons for the impression [p. 280, col. 2.]

A notice under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, must contain something more than a reproduction of the clauses of the section. There should be sufficient indication of the time and place of the acts charged and sufficient details to enable the accused to know what fact he is to meet, but it is not necessary to give a list of witnesses. [p. 280, col. 2.]

Where, however, the defect has not been objected to in the trial Court, the High Court ought not to quash the proceedings in revision in the absence of any proof that the accused was prejudiced by the defect [p. 281, col. 1.]

The facts that a landlord has tenants of bad character under him and lends them money when they are in difficulty or mediates between his tenants who are accused of theft and their victims, are not grounds for requiring security from the landlord under section 110. [p. 285, col. 2.]

Inferences drawn by forest officials as to persons who committed forest offences are not evidence of repute. The Court should test the sources of the information that led the officials to infer that the accused had anything to do with the offences. [p. 285, col. 2.]

Petitions under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1893, praying the High Court to revise the judgment in Criminal Appeals Nos. 16 and 17 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the District Magistrate of Ganjam, both preferred against the judgment in Miscellaneous Case No. 7 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Divisional Magistrate of Chatrapur.

Messrs. R. V. L. Narasimham, P. Narayana-murthi and K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Accused.

Mr. C. Narasimmachari, for the Public Prosecutor for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—These petitions are filed against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chatrapur which was confirmed on appeal, directing the petitioners to furnish security for good behaviour under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioners are brothers. One of them is the Karji of Panchabuhuti and the other is the Sirdar of Gondhadhars. The notice issued to them by the Divisional Magistrate sets out that the charge-sheet submitted by the Sub Inspector of Police made it appear to the Magistrate that they were habitually protecting thieves, habitually committing or attempting to commit or abetting the commitment of offences involving a breach of the peace, and were so dangerous and desperate as to render their being at large without security hazardous to the community. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed them to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 100 each for the period of one year. Various legal objections to the validity of the order are raised and I shall deal with them before going into the evidence.

The first objection raised is that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to issue notice or try the case, as the accused persons did not reside within his jurisdiction. It appears from the record that the Police sent the charge-sheet to the District Magistrate, who did not issue any notice under the Criminal Procedure Code but sent the charge sheet on for disposal first to the Special Agent and then to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chatrapur. It is contended that the Magistrate issuing the notice under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction, the persons against whom the notice is issued reside and that as the accused admittedly reside outside his jurisdiction, the proceedings taken by him are invalid. As it is clear from the records, and not disputed by the Public Prosecutor, that the accused are residing within the jurisdiction of the Deputy Magistrate of Gumsur, it is clear that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chatrapur had no jurisdiction to issue the notice. It was no doubt open to the District Magistrate to have issued the notice under section 110 when he received the charge-sheet, as his jurisdiction extends over the whole District and he would be a Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the accused lived, but he did not do so. The issue of notice is not a formal matter and it is clear that section 110 limits the powers to issue the notice to the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the accused are. The issue of a notice under section 110 being a judicial act to be exercised after a due consideration of the materials placed before the Magistrate and not merely an executive order to be passed as a matter of course on the complaint by the Police, the Legislature evidently restricted the jurisdiction to issue the notice to the Magistrate in whose local limits the persons complained against were living or were making themselves a danger to the public peace, as he would presumably have a knowledge of the local conditions and would be the fittest person to judge whether any action was necessary. It is to be noted that under section 107, clause 2 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the notice is to be issued by the Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person informed against is residing or the place where breach of the peace is apprehended is situate, while in section 110 the acts complained of must be done by a person within the limits of his jurisdiction. The question is concluded by the recent decision of Abdur Rahim and Napier, JJ., in Nagireddy Kondareddy, In re (1). In dealing with a similar objection taken under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where the District Magistrate sent on the records to the Divisional Magistrate without issuing a notice, the learned Judges observe that the District Magistrate cannot be said to have taken proceedings under the section until he issues notice to the person charged to show cause why he should not be proceeded against, that the Magistrate who issues the notice must be deemed to be the person who initiates proceedings and that the District Magistrate to whom the Police reported certain facts and who passed the matter on to the Head Quarter Deputy Magistrate cannot be said to have initiated proceedings and transferred it to the Head Quarter Deputy Magistrate for disposal. They also held that section 528 did not empower the District Magistrate to transfer the case to a Magistrate who had no local jurisdiction over the matter by reason of section 107, clause 2. A similar view is taken in Nirbikar Chandra Mukherji v. Emperor (2), where it was held that the fact that the District Magistrate directed a Subordinate Magistrate to draw up proceedings against a person not resident in the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Magistrate would not give the latter Magistrate jurisdiction, as the provisions of section 107 were imperative. Surjya Kanta Roy Chowdhry v. Emperor (3) and King-Emperor v. Munna (4), referred to with approval in Nagireddy Kondareddy, In re (1), are also in point. It is argued that the drawing up of proceedings by the Deputy Magistrate is only an irregularity. The question is one of jurisdiction and more appropriately falls under section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was treated as fatal to the validity of the proceedings in all the cases above referred to. My attention has been called to Ohiduddin Choudhury v. Emperor (5), where it was held that the procedure of the District Magistrate was only an irregularity, but I am bound by the decision of the Madras High Court which is supported by authority. No reasons are given in the above case for taking a contrary view and the decisions of the Calcutta High Court are not even referred to. I am of opinion that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chatrapur had no jurisdiction to issue the notice and try the case and that the proceedings are void.

The next objection relates to the joint trial of the 1st and 2nd accused. They are brothers who have undivided properties, but they live separately. The 1st accused is the village Karji of Panchabubhuti and lives at Panchabubhuti. The 2nd accused is a Sirdar and lives at Gondhahars. The two villages are about 10 miles distant from each other. It is contended that evidence against 1st accused has been used as evidence against 2nd accused and vice versa and that the parties have been greatly prejudiced thereby. The test to be applied in all such cases where a plea of misjoinder is raised is whether there has been habitual association between the persons charged in respect of the misconduct alleged on the complaint. The fact that persons are members of an undivided family would not by itself render each member liable for the misconduct of any other member and where they are living separately, there is not even the presumption that one member knew and assented to the misdeeds of the other. In the present case there is no evidence of any association of the two accused in any particular act and even if the evidence against one is true, it is quite consistent with the ignorance of the other accused as to the wrongful acts alleged. There can be little doubt that one accused has been prejudiced by evidence against the other being used as evidence against him, and I am of opinion that both the lower Courts were wrong in not examining the evidence against each of the accused with a view of determining whether security should be demanded against him or not. I might in this connection refer to Hari Telang v. Queen-Empress (6), where it was held that it was not legal to try jointly two persons charged under section 110, clause (f).

Objection has also been taken to the admission of a large body of irrelevant evidence in the belief that it was admissible as evidence of repute. Evidence has been let in to the effect that A heard from B that the latter suspected one of the accused of misconduct. It seems to me to be clear that such evidence is not evidence of repute and is clearly inadmissible. Evidence of general repute under section 117, clause (3), does not, for the purpose of enquiry into conduct of persons under Chapter VIII, mean hearsay and repute has been clearly pointed out in Rai Isri Pershad v. Queen-Empress (7). The following observations are in point: "It is hardly necessary to say that evidence of rumour is mere hearsay evidence and hearsay evidence of a particular fact. Evidence of repute is a totally different thing. A man's general reputation is the reputation which he bears in the place in which he lives amongst all the townsmen and if it is proved that a man who lives in a particular place is looked upon by his fellow townsmen, whether they happen to know him or not, as a man of good repute, that is strong evidence that he is a man of that character. On the other hand if the state of things is that the body of his fellow townsmen who know him look upon him as a dangerous man and a man of bad habits, that is strong evidence that he is a man of bad character; but to say that, because there are rumours in a particular place among a certain class of people that a man has done particular acts or has characteristics of a certain kind, these rumours are in themselves evidence under this section, is to say what the law does not justify us in saying." The case was considered in Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (8) where all that was held was that when an offence, e. g., dacoity, was committed in another village, evidence of repute given by persons residing in that village was also admissible. In Alep Pramanik v. King-Emperor (9) it was held that persons ought not to be bound down under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon the mere statement of witnesses that they suspect or are under the impression that the persons proceeded against are thieves or dacoits, where no fact is mentioned to indicate that there was sufficient reason for their suspicion or impression.

The next objection is that the notice to the accused to show cause is vague and insufficient. The notice issued by the Divisional Magistrate runs as follows:—"Whereas it has been made to appear to me by the charge sheet submitted against you by the Sub Inspector of Police, Bugada station, under section 110 (e) and (f) of the Criminal Procedure Code, that you are habitually protecting thieves, habitually committing or attempting to commit or abetting the commitment of offences involving a breach of the peace and are so dangerous and desperate as to render your being at large without security hazardous to the community, you are hereby required to show cause why you should not be required to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 100 each to be of good behaviour for a period of two years." I am of opinion that notices under section 110 must contain something more than a reproduction of the clauses of the section. There should be sufficient indication of the time and place of the acts charged and sufficient details which would enable the accused to know what facts he is to meet, though as pointed out in Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (8), it is not necessary to give a list of the witnesses. In Nagireddy Kondareddy, In re (1) it was held that a general notice which did not state when the threats complained of were uttered or who the persons threatened were or when the apprehension of a breach of the peace arose was vague and bad in law and that the proceedings were liable to be quashed on that ground. I am, however, of opinion that when a party does not during the trial seek for information and does not complain in the lower Court or show that he has been substantially prejudiced, the High Court in revision ought not to quash the proceedings in the absence of any proof of prejudice. In the present case I am unable to find anything to show that the accused were unable to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses effectively or cite their own evidence in consequence of the vagueness of the charge.

Turning to the merits I think the order ought not to have been made, as the evidence which is relevant is totally insufficient to bring the accused under section 110. The 1st accused is the Karji of Panchabhuthi and the 2nd accused is the Sirdar of Gondhadhars. They own extensive properties and have several Panos in their service like other landlords in the district. So far as the 2nd accused is concerned, the Governor-General in Council presented him with the certificate Exhibit II in recognition of his help in preventing riots in 1889 and his good services in watching the frontier in 1894. He was also given a gun in 1905 and Coronation Medal in 1912 by the Government. He was also appointed Member of the Taluk Board. There is a large body of evidence of respectable Government officials and also of non-officials which, in my opinion, certainly outweighs the unreliable and interested evidence of the prosecution witnesses. Mr. Green, the Deputy Magistrate of Gumsur since 1913, within whose jurisdiction the accused live and who had ample opportunities of knowing their character, states that he never received petitions to the effect that the accused were receiving stolen property or were dangerous to the public and that he never came across any such complaints in the records prior to his time. He states that in his opinion the two accused are of good conduct. It is to be regretted that all kinds of insinuations were allowed to be made by the Police against Mr. Green, the more so as there is nothing, so far as I can see, to warrant the belief that Mr. Green who is a responsible Government servant of long standing acted improperly. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate has fallen into a strange error when he states that P. W. No. 10 complained against the 1st accused and 40 persons having cut his crop and Mr. Green took the case on his file and dismissed it as false. P. W. No. 10 states in his evidence that he complained to the Superintendent of Police who referred him to a Magistrate and that he never filed any complaint before the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Green. Far from dismissing any case brought by P. W. No. 10, Mr. Green dismissed a case filed against P. W. No. 10. Mr. Narayanamurthy, D. W. No. 1, who is a Pleader and who was chairman for 15 years, states that 2nd accused was a Member of the Taluk Board, that he has known accused Nos. 1 and 2 for 10 or 12 years and that they are reported to be good men. There is no cross-examination of this witness as to the unreliability of the source of his information. The District Magistrate discredits him because, in his opinion, he made contradictory statements as to his having been retained as a Pleader by the accused. He states that he was never retained as a Pleader by the accused and immediately afterwards states that he was engaged as their Pleader in a case. What the witness evidently meant is that he had no general retainer as Vakil to appear in all their cases, but was only engaged on a special occasion by them and there is no contradiction if the well-known distinction between a Pleader having a general retainer to appear for a party and his being engaged only in a special case is kept in view. D. W. No. 2 was the Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Russalkonda for 8 years prior to 1912. He states that he has only heard good reports of their character. As the prosecution has let in evidence of acts said to have been committed 7 or 8 years ago, his evidence is certainly relevant. D. W. No. 3 was the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Russalkonda in 1910 and Tahsildar of Gumsur Taluk in 1913. He states he does not remember having heard any bad reports about the 2 accused. D. W. No. 5 is a land-holder and merchant who has 1,500 or 1,600 bharnams of land and who was a Taluk Board and Union Member. He speaks to the good character of the accused and says he has known them for 25 years and never heard that the accused caused thefts to be committed or harboured thieves or received stolen property. His purchasing skins from Panos as a skin merchant is no ground for discrediting his evidence nor is his having testified to the 1st accused's character on a previous occasion. There is nothing in his cross-examination to suggest he does not own 1,500 or 1,600 bharnams of land. D. W. No. 6 is the trustee of a temple and owns 180 bharnams of land paying a kist of 80 or 90 rupees. He speaks to the conduct of the accused and says that they are known to be respectable persons in the Mittah. D. W. No. 7 also speaks to their good character. D. W. No. 8, who says he is school-master and owns 150 bharnams of land, states that accused have good characters and are not known to be receivers of stolen property or abettors of thefts or harbourers of thieves. D. W. No. 9 is a Karnam and he speaks to the character of the accused. D. W. No. 10, who is an inamdhar and owns 700 bharnams of land, states that he has known the accused for 15 or 16 years and that their character has been good and that he never heard any reports against them. D. W. No. 11, who lives near the accused's village, states that accused get an income of Rs. 25,000 from their lands, that they are respectable and charitable persons. D. W. No. 12, who owns about 450 bharnams of land, states that he knows the accused well and that they bear a good character. D. W. No. 14, who is a retired Deputy Collector and who was in Gumsur Division in several capacities for several years till April 1913, states that he knows the accused well and that he never heard any one say that they received stolen properties, harboured thieves, or forcibly carried away properties. He says that 2nd accused's conduct was excellent. This witness had ample opportunities of knowing their character and his evidence shows that at any rate till 1913 they bore a very good character. D. W. No. 15 is the Sub-Assistant Director of Survey, who was in charge of Gumsur Division in 1909 and 1915. He says he heard nothing against their character and that he knows that their character is good from conversations he had with them and the ryots. D. W. No. 16 was a Revenue Inspector of Gumsur for 3 years (1906-1910). He says that their character is good and that he never heard complaints about their having received stolen property or harboured thieves or taken forcible possession of property. D. W. No. 17, who was a Deputy Ranger for 1913 and 1915, also speaks for their good character. D. W. No. 18 who owns 300 bharnams of land says he has known accused since their infancy and that they have always borne a good character and that he never heard anything against them. D. W. No. 19, who was Deputy Collector in Gumsur in 1902, 1905 to 1909, 1911 and 1912, states that he knows accused Nos. 1 and 2, that their conduct was good, that accused No. 2 was Member of the Taluk Board and that he never heard that they harboured thieves or received stolen property. D. Ws. Nos 22 and 23, who own lands in the neighbourhood, also speak to their good character. D. W. No. 24, who was Tahsildar of Gumsur from 1911 to 1914, states that their character was good and that he heard nothing against them. As 1st accused was his subordinate he had special means of knowing his character. D. W. No. 25, who is a retired Tahsildar and at present manager under the Maharaja of Bobbili, states that he was Sub-Magistrate of Gumsur from 1910 to 1912 that he knew 2nd accused and that he heard nothing against his character. D. W. No. 26 is a retired Deputy Tahsildar, who says he knows accused Nos. 1 and 2 from 1888 and that he never heard anything against them. D. W. No. 27 is the Revenue Inspector who has been there for about 3 years, and he states he heard nothing against the accused. D. W. No. 28, who was a Revenue Inspector, says that during his stay in the division the character of accused Nos. 1 and 2 was good and that he heard nothing against them. I am unable to agree with the Divisional Magistrate who dismissed the defence evidence summarily as being of a negative and intangible character and not of persons living on the spot. It is difficult to believe that, if the accused were notoriously bad persons or were guilty of even a fraction of the acts attributed to them, Deputy Collectors, Tahsildars, Sub-Magistrates, Revenue Inspectors and persons owning lands in the vicinity would not have heard of it. Nor am I able to appreciate the remarks of the District Magistrate that the evidence of Mr. Green's subordinate has to be discounted, as I see nothing which casts any doubt on the bona fides of

KRIPASINDHU NAIKO v. EMPEROR.

Mr. Green. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses is vague and indefinite as to time and some acts complained of take us back to several years. It also appears to me that men who bore a good character till a few years ago would not suddenly have degenerated into thieves and dangerous persons. The evidence of the defence official witnesses cannot be, therefore, rejected so summarily as the District Magistrate has done.

Before discussing the prosecution evidence, it is necessary to bear in mind the circumstances under which the present complaint was laid by the Sub Inspector who, as found by the Divisional Magistrate, has identified himself with the faction opposed to the accused in the dispute about Gochabadi land. The 1st accused has taken a lease of the village from some of the junior members and had also purchased some shares and was in possession for a long time. The Sirdar of Koradabadi tendered pattas to tenants alleging that he was entitled to 1/5th share. The disputes culminated in 1897 by the High Court deciding that the Koradabadi Sirdar could not tender pattas [see Raghu Gowdo v. Gowdo Chandro Naiko (10)]. Exhibits 32 and 33 series are the documents under which 1st accused got possession. The Koradabadi Sirdar having failed in the High Court did not file a regular suit, but tried to get possession through the Mahapatros who had lent moneys to Gochabadi Mokas-sadar. The lessors of 1st accused at one stage supported him but afterwards took sides with the Sirdar and the Mahapatros. Proceedings were taken by 1st accused under section 145 on the 13th April 1914 and order (Exhibit 44) was passed in favour of the 1st accused and his possession was confirmed. No suit was filed to contest this. The Koradabadi Sirdar then wanted to prevent 1st accused reaping paddy and filed a criminal complaint of theft of paddy which was dismissed. Disputes continued. The 1st accused again applied under section 145 in April 1916 and the order Exhibit P 3 was passed directing that 1st accused should not be disturbed as regards 4/5ths of the estate and the counter-petitioner as regards 1/5th. The order as regards 1/5th was ultimately upset by the High Court. Taking advantage of the order of Mr. Arndt, the Special Assistant Agent, the Koradabadi Sirdar attempted to enter on the lands and cut the crops, but the tenants who raised the crops objected that it was they that should harvest and not the landlord who had at best only a claim to the Rajabhagam after tenants harvested. The 1st accused filed a suit on the 23rd November and got a temporary injunction Exhibit P.4. The Koradabadi Zamindar was in the meanwhile harvesting the crops and it was alleged that though the order of the Civil Court was shown to the Police they declined to interfere. The evidence of the constable P. W. No. 22 supports this. Mr. Green then passed an order, dated 27th November 1916, directing the Police to obey the order of the Civil Court. The Magistrate finds, and there can be little doubt from the evidence, that throughout these proceedings the Sub-Inspector of Police, who is responsible for the initiation of the proceedings under section 110 against the accused and who is a relation of the Mahapatros, was an active partizan of the opposite party. It was after the order of Mr. Green and when the Mahapatros and the Sirdar were defeated in their attempts to get possession that proceedings were initiated under section 110 against the accused. Under these circumstances the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and the Police witnesses has to be received with considerable caution.

As already pointed out, the charges against the accused are (1) habitually protecting thieves, (2) habitually committing or attempting to commit or abetting the commission of offences involving a breach of the peace, (3) being dangerous and desperate.

The second charge relates to cutting crops and taking forcible possession of lands. The chief items are Gochabadi lands, Panokiyari lands and lands in Singapur. As regards Gochabadi lands I have already given a history of the dispute. The case against the 1st accused that he was present and came to the land with a number of persons is clearly disproved, as the 1st accused was on that date at Berhampore. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate observes in this part of the case: "My opinion of this affair, as far as it relates to the first accused, is that he did send his men to Gochabadi to make a show of force but that he did not intend to use force. His idea was obviously to hold up proceedings in Gochabadi while he took steps in Civil Courts. I cannot acquit 1st accused of all blame in this matter, even though the ultimate responsibility for it rests on other shoulders." It appears from the evidence that the lands were shared on the Rajabhagam system and if this is so, the ryots were justified in objecting to the landlord cutting the crops even assuming that the Sirdar was entitled to 1.5th of the lands. The order of Mr. Arudt was admittedly set aside by the High Court. The 1st accused would well have been within his legal rights if he took steps to prevent the opposite side from unlawfully entering on land in his possession, especially as Mr. Arudt's order referred to a fifth unspecified share. It is difficult to see how on the findings of the Magistrate the case is one for security under section 110.

As regards the Panokiyari lands the contesting parties were P. W. No. 19 and one Govinda Naiko. Lakkow Prodhano purchased the lands in 1910 under Exhibit III and leased them to Govinda Naiko by the deed Exhibit Va. In 1913 the brother of P.W. No. 13 got a sale-deed from the same vendor, Exhibit Vb. The dispute between the rival claimants is pending in second appeals in the High Court. Exhibits Va and VI are leases in favour of Govinda Naiko. Prima facie title is in Govinda Naiko and the Magistrate states that Exhibits 4, 5, 6 and 7 show that Govinda Naiko has a title. The learned Magistrate was wrong in stating that 1st accused admitted bringing his men to cut the crop. His Vakil denies, it and I have not been referred to any part of the record supporting the Magistrate's statement. It is clear that 1st accused had no interest in the land. As remarked by the Magistrate, P. W. No. 19 is a bitter enemy of the 1st accused and it is difficult to see how his statement can be accepted. No report was sent to the Police and it is extremely unlikely that P. W. No. 19 or the enemies of the 1st accused would not have filed complaints, if as a matter of fact 1st accused went to the land with several men and carried away the crops. The paddy was not taken to accused's house but was in Govinda Naiko's house at Khyroladi. Exhibit 22 shows that the accused were discharged in the theft case and Exhibit 23 that the District Magistrate upheld the order of discharge. I find it difficult to see how the accused can be ordered to furnish security on so flimsy materials.

As regards the Singapur lands the Magistrate has fallen into the error already pointed out by me that Mr. Green took the complaint of P. W. No. 10 on his file and threw it out. It appears from the evidence that Mr. Green threw out the complaint against P.W.No. 10. The evidence of P. W. No. 10 is worthless, especially as he wants to make out that the complaint which was thrown out was concocted with the assistance of the Deputy Collector.

As regards the dispute between P. W. No. 9 and D. W. No. 29 about lands, it is clear from the evidence that D. W. No. 29 obtained a decree Exhibit 24 against P. W. No. 9. It also appears that he got possession. P. W. No. 9 says that accused Nos. 1 and 2 cut the crops with the help of Panos 5 years ago. The statement of P. W. No. 9 that the Deputy Collector (who was not then Mr. Green) asked him to complain against the Haddis and Panos and not against 1st accused, is on the face of it absurd. It seems to me impossible to act on evidence of this kind, relating to an occurrence said to have taken place 4 or 5 years previously. The evidence of P. W. No. 11 is equally worthless. He is a servant of the opposite faction. He says he complained to no body about the alleged conduct of the 1st and 2nd accused even though according to him the Karji sent him to the Police station with a false report.

The evidence as to forcible cutting and carrying away of crops is, therefore, worthless and cannot, in my opinion, be accepted. As regards the complaint about the rescue of prisoners, it is said to have taken place so long ago as 1908. There is little to connect Sola Pano with the accused. It is difficult to see how the accused can be held to be liable for the acts of the Panos in rescuing a fellow Pano. It not unfrequently happens that amongst the lower classes a fellow casteman who is arrested is rescued by the other villagers turning up, and it is a large order to hold the landlord liable simply because some of his servants rescued others. It does not appear that any finding was recorded in the trial that accused had any hand in the rescue of Sola Pano. His plea seems to have been that he escaped while the constables escorting him were asleep. P. W. No. 28, the constable, speaks to the contents of reports and to his evidence in the case. The originals ought to have been produced, if it was intended by the prosecution to rely on them. The second case about a rescue is limited to an attempt in 1915 by the 1st accused and the evidence is equally worthless. It is difficult to see why, if the evidence of P. W. No. 22 is true, no steps were taken against 1st accused at the time. The evidence of this witness as to 1st accused turning up at Gochabadi with 300 men is false, as 1st accused is proved to have been at Berhampore on the date and the Magistrate finds that he was not at Gochabadi when the ryots turned up and refused to allow the Koradabadi servants to cut the crops. P. W. No. 16 states that he turned up with 12 men to support P. W. No. 22 and that the Panos of 1st accused ran away but 1st accused remained there. This is improbable. He admits that neither he nor the constable reported that 1st accused attempted to rescue the prisoners.

As regards complaint of theft or the abetment of theft, the evidence of witnesses who say that they heard from A that he suspected the Sirdars or that theft was at their instance has, for the reasons already given by me, to be excluded. It is not evidence of repute and if the thefts are sought to be proved, the witnesses who have a direct knowledge of the affair ought to have been called. The Magistrate seems to have thought that because Panos committed theft and some prosecution witnesses state that they are accused Panos, the case against the accused is proved. It is well known that Panos like Marravars, Kallars and other tribes are addicted to theft and lawlessness especially, during the non-cultivating seasons. The District Magistrate in his judgment says that Panos are notoriously addicted to crime. Under these circumstances great caution has to be used in fixing liability on the landlords, especially as almost every landlord in those parts has to employ Pano cultivators. In this connection I may refer to the observations in Nilkamal Das v. Emperor (11), where it was held that the facts that a landlord has tenants of bad character under him, that he lends money to tenants of bad character under him when they are in difficulty and that he mediates between his tenants who are accused of theft and their victims, are not grounds for requiring security under section 110. If these remarks are borne in mind and hearsay evidence excluded, there is very little reliable evidence to show that accused either took part in or abetted thefts. They are rich and influential persons, and it is difficult to believe that they either profited by the small thefts or instigated Panos (who required little inducements to thieve) to commit theft. The fact that in 2 or 3 cases they interested themselves in the case against the Panos, even if true, is quite consistent with a desire to help servants whom they considered wrongly charged. The Magistrate erred in thinking that in spite of acquittals of the persons actually charged with offences the facts relied on by the prosecution in those cases can be relevant evidence against the present accused. I need only refer to the observations in Nagireddy Kondareddy, In re (1) already referred to.

As regards forest offences, any inference that particular forest officials may draw as to the persons who committed theft will not be evidence of repute. The Court has to test the sources of the information that led them to infer that the accused had anything to do with the thefts. Statements in forest department files will not be evidence by themselves. As other landlords besides the accused have Pano servants, the fact that the Forest Ranger was of opinion that, from the nature of the wood stolen, others ought to be behind them would apply generally to landlords, and there is no special reason why the accused should be charged in particular. The forest officials were not likely to be afraid of the village Karji (the 1st accused) and there is no reason why they did not prosecute him. The illicit grazing of the buffalos on one occasion in respect of which compensation was levied by the forest department, even if true, would not be a ground for requiring security under section 110; nor would the remarks in a file that some shicaries on one occasion used the gun of 2nd accused be sufficient.

As regards the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 14 and 15 it is difficult to see how, even if it is true, any case of theft can be made out. First accused told P. W. No. 14 that his servants brought timber without orders and offered to pay the price, which offer the merchant accepted. P. W. No. 15 says that stolen timber was found near the village where 1st accused and several others lived. The fact that 2nd accused purchased the logs and paid Rs. 75 for them would not show he was the thief.

As regards evidence of repute the prosecution witnesses are not men of any special consequence and the evidence is in my opinion more than counterbalanced by the evidence of officials and respectable residents, which I have already referred to. Several prosecution witnesses are on bad terms with the accused and evidence of the sort they give is easily procurable by the Police Sub-Inspector P. W. No. 1, who is on bad terms with the accused and who launched the present prosecution after all attempts to help the Mahapatros and the Sirdar in the land dispute between them and accused had failed. The Magistrate is of opinion that the Sub-Inspector P. W. No. 1 is the champion of the faction opposed to the accused, and I have little doubt that the present proceedings were not instituted bona fide by P. W. No. 1.

The case has been very fully argued on both sides, and I have little hesitation in holding that both on the points of law and the questions of fact raised the order requiring security is unsupportable. I set aside the order and direct that the bonds if executed by accused Nos. 1 and 2 be cancelled.

Order set aside.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 250 OF 1918.

March 22, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wilberforce.

JIA LAL—PETITIONER

versus

PHOGO MAL AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—City Magistrate, whether permanent Court—Jurisdiction.

The Court of the City Magistrate is not a permanent Court with a perpetual succession of Judges; so that where a City Magistrate has been transferred, his successor has no power to sanction a prosecution in respect of an offence committed before his predecessor. In such a case the Sessions Judge alone is competent to grant the necessary sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 287, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 11th February 1918.

Messrs. Durga Das and Amin Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner applies for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Lahore, to the effect that the City Magistrate should record his opinion as to whether a prosecution should be sanctioned under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and should himself decide the case. The legality of this order is questioned on the ground that the Magistrate who tried the case out of which the application for sanction arises, has been transferred and that under these circumstances only the Court to which he was subordinate, could grant the necessary sanction. As an authority for this proposition Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud-din (1) is quoted. The original case was tried by the City Magistrate, and Counsel for the respondents argues that his Court is a permanent one with a perpetual succession of Judges and that, therefore, Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud-din (1) does not apply. Counsel for the respondents also relies upon a Madras case quoted as Phina

BHUBAN RAM v. BIBHUTI BHUSAN BISWAS.

Singh v. Empress (2). Following, however, the principle adopted in Muhammad Ishaq v. Muqim-ud din (1), I cannot hold the Court of the City Magistrate to be a permanent one with a perpetual succession of Judges. The Court in question is only of recent creation and is a Court not known to the Criminal Procedure Code. I, therefore, hold that only the Sessions Judge is competent under the provisions of section 195 to grant the necessary sanction.

Counsel for the respondents also referred to an order passed by Mr. Coldstream, the first Sessions Judge, who took cognizance of this case. Mr. Coldstream passed an order on the 14th February 1917 that the matter was one for the City Magistrate to decide. This order I hold to be opposed to law. The order in question was not followed by Rai Bahadur Lala Damodar Das, who on the 31st October 1917 held that the City Magistrate should submit a report for final orders. It is true that Rai Bahadur Lala Damodar Das had no power to reverse the order of his predecessor and that for this reason his order is equally ultra vires. As, however, the whole case is now before me on revision, it is not necessary to consider how far the parties are bound by the orders of Mr. Coldstream, or Rai Bahadur Lala Damodar Das.

I accept the application for revision and direct the Sessions Judge to decide whether sanction should be given or not.

Revision accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 290—Public nuisance, user of premises giving rise to—Proprietors of premises, whether liable—Master and servant—Master, liability of, for servant's acts.

Speaking generally, where the user of premises gives rise to a nuisance the person liable under section 290 of the Penal Code is the occupier for the time being, whoever he may be. A proprietor who is not in occupation of the premises is not liable, unless his conduct amounts to an abetment of the offence under that section. [p. 288, col. 1.]

The general rule is that a master is not criminally answerable for the acts of his servant. [p. 288, col. 1.]

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Dinajpur under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Sessions Judge states the facts as follows: "A steam paddy husking machine was set up in Dinajpur Municipality in 1912, with the permission of the Municipality. Up to December 1917 it appears to have worked only by day and there was no complaint. But in that month it began working both by day and by night and a complaint was filed on the 11th January 1918 by ten persons living near it that the dust, smoke, smell and noise of the machine were a public nuisance both by day and by night. The District Magistrate thereupon prohibited the working of the mill by night and summoned the proprietors and the manager under section 290, Indian Penal Code. At the trial the persons living close to the mill, said that they were annoyed by the mill in various ways but chiefly because it disturbed their sleep at night. One man who signed the petition, however, said that it did not inconvenience him at all, and 19 defence witnesses who live in the same neighbourhood but rather further away, deposed that the mill caused them no annoyance. The trying Magistrate held that the working of the mill at night in a residential portion of the town was objectionable and that the noise of it amounted to a public nuisance and he fined the manager and the three proprietors Rs. 50 each under section 290, Indian Penal Code."

The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the conviction of the proprietors was bad in law and he recommended that their conviction should be set aside. He was of opinion, however, that there was nothing in the conviction of the manager.

We have heard the matter argued on behalf of the persons convicted by Mr. Sanyal and on behalf of the Crown by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer. In the result we agree with the Sessions Judge that the conviction of the proprietors of the mill should be set aside. The general rule is that a principal is not criminally answerable for the acts of his agent. In the present case the proprietors of the mill were not living on the premises; two of the three proprietors live in the United Provinces and the third lives in Darjeeling. Speaking generally, the person liable where the user of premises gives rise to a nuisance, is the occupier for the time being, whoever he may be. The occupier in the present case is the servant of the proprietors. No doubt the proprietors might be liable for abetment. But in the present case abetment is neither proved nor charged. In this view we must set aside the conviction of the three proprietors, Bhuban Ram, Ramananda Ram and Deo Chand Ram.

As to the conviction of the manager, Mr. Sanyal has argued that the facts do not bring the present case within the definition of a public nuisance to be found in section 268, Indian Penal Code. That section, so far as it is necessary to quote it, says that a person is guilty of a public nuisance who does any act or is guilty of an illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity.

As to this question, though there may be some conflict in the evidence we are of opinion that there were materials before the Magistrate on which he was at liberty to find that the working of the mill at night amounted to a public nuisance, within the words I have read. In this view we are not disposed to interfere with the conviction of the manager or to interfere with the sentence passed upon him. The application made on behalf of the manager must, therefore, be refused.

As regards the proprietors, we were referred to certain cases decided in England [Rex v. Medley (1) and Reg. v. Stephen (2)]. These cases were decided under the Common Law. In India the question is merely how the Statute should be construed and the English cases cited are, in our opinion, no authority on the construction of the Penal Code.

The fine imposed on the proprietors must, if paid, be refunded.

Application partly allowed.

PENHEIRO v. JOTINDRA MOHAN SEN.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3388 OF 1915.

June 25, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walmsley and Mr. Justice Panton.MARIE PENHEIRO AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS*versus*JOTINDRA MOHAN SEN—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 269, 293—Executor, power of, to deal with property of deceased—Legacy—Assent of executor, effect of.

An executor, after having given his assent to a legacy, is not competent to deal further with the property bequeathed. [p. 290, col. 1.]

An executor, although he has the power to dispose of the property of the deceased in such manner as he thinks fit under section 269 of the Succession Act, must be able to give reasons for doing so. [p. 290, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 22nd May 1915, affirming that of the Munsif at Sadar, dated the 31st December 1914.

FACTS.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a mortgage-bond covering the properties of the minor plaintiffs is inoperative.

The plaintiffs are minors. Their entire homestead, two-thirds of which they inherited from their father and the remaining one-third they got as legatees under the Will of their step-grandmother Isabella Penheiro, who died in July 1910 after appointing by her Will one Macdonald Polacco as executor who took out Probate on 1st of June 1911, was mortgaged by Macdonald Polacco on the 29th of December 1912 to defendant. The recital of the mortgage was as follows:—

“I, Polacco, as executor to the estate of Isabella Penheiro hereby hypothecate the land.....on behalf of legatees Marie Penheiro and Anthony Penheiro..... I execute this mortgage instead of one time barred executed on 29th December 1911.” But before the mortgage, Macdonald Polacco had executed a lease on 14th May 1912 in respect of one-third of the homestead as executor and guardian, etc., of the minor plaintiffs. This lease not being in question, the first Court granted the plaintiffs a decree which was set aside by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs, therefore, preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen, for the Appellants. —It appears that the mortgage in its entirety is void and inoperative. The executor Macdonald Polacco having given his assent to the legacy was not competent to deal further with the property. His assent divested his interest as executor therein and transferred the bequest to the legatees. From the moment of the cessation of his interest as executor, he could not dispose of the property in any way. See section 293 of the Indian Succession Act.

He could deal with the property so long as he had interest in the property as executor. Refers to section 269 of the Succession Act.

Moreover, no necessity for the mortgage has been established, so the mortgage is inoperative. At any rate the mortgage is inoperative at least in respect of the two-third of the homestead inherited by the minors from their father. The person who executed the mortgage was neither executor, nor administrator in respect of this two-thirds. He was neither the guardian of the minor plaintiffs nor did he purport to act as guardian while executing the mortgage, and no necessity for the mortgage has been established nor was he acting for the benefit of the minors as a de facto guardian. So the mortgage can by no means be enforceable as against the minors' property.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs, who are minors represented by a guardian. They inherited two thirds of their ancestral homestead from their father. The remaining one-third was bequeathed to them by their grandmother or step grandmother Isabella Penheiro. One Macdonald Polacco was appointed executor by the Will of Isabella Penheiro and he took out Probate. About a year after the grant of Probate he executed a lease in respect of one-third of the homestead and in the following December, i.e., 18 months after the Probate was granted he mortgaged the entire homestead to the defendant No. 2 in the name of defendant No. 3. We are not now concerned with the lease. The suit out of which the present appeal arises was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the mortgage executed by this Macdonald Polacco was inoperative. The first Court granted the plaintiffs a decree. An appeal was preferred by defendant No. 3. It was heard ex parte and the learned District Judge reversed the order of the first Court and dismissed the suit.

NATHE PUJARI v. RADHA BINODE NAIK.

The plaintiffs have now preferred this appeal, and two arguments have been advanced. The first is that the mortgage is entirely void and the second is that, at any rate, it is void with regard to the two thirds share inherited by the minors from their father.

So far as the second point is concerned, it seems to me quite clear that the decision of the learned Judge was wrong. The first Court found that Polacco was not the guardian of the minors and the document itself does not pretend to show that he was acting as their guardian. The first Court also found that there was no necessity for the mortgage. That being so, it is quite clear with regard to the two-thirds inherited from the father that the mortgage was inoperative.

The first point relates to the entire mortgage and I think it is equally strong. The executor appears to have given his assent to the legacy and, having done that, he was not competent, as the learned Munsif, said, to deal further with the property as provided by section 293 of the Succession, Act. It may also be said that an executor although he has the power to dispose of the property of the deceased in such manner as he thinks fit under section 269, must be able to give reasons for doing so; and in the present case the finding of the first Court that there was no necessity for the mortgage at all has not been displaced by the learned District Judge. It appears to me, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong and must be reversed and the suit decreed with costs in all Courts. The costs of this Court will be on the ex parte scale, as nobody appears on behalf of the defendant-respondent.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

APPELLANTS

RADHA BINODE NAIK—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Trustee, whether can transfer office or trust property—Adverse possession as against trustee—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, Sch. I, Art. 124, applicability of.

A trustee of a public religious endowment cannot alienate his office and duties or the possession of the trust property at his own will either by sale or gift, so as to create a valid title in the transferee. He cannot even create a life-interest in favour of the donee in respect of the shebaiti right. He has no beneficial interest beyond what may be expressed in the trust and has no powers of alienation beyond what may be necessary or beneficial for the purposes of the trust. [p. 293, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 10 of the Limitation Act applies only where the person setting up adverse possession claims adversely to the beneficial owner. Where, however, a person has been performing the duties of a shebait of an idol and applying the trust funds to the proper purposes of the trust and claims the right to hold that office and to perform those duties, section 10 of the Limitation Act has no application and he can acquire that right as against the original shebait by adverse possession. [p. 295, col. 2.]

By Article 124 of the Limitation Act a suit for possession of an hereditary office is barred after 12 years from the time when the defendant takes possession adversely to the plaintiff. Articles 134 and 144 do not apply to such cases [p. 293, col. 2; p. 294, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Roe, dated the 20th March 1915, in Second Appeal No. 2532 of 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 26th August 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Puri, dated the 9th January 1915.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and Achlendra Nath Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the appellants (plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 24) seek for a declaration that certain lands in Mauza Brahmeswarpur in the Puri district are the debutter bazyaffi of Sri Brahmeswar Deb who was the plaintiff No. 1 in the suit and that they, the remaining plaintiffs, are the marfatdars on his behalf. They also seek for possession of the said lands as against the defendants, who themselves claim to be the marfatdars on behalf of the idol. The appellants base their claim upon the fact that they are the descendants of the original marfatdar of the idol and say that in the year 1879 their ancestors, the then marfatdars or *shebait*s, appointed one Rashbihari Naik, the father of the defendants, to act as manager or agent on their behalf and that on his death, which occurred some two or three years before this suit was instituted, all right or title, if any, which he may have had in the lands or in the office of marfatdar or shebait of the deity, came to an end and did not devolve upon his heirs. They further contend that the late Rashbihari Naik did not and never could acquire any legal right in the marfatdar title, as such title could not lawfully be transferred. The defendants' case as originally pleaded was that their father Rashbihari Naik acquired a valid title from the plaintiffs' ancestors by a deed of gift dated the 25th April 1879 to the marfatdari rights in respect of the lands in dispute, for the management of the same on behalf of the deity and that they succeeded by inheritance to the same on their father's death. They further say that if the deed of 1879 was by Hindu Law invalid, then their father acquired by adverse possession for more than twelve years a good title and that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation.

If the deed of 1879 in fact purported to transfer the absolute interest in the marfatdari rights to Rashbihari Naik, and was not merely the appointment of an agent to act for the marfatdars who retained the title in themselves, then there can be little doubt that such a transaction, is according to Hindu Law invalid. In section 439 of Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage the learned author, in dealing with the devolution of the trust created by religious endowments of this description, says: "In no case can the trustee sell or lease the right of management though coupled with the obligation to manage in conformity with the trusts annexed thereto, nor is the right saleable in execution under a decree." This summary of the law would appear to be in conformity with a long series of decisions which it is unnecessary to refer to.

Whatever contention the respondents may have urged in the Courts below, it was conceded before us that the trustees of a public religious endowment, such as this is admitted to be, could not alienate their office and duties or the possession of the trust property at their own will either by sale or gift so as to create a valid title in the transferee. The appellants' contention was that the deed in question did not purport to transfer either the office or the property of the trust but merely appointed Rashbihari Naik to act as agent during his lifetime for the trustees, the office and possession of the property being retained in the latter; or at most that the transfer was that of a life-interest only to the donee and that the office and right to possession of the estate reverted on his death to the appellants as heirs of the donors, and that in these circumstances no title by adverse possession could arise either in Rashbihari Naik or his children, the respondents.

Two translations of the document of the 25th April 1879 were produced and submitted to us, but they did not differ in any material respect. I take that which was checked by the officer of this Court, who was conversant with the language of the original. It is executed by 12 persons and recites that the lands scheduled at the end of the document forming mans 61. 17. 2 of naik and nanaik land belong to Sri Brahmeswar Deb installed in Brahmeswarpur Mauza and were settled by their ancestors (4 in number), who paid the *bazyaf*ti jama to the Government and with the remainder of the produce managed the festivals of the aforesaid Deb and that after their death four of the signatories were carrying on the management. It then proceeds as follows:—

"But in the recent mutation of names we being the relatives and co-sharers of the above-mentioned reportdars, our names have been entered in respect of the said land. Under the circumstances as we the co-sharers are many, and we could not collect and realise the rent appertaining to the koth kismat of the aforesaid Deb from the Mufassil in time and as we are unable to manage the festivals, etc., regularly, we, in a sound condition of mind and of our own free-will, without any coercion make over the aforesaid mans 61-17-2 of koth kismat and the temple, trees thereon and moveable property of the aforesaid Deb to Babu Rashbihari Naik, son of Minaketan Naik, inhabitant of Berboi Mauza, Pergana Limbai, who pays much attention to the affairs of the aforesaid Deb, as marfatdars, and specially because the aforesaid Deb is the family god of the said Babu. We do hereby execute and agree that from this day forth the said Babu, as marfatdar, shall remain in possession, shall collect and realise the produce of the said land and the arrears of dues from the *raiya*s and the future dues from them and shall pay the Government dues according to the kists and carry on the festivals, etc., of the Thakur with the balance of the income and shall credit the balance to the kotha chandar of the aforesaid Thakur. With that he will make improvement of the temple and the property of the Thakur in the future. He shall bring the pattas and kabuliyats into force with the *raiya*s. He shall carry on the festivals and bhogs and shall pay the customary dues to the other sabaks, pujaris and sankhuas. If after this, they do not attend to their duties then he shall settle it in consultation with us, and we shall continue to get what we have been getting out of the khanja bhog in the festivals. He will act according to conditions mentioned in the old patta of the koth kismat or according to the conditions to be laid down in the future settlement. He will get the marfatdari report of the said land duly recorded in his name. We give up our right and possession which we had in the koth kismat of the aforesaid Deb and in the above-mentioned land which we had till to-day and cease to have any concern in them in all respects. Neither we nor our heirs or relations have or will have, or will prefer any claim or objection from to-day and if preferred it will not be accepted in any Court. We execute this deed of gift so that it may be useful when necessary. We agree to this deed of gift. The 14th day of Mase 1286 V. S., corresponding to the 25th day of April 1879.

"It may be noted that we have borrowed Rs. 200 for the management of the seba and puja of the aforesaid Deb from Gouranga Naik, Taraboi, Pergana Limbai, and Gangadhar Swayin of Rencho, Pergana Limbai, and Babu Bhagirathi Naik of Berboi, Pergana Limbai, and Babu Rashbihari Naik. Babu Rashbihari Naik will pay the amount to the mahajans out of the property of the aforesaid Deb. Date and year as above." Then follows a schedule of the properties referred to.

It appears from the evidence that in accordance with the provisions made in the deed Rashbihari Naik got his name recorded as marfatdar and took over possession of the property, and until the time of his death in 1911 carried out the duties of his office apparently with credit to himself and satisfaction to every body concerned. It seems almost impossible to contend after reading this document that it was not intended to invest Rashbihari Naik with the office of marfatdar or shebait of the idol and to put him in possession of the property as trustee to perform the duties incidental to that office. All right and possession of the donors as marfatdars in the property in question is expressly handed over and all right to interference by them or their heirs for the future is in terms abandoned. The only reservations were that the donors should continue to get what they had all along been getting, viz, their share in the khanja bhogs at the festivals, a thing which they were entitled to in any event, and a somewhat nebulous right to be consulted in the event of the sebaks, pujaris or sankhuas failing to perform their duties after being paid their customary dues. It does not even appear that any advice that might be tendered, if the occasion contemplated should arise, was bound to be followed, and indeed from the later portion of the document it would appear that the new marfatdar would be within his rights in refusing to tolerate any interference in his conduct of the affairs of the office so long as those affairs were administered in accordance with the terms of the trust. In my opinion the deed purported to transfer both the office and the possession of the properties to Rashbihari Naik and to install him as marfatdar with all the rights and duties appertaining to the office in place of those by whom he was appointed. The appellants contended, however, that what was transferred was a life-interest only and not an estate of inheritance and relied on the case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (1). Although it is true that the deed under consideration in that case was in many respects similar to the present document, the circumstances were entirely different. The donor in that case was a Hindu widow who had a life-interest only in the property transferred, and after the death of the transferee she executed a further deed of gift to the wife of the appellant. It was found by their Lordships that the first deed conveyed a life-interest only to the grantee. The only principle of construction to be derived from that case is that although the general rule is that indefinite words of gift are calculated to convey all the interest of the grantor, it is nevertheless necessary to read the whole instrument to gather the intention. According to the general rule a grant without words of limitation conveys an estate of inheritance, and I can find nothing in the present deed to indicate a different intention. On the contrary, I think the latter part of the instrument, which purports to bind not only the grantors but also their heirs and relations, seems to indicate an intention to transfer the possession of the property and the rights and duties of the office to the grantee in perpetuity.

Assuming, however, that the intention was to convey an estate for life only to Rashbihari Naik, the case of Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (1) (ubi sup.) is no authority for the proposition that the trustees of a public religious endowment have power to grant away even a life estate in the shebaiti rights attending the worship of the idol. Unless the appellants can establish this, it follows the grant to Rashbihari Naik, whether for his lifetime only or for the larger estate, would be invalid and his adverse possession would begin from the moment he assumed the duties of the office and took over possession of the property. In the case relied on no question was raised as to the validity of the document affecting the transfer to Ruttonmoni.

And although it is stated in the judgment of the Privy Council that the property had been dedicated by the deceased father-in-law and husband of the grantor to the service of the two idols, it appears that in the High Court and in the Privy Council the case was argued upon the assumption that the grantor had full powers of alienation. The case appears to have been one where the beneficial ownership was retained, the property being subject to a trust only to apply part of the income for the support of the worship of the idol and the performance of religious festivals, and not as in the present case, where the whole property was transferred in perpetuity to the deity for religious purposes. In the former case the land is alienable (see Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, section 438). In a case like the present it is clear that the trustee has no beneficial interest beyond what may be expressed in the trust and has no powers of alienation beyond what may be necessary or beneficial for the purposes of the trust. It was not contended before this Court that the transfer was necessary for the benefit of the trust. In Ayancheri Kovilagath Rama Varma Tambram v. Acholathil Varikoli Roman Nayar (2) it was held that a lease for a term of years of the management of a temple and its properties, in consideration of an advance made for the purposes of paying off debts said to have been contracted for the purposes of the temple, was invalid. I can see no material distinction between such a case and the transfer of the office for the life of the transferee and, in my opinion, whether the deed of 1879 purported to convey the whole estate or a life-interest only the transaction was in either case invalid.

It remains to consider whether Rashbihari Naik, and through him the respondents, acquired by adverse possession a right to the office of marfatdars and to possession and management of the trust property so as to bar the appellants' claim. Rashbihari Naik was in undisturbed possession from 1879 until the date of his death in 1911, a period of over thirty years. By Article 124 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act a suit for possession of an hereditary office is barred after twelve years from the time when the defendant takes possession adversely to the plaintiff, and Article 144 would cover the case of the possession of property not coming within Article 134 or any of the other Articles. It was contended that section 10 of the Limitation Act applies so as to remove the bar. In my opinion, this section has no application to the present case. The respondents are not seeking to set up an adverse title to the beneficial owner, the plaintiff No. 1, nor is there any question as to the misappropriation or improper use of the trust property. The possession of Rashbihari Naik and his successors has been that of trustees, and the claim of the appellants is not founded on a breach of trust. It is a claim to dispossess the respondents from an hereditary office and to have it declared that the appellants are the rightful owners of that office. Had the respondents been claiming the land as their own property or had they been applying the proceeds to purpose not sanctioned by the trust, possibly section 10 might have been prayed in aid so as to deprive them of any benefit they might claim to derive from long possession. The case of Abhiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nandi (3) relied on by the appellants was a case where the Mohant of a temple granted to a company called the Barakar Brick and Tile Co., Ltd., a mokarrari lease of debutter lands dedicated to the worship of an idol, thereby depriving the endowment of all further benefit in the property except the fixed rent. It was found that there were no circumstances of necessity to justify the grant. The grant itself was a breach of trust interfering with the rights of ownership vested in the deity. It was held that Article 134 of the Limitation Act did not apply as there was no "purchase" within the meaning of the Act, a lessee not being a purchaser. A passage in the judgment of their Lordships in that case, which says "The operation of this Article 134 is controlled by section 10 of the Act" was relied on by the appellants and by the learned Munsif before whom the present case originally came, but the mischief aimed at by section 10 was present in the case just cited whereas it does not exist in the present case. This distinction is made clear by a reference to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. On pages 11 and 12 of the paper-book he discusses the question of the cause of action of the plaintiff No. 1 (the deity) whom the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 24 (the present appellants) enlisted on their side in support of their claim. After finding that Rashbihari Naik had faithfully carried out all the duties imposed upon him by his office, he says "It is, therefore, clear that in so far as the deity is concerned he has no cause of action against the defendants", and dismissed his claim. In the appeal from that judgment to the High Court the plaintiff No. 1 takes no part, the appellants being the remaining plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 24, and it is not contended that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge erred in so far as it decided against the claim put forward in the name of the deity. The cases of Kannan v. Nilakandan (4) and Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5) afford instances of the proposition contended for by the respondents that although the *shebait*s or managers of a temple may not be able legally to transfer the shebaiti rights or the possession of the lands of the endowment, such rights can be acquired by adverse possession as against the original *shebait*s or their heirs. The former case was almost identical in its main features with the present. The defendant purchased from one of two co-trustees or Uralans of a temple the right to manage the affairs of the temple and was put in possession of the property of the endowment. After more than 12 years had elapsed, the other co-trustee brought a suit to recover the property and the trusteeship on the ground that the purchase was invalid. It was not shown that the defendant had misapplied the temple property. It was held by Sir C. Turner, C. J., that the transfer was invalid. He intimated that if the defendant had committed a breach of trust he could have been removed from his office and held accountable for profits if not properly applied, but such a claim was not made, and he dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by Article 144 of the Limitation Act. The second of the above cases was one where the hereditary managers of the endowed properties of a religious foundation had purported to sell and assign the management and lands to the representatives of another institution. The Limitation Act of 1877 was then in force. The transfer was not valid, and the only question before their Lordships of the Privy Council was whether the suit to recover the office of manager and possession of the lands was barred by limitation. It was held that Article 124 of the Limitation Act applied to the suit brought for possession of the office. Sir Richard Couch in delivering the judgment of the Board said, "Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no distinction between the office and the property of the endowment. The one is attached to the other, but if there is, Article 144 of the same Schedule is applicable to the property." The case of Jagamba Goswami v. Ram Chandra Goswami (6) was relied on by the appellants, but that was a case where the defendants were claiming the property as their own, freed from the uses created by the trust. The plaintiff was the shebait of a temple and claimed the land as part of the endowment made in 1771 for religious purposes. The defendant denied that the land in question was debutter property or that the profits were ever used for the worship of the deity, and claimed it as her own brahmottar property under a gift made by a former shebait to her late father-in-law. The Court found that the property was debutter property and was of opinion that section 10 would have been applicable but for the fact that the gift to the defendant's predecessor was made many years before 1871 when section 10 was first enacted, and it was held that the suit was barred by limitation. It is clear that that case is no authority for the proposition that the hereditary office of shebait of a temple cannot be acquired by adverse possession so as to bar a claim by those previously exercising that office or their heirs claiming through them. In my opinion, the right to administer the trust property of a public religious endowment within the limits imposed by the trust, and for that purpose the right to possession of the property as against those previously administering the trust or others claiming through them can be acquired by adverse possession, and in trusts of this nature it is only where a claim is set up adverse to the rights of the deity to whose worship the property is dedicated that section 10 of the Limitation Act could have any application so as to deprive the defendant of the rights conferred by the remaining portions of the Act.

The cases already referred to appear to me amply to support this view, but the case of Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (7) would appear to settle the question beyond all doubt. There the effect of section 10 was fully discussed by Sir A. Hobhouse, who in delivering their Lordships' judgment in the Privy Council says: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the expression used by the Legislature 'for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property' means for the purpose of recovering the property for the trusts in question; that when property is used for some purpose other than the proper purpose of the trust in question, it may be recovered, without any bar of time, from the hands of the persons indicated in the section. But here there is no question of recovering the property for the trust of the endowment, because the defendant admits that he is a trustee, and says he is applying the property to the trusts of the endowment. The plaintiff is suing only for his own personal right to manage or in some way to control the management of the endowment. The consequence is that the case does not fall within section 10 of the Limitation Act." Every word of the passage just quoted might have been written in reference to the present case and it seems to me to be conclusive of the question under discussion.

As in this case the adverse possession began in the year 1879 when Rashbihari Naik first took over the office of marfatdar and got possession of the property, it follows that long before the present suit was instituted he had acquired an indefeasible title and that the suit is consequently time-barred. The appeal accordingly will be dismissed with costs.

MULLICK, J.—I agree. Not claiming as strangers the defendants would not, even if they had established adverse possession for 12 years, be entitled to plead Article 144 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act as a bar to this suit.

Nor could they plead Article 134, as they do not claim to be purchasers for value.

Whether they had notice of the trust would in either case be immaterial.

Indeed being volunteers under a conveyance from trustees they could not, by reason of the provisions of section 10 of the Limitation Act, plead limitation at all in a suit by the cestui que trust to follow up trust property in their hands, which means a suit to recover trust property held otherwise than for the purposes of the trust. But here the defendants are holding the property in suit for the benefit of the trust, therefore section 10 has no application and the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the cestui que trust has no cause of action.

As against the trustee plaintiffs, however, the defendants have validly acquired by adverse possession the status of trustees in respect of the property in suit.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Rateable distribution—Assets, payment of, and rateable distribution, application for, on same day—Priority, presumption as to—'Same judgment-debtor,' meaning of.

Where the payment of assets and an application for rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, are made on the same day, no presumption can be made by the Court as to which event was prior in time. The party challenging the action of the Court Officer must show that it was wrongful. [p. 296, col. 2.]

To entitle decree-holders to rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, the decrees should be against the same judgment-debtor, i. e., the individuals must be the same. [p. 296, col. 2; p. 297, col. 1.]

Where the fund in Court is the property of the same person who is judgment-debtor under two decrees, he may be regarded as the same debtor in respect of that fund. [p. 297, col. 1.]

If the fund is the joint property of two persons, their respective rights cannot be ascertained without an enquiry which is beyond the scope of section 73. [p. 297, col. 1.]

Where, however, the joint debtors are entitled to the fund in equal shares, and the plaintiff claims only half, the provisions of section 73 can be enforced. [p. 297, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 11225 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 145 of 1913.

Messrs. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar and A. Subbarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. Narasimha Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The payment into Court of assets realised and the application for rateable distribution were made on the same day, and the officer distributing the assets should have ascertained which act was prior in point of time. He distributed the assets on the footing that the application was prior.

The plaintiffs who now challenge his action must show that it was wrongful, since there can be no presumption as to the order of events. The second point argued was that owing to an irregularity in the proceedings the application for execution made by the 1st defendant was not legally subsisting at the date of distribution.

A valid application within section 73 had been made and was on the file of the Court at the date of distribution, and we think that the requirements of the section had been fulfilled.

The third point is whether the decrees were against the same judgment-debtor. The appellants obtained a decree for money against 3rd and 4th defendants personally and respondents obtained a similar decree against 3rd defendant. It has been held by this Court that the individuals must be the same [Srinivasaiyengar v. Kanthimathi Ammal (1)] and the precise point was decided by the Calcutta High Court [Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (2)].

It has been pointed out that if the fund in Court is the property of the same person who is judgment-debtor under both decrees, he may be regarded as the same debtor in respect of that fund [Nimbaji Tulsiram v. Vadia Venkati (3) and Grant v. Subramaniam (4)]; but if the fund is the joint property of two persons their respective rights thereto cannot be ascertained without an enquiry which is beyond the scope of section 73 [Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (2)].

It is, however, admitted here that the joint debtors were entitled to the fund in equal shares, and in the argument on this part of the case the plaintiffs did not claim more than half of the fund paid to the 1st defendant; and therefore the inquiry mentioned in Deboki Nundun Sen v. Hart (2) is unnecessary. We are, therefore, of opinion that the 1st defendant must account to the plaintiffs for their share of half of the fund in which the 1st defendant was not entitled to participate. The appeal is allowed to this extent and there will be a decree for plaintiffs for Rs. 1,118 with interest at 6 per cent. from 23rd July 1913 till payment with proportionate costs of both parties throughout.

Appeal allowed in part.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a claim by the Secretary of State for India in Council for a small sum of money which is described as peshkash. The principal defence that has been urged before us is that the annual sum claimed is an abwab. The facts negative that suggestion. The claim is by the Secretary of State, not as a landlord, but as representing the Government and claiming payment of that which is payable to the Government in respect of certain embankments the upkeep of which is necessary for the preservation of land, including that to which the present defendant is entitled. The claim does not rest in any sense on the relation of landlord and tenant. Therefore, we may at once negative the plea which suggests that the claim is bad as being an abwab.

Then it is said, what is the basis of this claim? The basis is long-continued payment beyond the memory of man, which in itself is a title in favour of the recipient of the annual payment. That in itself is sufficient. There is an authority of the Privy Council in the case of Sumbhoolall Girdhurlall v. Collector of Surat (1), where that was regarded as a sufficient defence for a claim of annual payment, though that payment had a vicious origin. Here there is no vice in the origin. On the contrary the consideration for the payment is most beneficent work. There is, in my opinion nothing in the answer that is advanced on behalf of the defendant.

The only matter to which exception may be taken in the decree of the lower Appellate Court is, that it is expressed in such wide, vague and inconclusive terms that it is perhaps difficult to know precisely what the determination of the Judge was on the various prayers in the plaint. But on behalf of the Secretary of State it is stated that all that is desired is a decree for money. There will be eliminated from the decree of the lower Appellate Court so much as is not a decree for payment of the sum of money claimed. This will be, not because we determine these declarations are erroneous, but because they should not be embodied in a decree in a suit of this character. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Landlord and tenant—Under-raiyati interest, whether transferable—Purchaser of portion of under-raiyat, rights of.

The interest of an under-raiyat is not transferable. [p. 299, col. 1.]

A transferee of a portion of a non-transferable under-raiyati interest cannot get his title declared by a suit as against the landlord who is in peaceful possession of the land. [p. 299, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Midnapore, dated the 10th of August 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 8th of April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Appellant.—The question whether a portion of an under-raiyati is transferable is one of first impression. There are cases which lay down that if the whole of an under-raiyati holding is transferred that works a forfeiture. It would not be right to infer from this fact that a portion also is not transferable. Take the analogy of occupancy holdings. The whole is not transferable but a portion is. Applying the same principle, the transfer of a portion of an under-*raiya*ti holding ought to be held binding upon the *raiya*ti landlord. Besides, suppose it is not transferable, how can the *raiya*ti landlord forcibly eject the transferee. He is liable to be sued under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act and also under the ordinary law for recovery of possession on establishment of title.

[FLETCHER, J.—But have you any title?]

There is no law which says that a portion of an under-*raiya*ti is not transferable, therefore, why should a part transferee of an under *raiya*ti holding be held to have no title?

Babu Mohini Nath Bose, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, dated the 10th August 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff sued for declaration of title and for possession as a transferee of a portion of a non-transferable under-*raiya*ti interest. The Judge held that he got no title, and, therefore, there could not be a declaration of title in this case. It is quite clear that the learned Judge was right. The interest of an under-*raiya*ti is clearly non-transferable. How can the plaintiff by a document say that he has got a transfer of a portion thereof? It may be that the possession of the plaintiff, if he had been in possession, was lawful and not illegal and, if he had his possession disturbed, then he might have sued under the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. But that is not the case here. In the present case, the facts are these: The landlord is in peaceful possession of this land and the plaintiff having no title thereto asks for a declaration of title and relief consequent thereupon. It is quite clear that the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that, in these circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to get the reliefs asked for. The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

STAMP REFERENCE IN CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS
No. 180 OF 1917.

In the matter of KHUB CHAND AND OTHERS.
Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 38, 40, 57—Document, insufficiently stamped—Deficit duty levied by Collector —Reference to High Court, whether competent.

Where a Collector holding that a document is not sufficiently stamped levies the deficit duty and penalty and then certifies that the document is sufficiently stamped, the case before the Collector is fully decided and a reference to the High Court under section 57 of the Stamp Act is not competent. In such a case there is no room for any further disposal by the High Court in accordance with section 59 of the Act. [p. 301, col. 1.]

Stamp reference made by the Junior Secretary to the Board of Revenue, United Provinces, to the Hon'ble High Court under section : 7 (1) of the Stamp Act.

FACTS as given in the reference made by the Board of Revenue are the following:—

"On 13th January 1914, one Khub Chand and his sons executed a mortgage deed.....in favour of one Shankar Lal for Rs. 20,500 on a stamp of Rs. 205, mortgaging their proprietary rights in land together with their mortgagee rights in certain other immoveable property secured by a mortgage deed, dated the 1st May 1909, executed in their favour for Rs. 16,000 by one Ganga Prasad.

"On the 15th February 1916, Khub Chand and others sold a portion of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, Shankar Lal, for Rs. 17,000 out of the mortgage-debt of Rs. 20,500, the remaining property being left hypothecated with the mortgagee for the balance of the mortgage money, namely, Rs. 3,500 and the interest on that sum..... This deed was executed on a stamp paper of Re. 1 only.

"On the 2nd April 1916, another sale-deed, being virtually in lieu of the former, was executed by the said vendors in favour of the same vendee in respect of the same property which had been sold by means of the sale-deed, dated the 15th February 1916, for the same amount of consideration, viz., Rs. 17,000, and on the same terms, the only difference being that the sale of a house worth about Rs. 300, which house was mentioned only casually at the end of the body of the previous sale-deed, was in the new sale deed effected by means of express provisions made in the body of the deed itself. This second sale-deed was also executed on a stamp of Rs. 1 only. It was impounded by the Sub-Registrar of Agra and sent to the Collector of the district under section 38 (2) of the Stamp Act. The Collector held that the sale-deed was not sufficiently stamped and that the deficient stamp duty payable amounted to Rs. 4 as noted on the margin (foot-note*). He levied this deficient duty and penalty of Rs. 5 under section 40 (1) (b) of the Act."

GROUNDS.—In the first place no additional duty would appear to be due on account of the house worth Rs. 300, as its value is clearly included in the sale price of Rs. 17,000. The main question, however, is whether the Collector was right in holding that because the property sold (except the house) formed a part of the property previously mortgaged by the vendor to the vendee and on which duty had been paid already, the mortgagee was entitled to deduct from the duty payable on the sale-deed the amount of duty paid in respect of the mortgage under section 24 of the Stamp Act. It will be observed that only a portion and not the whole of the property mortgaged under the deed of the 13th January 1914 was transferred to the mortgagee and it would appear, therefore, that the full duty of Rs. 170 in respect of Rs. 17,000 was payable on the sale-deed [In re Nirabai (1)]. If this view is correct the Board are doubtful whether the realization of the additional duty can be ordered by them now.

Duty paid	1
Balance due	4

The case is complicated and the decision of the Hon'ble High Court is solicited on the following two points:

(i) Whether the second instrument of sale is correctly stamped with a duty of Rs. 5 as assessed by the Collector, or whether it should be assessed to a duty of Rs. 170 following the Bombay ruling.

(ii) Whether the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority has any powers of revision under section 56 (1) of the Act over the action of the Collector under section 40 (1) (a) and (b) or over his action under section 40 (1) (b) either before or after he has given a certificate under section 42 (1).

As regards the latter point attention is invited to Reference under Stamp Act, s. 57 (2). It was held in that case that the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority has no such powers, though the learned Judges of the High Court constituting the Bench which disposed of the reference held divergent views in the matter.

The Hon'ble Munshi Narayan Prasad Asthana, for Khub Chand.

Mr. W. Wallach (Officiating Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

KNOX, AG. C. J.—This is a reference made to this Court by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. It is said to be made under the provisions of section 57, sub-section (1) of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899. It is not a case that was referred to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority under section 56, sub-section (2). Therefore, if it falls at all under section 57, sub-section (1), it must be deemed to be a case otherwise coming to the notice of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. In its order of reference the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority states it as a case coming to the notice of the Board while scrutinising the monthly statement of cases of the infringement of the Stamp Law of Agra submitted by the Controller under rule 204 of the Stamp Manual.

The point arises whether the record before us is the record of a case within the meaning of section 57, sub-section (1). The questions involved, so far as stamp duty is concerned, have been before the Collector of Agra under section 38 (2) of the Stamp Act. The Collector has held that the sale-deed in question was not sufficiently stamped, that the deficit stamp duty payable amounted to Rs. 4. This deficit duty he had levied together with a penalty of Rs. 5, under section 40, sub-section (1), clause (b) of the Act. We understand that the deficit duty and the penalty have both been paid. This is in accordance with the statement made by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. Presumably, therefore, the Collector has certified by endorsement upon the deed that it is now duly stamped. Under section 40, sub-section (2), this certificate is for the purposes of the Indian Stamp Act conclusive evidence of the matter stated therein. The case before the Collector has been fully decided and there appears to be no room for any further disposal in accordance with section 59, sub-section (2) of the Indian Stamp Act. The very same point that is before us came before the Madras High Court. [See Reference under Stamp Act, s. 57 (2).] The learned Judges before whom the reference came were divided in their opinion. Two of the learned Judges arrived at the opinion that section 57 of the Indian Stamp Act did not give the High Court jurisdiction as there was nothing regarding which the High Court could be asked to pronounce judgment. The learned Chief Justice took a contrary view. After the hearing of arguments addressed both by the learned Vakil for Khub Chand and the Government Advocate, I am of opinion that the view taken by the Madras High Court was the correct view and that this is not a case within the meaning of section 57. No definition of the word "case" has been cited in the argument on either side, and I know of no definition by the Indian Courts upon the meaning of this word. I find on referring to Wharton's Law Lexicon, 11th Edition, page 147, that the word "case" is defined as (1) a trial, (2) a trial involving some point of law so important as to be published in the law reports as a precedent.

(2) 25 M. 752.

SANKARAN NAMBUDRIPAD v. RAMASAMI IYER.

This confirms me in the view I have taken and I would return this—reference to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority with the opinion that the matters referred are, under the circumstances, not within the jurisdiction of this High Court.

RAFIQUE, J.—I agree.

PIGGOTT, J.—I agree.

Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II Mad. of 1864), s. 42
—Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883), s. 7 (1)
(c), sale under, effect of—Prior encumbrances, whether saved—Interpretation of Statutes—Proviso to section, whether can be considered.

The provisions of section 42 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act apply to a sale under section 7 (1) (c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act XIX of 1883. Such a sale is free from prior incumbrances. [p. 302, col. 1.]

The fact that the first instalment of a loan taken under Act XIX of 1883 was applied towards meeting the expenses of agricultural improvements already started on the land or that an extension of time was granted by the Government to the borrower, does not make it the less a loan taken for making an improvement within the meaning of the Act. [p. 303, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Ayling, J.—Where there is doubt as to the true meaning of the substantive part of a section, it is legitimate to look to the words of a proviso to it in order to determine which interpretation is correct. [p. 303, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The language of section 7 (c) of Act XIX of 1883 amounts to a declaration that the land is charged with the payment of the revenue. [p. 305, col. 1.]

Where the language of a section is clear and unambiguous, the proviso should not be construed as adding to any right or disability created by the section, but where there is room for doubt regarding the construction of the section it has always been the practice to invoke the aid of the proviso to help in the proper interpretation of the section. [p. 305, col. 1.]

The effect of section 42 of Madras Act II of 1864 is not only to discharge pre-existing incumbrances upon the property on which the arrear is due, but also pre-existing incumbrances upon every property which is brought to sale for arrears of revenue due from the defaulter. [p. 305, col. 2.]

Secretary of State v. Pisipati Sankarayya, 8 Ind. Cas. 414; 34 M. L. J. 423; 8 M. L. T. 323; (1910) M. W. N. 722; 20 M. L. J. 794, followed.

The effect of section 7 (1) (c) of Act XIX of 1883 is to make a declaration on behalf of the Government that it has a first charge on the property for the loan advanced in respect of that property, just as under section 2 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act the Government has a first charge for arrears of Government revenue. JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The main point for our disposal in this appeal is the general question raised in the single issue framed—Whether the provisions of section 42 of Madras Act II of 1864 apply to a sale under section 7 (1) (c) of the Land Improvement Loans Act (XIX of 1883): in other words, whether such a sale is free of prior encumbrances

The Subordinate Judge has decided that it is and in my opinion he is right. The point is not covered by authority, as the cases quoted on appellant's side, Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (1) and Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai (2), all relate to sales under clause (a) [and not clause (c)] of section 7 (1). A comparison of the various clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) shows that the framers of the Land Improvement Loans Act considered that there was some substantial difference between a sale for arrears of land revenue of the land on which the arrears accrued and a sale for the same purpose of other lands, whether belonging to the defaulter or some one else. The same distinction was present to the minds of the learned Judges in the earliest of the above cases, Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (1): after referring to various sections of the Revenue Recovery Act they say, "the intention is clear that the purchase is free of prior encumbrances only when the arrear is of public revenue of which the land is the first security by statutory declaration", and again, "arrear of abkari revenue is not due upon any specific land owned by the abkari renter." This in fact seems to be the main ground on which their decision is based. The judgment in Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai (2) also draws the same distinction. The above decisions are, therefore, of no help to appellant in the present case, and indeed indirectly tend to a conclusion adverse to him.

The learned Vakil for appellant has argued that the words "in all or any of the following modes" and "as if" contained in section 7 have reference solely to procedure and were not intended by the Legislature to import the operation of section 42 of the Revenue Recovery Act. The weak point in this argument is that he is unable to indicate (and we are unable to detect) any difference between the procedure laid down for bringing to sale the lands on which arrears of land revenue have accrued and other lands liable to sale for the same arrears. On this view, the inclusion of a special clause (c) is unexplained.

In this connection, reference has been made to a decision of this Court in Secretary of State v. Pisipati Sankarappa (3), in which Miller and Munro, JJ., held that all sales of land for arrears of land revenue were free of encumbrances whether the lands sold were those on which the arrears accrued or other lands belonging to the defaulter. It may be argued that on this view of the law the enactment of clause (c) in addition to clause (a) is in any case unnecessary. I think the explanation lies in the fact that the Land Improvement Loans Act is an Act of the Government of India and that there is no reason to suppose that it was framed with sole regard to the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. Other Revenue Recovery Acts in force in 1883 recognised a distinction between the conditions of sale of land on which arrears had accrued and other lands belonging to the defaulter: vide sections 11 and 12 of Bengal Act VII of 1853, sections 94 (f) and (g), and 108 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act XVIII of 1881 and sections 133 and 135 of Act XVII of 1876, Oudh Land Revenue Act. Even assuming, therefore, that the framers of the Land Improvement Loans Act shared the view of the Madras Act II of 1864 taken by the learned Judges in Secretary of State v. Pisipati Sankarappa (3), this is not inconsistent with their having deliberately distinguished the cases, having in mind the provisions of the Acts in force in other parts of India. Even in this Presidency so far as I am aware, the Secretary of State v. Pisipati Sankarappa (3) was the first case in which the broader view of the applicability of section 42 was expressed; and, with all respect to the learned Judges in that case, I am inclined to think the learned Judges who decided Ramuchandra v. Pitchaikanni (1) were inclined to take the narrower view. There is no reason to suppose that the framers of section 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act acted under the impression that there was no difference in this respect.

I am inclined to think that while the words "in all or any of the following modes," if they stood alone, might be indicative only of procedure, some wider meaning should be attached to the words "as if" in clause (c), when contrasted with the words "according to the procedure, etc.," in clause (d). The use of the latter words is significant and shows at any rate that the framers of the Act had other words in their minds, which might have been more suitably employed to express the meaning contended for by appellant's Vakil.

There is, however, another argument, to my mind conclusive on the point, furnished by the proviso to the section which runs: "Provided that no proceeding in respect of any land under clause (c) shall affect any interest in that land which existed before the date of the order granting the loan, other than the interest of the borrower, and of mortgagees of, or persons having charges on, that interest, and, where the loan is granted under section 4 with the consent of another person, the interest of that person, and of mortgagees of, or persons having charges on, that interest."

This clearly implies that the interests of prior mortgagees are affected by a sale under clause (c) and is in fact incapable of any other meaning. Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar's only argument in this connection is that the words of a proviso cannot be used to extend the operation of the section to which it is attached. This is no doubt true, and is clearly established by the judgment of the Privy Council in the case on which he mainly relied, West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (4). But where there is doubt as to the true meaning of the substantive part of a section, it is surely legitimate to look to the words of a proviso to it in order to determine which interpretation is correct. This is recognised by Lord Herschell in his judgment in the very case referred to. It cannot be said that the words of the main part of the section are so clearly in appellant's favour as not to be at any rate ambiguous; and here we have a proviso which is a perfectly compatible with one interpretation and clearly incompatible with another. It must also be noticed that one main objection of their Lordships to reference to provisos is inapplicable to the present case: viz., that provisos are frequently inserted simply to allay the apprehensions of persons against whom the Act was never intended to apply. This cannot be said of the exception against mortgagees which is contained in the proviso itself. There is nothing, as far as I can see, in the judgment of their Lordships in that case to preclude reference to the proviso for the interpretation of the section with which we are dealing: and it seems to me to be conclusive against appellant.

I must, therefore, hold that a sale of land under section 7 (1) (c) is free of encumbrances.

Two other objections raised on behalf of appellant may be briefly noticed. It is pointed out that Rs. 2,500 of the first instalment advanced was devoted to discharging a loan privately taken for the purpose of paying for an oil engine, the installation of which on the land was part of the improvements for which the loan was granted. Appellant contends that to this extent the loan from Government cannot be said to have been taken for the purpose of making an improvement within the meaning of section 4 of the Act. No authority is quoted and I am unable to accept such a contention. A considerable time usually elapses between the application for a loan under the Act, and its disbursement to the borrower: and in the present case the borrower being anxious to set about the work arranged to purchase the engine on the hire purchase system, and apparently took a temporary loan from some private persons to enable him to discharge the earlier instalments. There is nothing in all this to affect the essential object for which the loan was taken from Government or the borrower's liability under the Act.

The second objection is that, because the first instalment of the loan was not utilised within the period allowed by the Government rules, the disbursement of the second instalment cannot be treated as the disbursement of a loan under the Act, and to the extent of that instalment no priority can be claimed for it over plaintiff's mortgage. This contention is also baseless: it is not denied that the first instalment had been utilised to the satisfaction of the Government officers on the specified improvements prior to the disbursement of the second instalment: and I fail to see how the action of Government in relaxing the strict operation of the rule regarding the time limit in favour of the borrower can prejudicially affect Government's right in this connection.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs of 2nd respondent.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Although I agree with the conclusion at which my learned brother has arrived, having regard to the fact that the point argued is practically one of first impression and to the important issues involved in its decision, I have ventured to add a few words of my own.

The facts have been stated by my learned colleague and it is unnecessary to repeat them.

The main point for consideration is, whether a sale for the loan advanced by the Government in respect of agricultural improvement of a property avoids previous existing encumbrances upon that property. I do not agree with Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar that unless the loan is advanced for making future improvements, the provisions of the Act have no application. Where in anticipation of a loan from Government work which satisfied the definition of the term 'improvement' is started, in my opinion, the loan must be taken to have been granted for the purpose of making the improvement. The test is not whether the improvement was subsequently made but whether the money was applied for the construction of agricultural improvements upon the property. Nor do I think that the fact that time was extended for completing the work in regard to which the first instalment of payment was made, in any way affects the validity of the subsequent advances. The provision in the rules for the completion of the work within the time stipulated is minatory in its nature, and it is as much open to the Government to extend the time for performance as it is open to any private party to do in respect of contract fixing a time for performance. The rules do not bind the Government to refuse the loan if the time stipulated has been exceeded.

On the main question, I have been greatly influenced by the contention of the learned Government Pleader on the inutility of clause (a) of Act XIX of 1883 if clause (c) of that section is intended to have the same result as clause (a). I am prepared to agree with the learned Vakil for the appellant that the words "as if they were arrears of land revenue" would prima facie only attract the procedure prescribed in the Revenue Recovery Act and not the substantial declaration contained in sections 2 and 5 of that Act. The decisions of this Court have been uniform on that question. See Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (1), Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangasami Naicken (5), Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (6) and Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (7). But in clause (c) of section 7 we have, in addition to the words "as if they were arrears of land revenue," a preceding and a subsequent clause which gives a different complexion to the policy of the Act. The first four words 'out of the land' and the last five words "in respect of that land" make it clear that the loan granted is to be regarded as a first charge upon the property. In Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni (1) which was under the Abkari Act, two eminent Judges of this Court, while holding that the words "in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue" only denoted the procedure to be adopted, say, "Arrear of Abkari revenue is not due upon any specific land owned by the Abkari renter." That, to my mind, is the keynote to the construction of similar provisions in other Acts. In the case of Abkari rent, in the case of income-tax, in the case of cesses under the Local Boards Act, the amount payable to the Government is not due in respect of any specified land, whereas the essence of the stipulation under Act XIX of 1883 is that the loan is payable out of and in respect of the land for improving which the loan is granted. In my opinion, the language of section 7, clause (c), amounts to a declaration that the land is charged with the payment of the revenue and when in addition to that declaration the Legislature refers back to Act II of 1864, I am inclined to think that the provisions of sections 2, 5 and 42 of that Act are intended to be read with clause (c) of section 7 of Act XIX of 1883. Whatever doubt there may exist on this question is removed by the proviso, which in distinct terms says that the interest in the land which is available to the Government is restricted to that of the borrower and to that of the mortgagee.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar addressed to us an elaborate argument upon the inadvisability of utilising provisos to supplement the operative portion of a section. I adhere to what I said on this question in my judgment in Annie Besant v. Emperor (8). It is a well-known canon of construction that where the language of a section is clear and unambiguous, the proviso should not be construed as adding to any right or disability created by the section; but where there is room for doubt regarding the construction of the section, it has always been the practice to invoke the aid of the proviso to help in the proper interpretation of the section. The observations of Lord Watson in West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (4), to which the learned Government Pleader drew our attention, support this principle and there is nothing in the judgment of the other noble Lords to throw doubt on the correctness of the dictum of Lord Watson. In my opinion, the proviso is strictly and rightly in place in this particular instance. By the operative portion of clause (c) the Legislature provided that out of the whole land the loan shall be realized. The proviso releases rights other than those of the borrower and of the mortgagee, e. g., the rights of an occupancy tenant. Therefore, the proviso is aptly in place and has the further effect of elucidating the meaning of the operative clause.

There is only one other observation that need be made, and that is this: Section 7 provides for cumulative remedies to the Government to proceed against the borrower personally, they may proceed to sell the land; lastly, they may also proceed to sell the land given as collateral security. Now, under clause (a) when the Legislature provided that the borrower can be proceeded against personally it would follow as a matter of course that his property can be attached and sold. It seems to me that even where properties other than those upon which revenue is due are sold under Act II of 1864, all pre-existing encumbrances on such properties are wiped off. During the course of the argument I felt some little doubt as to whether the decision of Justices Miller and Munro in Secretary of State v. Pisipati Sankarayya (3) was right. But, on closely examining the sections of the Revenue Recovery Act, I feel that the effect of section 42 is not only to discharge pre-existing encumbrances upon the property on which the arrear is due, but also pre-existing encumbrances upon every property which is brought to sale for arrears of revenue due from the defaulter. Section 32, to which Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar drew our attention, does not save the encumbrances as was contended. Therefore if the Government avail themselves of the remedy provided by clause (a) and if the words "as if they were arrears of land revenue" were to be construed as only indicating the procedure to be adopted, then it would follow that the previous existing encumbrances would subsist and that the Government would only be entitled to the surplus sale proceeds, if any, after satisfying such enencumbrances. If clause (c) is also to be similarly interpreted, the Legislature must be deemed to have been guilty of redundancy. According to Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, under clause (c) also, if a sale is effected for the loan the encumbrances would still subsist. I do not think Courts will be justified in imputing to the Legislature the enacting of an unnecessary provision of law where they can give a consistent meaning to it otherwise. It is clear, whereas under clause (a) the ordinary remedy is given, under clause (c) the remedy of avoiding existing encumbrances is provided by the Legislature. At first sight it looks as if the Legislature was not conscious that under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act the sales of property other than those upon which arrears are due would not avoid the existing encumbrances. Very likely the Imperial Government had in mind the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868, which by section 11 enables the Collector to sell only the tenure on which the rent is due and by section 12 to exclude previous encumbrances only in respect of that particular tenure. The Madras Legislature has given a more drastic remedy for arrears of revenue than is given in Bengal. However that may be, there can be no doubt that the effect of section 7, clause (c), is to make a declaration on behalf of the Government that it has a first charge upon the property for the loan advanced in respect of that property just as under section 2 of the Revenue Recovery Act the Government has a first charge for arrears of revenue. In this view, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right, and I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs of the 2nd respondent.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 202, 204, 233—Encroachment on Municipal street by projection—Right to run up projection.

A person who has, without any objection on the part of a Municipality, encroached over the surface of a Municipal street by a projection, has no right to run up the projection to any height he likes, even though he does not thereby make any further encroachment in breadth over the street. [p. 308, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 5th January 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Suri, dated the 14th March 1916.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"The plaintiff-appellant has a pucca house within the Municipality of Suri adjoining the Ahmadpur Road on the east of it. To the east of the road is a drain. Projecting over the drain is a platform, which is a part or continuation of the verandah of the plaintiff's house. Over this platform and verandah is a roof; that roof is supported by pillars standing on the platform. Over this roof is another roof. Some years ago it was considered necessary to open out and re-build the drain, which evidently flowed beneath the platform. The evidence is, the Magistrate of the District and some Municipal Commissioners went to the spot and at the request of the Magistrate and on the understanding that the pillars, roofs, etc., should not be interfered with, the platform was demolished. Later on the Municipality served the plaintiff with notices under sections 202 and 204 of the Municipal Act (Act III of 1884 B. C.) to remove the platform, roofs, pillars etc. The plaintiff thereon instituted this suit praying for—

(1) A declaration that the Municipality is not entitled to take any such steps under sections 202 and 204.

RAKHAL CHANDRA DE v. CHAIRMAN OF THE SURI MUNICIPALTY.

(2) An injunction restraining the Municipality from demolishing the structures.

For the first claim the plaintiff urged the platform was built before 1864 and so the Municipality should have proceeded under section 233 of the Municipal Act and their action under sections 202 and 204 is illegal.

As regards the other structures, plaintiff contended that these, too, have been existing from before 30 years and under Article 146 (A) of the Limitation Act the Municipality cannot demolish them. It was also urged, relying on Eshan Chunder Mitter v. Banku Behari Lal (1), that these structures also come under the purview of section 233 of the Municipal Act.

The learned lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit as regards injunction, holding that as the platform does not any longer exist, no suit for injunction regarding it can lie. That the platform is no longer existent, is clear to me. Both the plaintiff and the defendant have vied with each other to show that it was he who demolished the same; then again the learned lower Court held a local inspection and he has endorsed the finding that no platform exists. So I cannot but accept that finding. So I hold no suit for injunction as regards the platform can lie and the plaintiff's claim in this respect must be dismissed.

As regards the other structures I have been led through the evidence by the learned Pleaders for both sides. The plaintiff has failed to prove that they have been existing since 1864 or for the last 30 years. * * *

Thus in the result I find the plaintiff has failed to substantiate his claims and so his suit should be dismissed; accordingly his appeal must stand dismissed."

Babu D. N. Bagchi, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant, and the appeal arises out of a suit for an injunction restraining the defendant Municipality from demolishing the verandah, platform, etc., which are said to be a projection on the Municipal road, in accordance with notices under sections 202 and 204 of the Bengal Municipal Act served on the plaintiff. The verandah was erected about ten or eleven years before the institution of the suit on the platform which has been existing ever since 1864. If the projection or encroachment has been existing since 1864, then sections 202 and 204 do not apply to the case but the section applicable is section 233. If the Municipality cannot take action under section 202 and 204, then they cannot demolish the structure without paying some compensation to the plaintiff as contemplated by section 233 of the Bengal Municipal Act. If there is a building or platform abutting on the road from 1864 and if a superstructure is built on the pre-existing platform without any projection or encroachment on the road, it cannot be said to be a new projection or encroachment, because the plaintiff cannot be said to have gone an inch beyond the pre existing platform. If it is a vertical erection on the old platform, it cannot be said to be a new projection or encroachment over the road liable to be demolished by a notice of this kind.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 5th January 1917, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Suri. The case is this: The defendant Municipality served notices on the plaintiff under sections 202 and 204 of the Bengal Municipal Act requiring him to remove an obstruction or encroachment on the street and to remove a projection that had been placed against or in front of his house. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant Municipality from acting on the statutory notices. Assuming that such a suit lies, I think the facts found in this case are conclusive. What is found is this: The encroachment has been removed under section 202 and it no longer exists and, therefore, it no longer existing, there can be no ground at present on which the Municipality can proceed further in the notice under section 202 and no question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to claim an injunction can arise. With regard to the projection that has been required to be removed under section 204, the facts found are these:—This thing was erected 10 or 11 years ago. That there has been a projection, there cannot be any doubt. The case set up by the plaintiff is this: That as he has encroached on the surface of the street, therefore, he has a right to run up the projection to any height he likes, provided that he does not make any further encroachment in breadth on the street. That is clearly wrong. The reason why these projections are prohibited by the Act is obvious. If the projection encroaches on the street, for the safety and convenience of the passers-by or for other conveniences, the law authorises the Municipality to serve notices to remove it. I see no reason to interfere with the judgment of the learned District Judge. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 227 OF 1917.

February 15, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bakewell and Mr. Justice Krishnan.MADDIPOTI PERAMMA—PLAINTIFF —APPELLANT*versus*GANDRAPU KRISHNAYYA AND ANOTHER

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 18 (3), 20, 47—Sale by Official Receiver—Purchaser obstructed in taking possession—Enquiry by Insolvency Court—Order directing delivery to purchaser—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 97, 98—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court—Suit for declaration of obstructor's title, injunction and possession, maintainability of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 41.

The power conferred by section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is intended to enable the Receiver to obtain control of the insolvent's property and not to provide for the determination of questions of title as between the insolvent and third parties. This provision is not intended to confer jurisdiction over a person against whom the insolvent has merely a right enforceable by suit. [p. 309, col. 1.]

An Insolvency Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to institute an enquiry under Order XXI, rules 97 and 98, Civil Procedure Code, into an alleged resistance to a purchaser at the Official Receiver's sale taking possession of the property. [p. 309, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where an order has been passed by the Insolvency Court directing the removal of the obstruction and delivery of possession to the purchaser, the aggrieved party has a right to file a suit for a declaration of his title and for an injunction restraining delivery of the property to the purchaser. It will not be correct to embody a prayer in such a suit for the setting aside of the order of the Insolvency Court, as that is a matter within the jurisdiction of the High Court. [p. 309, cols. 1 & 2.]

Hajee Abdul Lateef Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras, 44 Ind. Cas. 847; 40 M. 1173, Official Assignee of Madras v. Mangayar Karasu Ammal, 47 Ind. Cas. 298; 40 M. 1173 (foot-note) and Pita Ram v. Jujhar Singh, 43 Ind. Cas. 573; 39 A. 626, distinguished.

Per Krishnan, J.—Under section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court has power, in a proper proceeding instituted before it by the Receiver, to enquire into and decide on the merits of an adverse claim to possession set up by a third party. [p. 310, col. 1.]

The rules of the Civil Procedure Code can be availed of only where section 47 of the Insolvency Act applies. To apply that section it must be shown that there was some proper proceeding under the Act in the Insolvency Court, for section 47 merely provides for the procedure to be adopted "in regard to proceedings under this Act." [p. 310, col. 1.]

An order passed by an Insolvency Court under Order XXI, rules 97 and 98 without jurisdiction may be set aside by the High Court on appeal, but that does not bar a fresh suit by the aggrieved party. [p. 310, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Godavari at Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit 323 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 113 (Original Suit No. 493 of 1914 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Rajahmundry).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao (with him Mr. D. Appa Rao), for the Appellant.—The order of the Insolvency Court was without jurisdiction. The sale was by the Official Receiver in exercise of the powers vested in him and the enquiry into an alleged obstruction to possession can only be made on the Receiver's application. A general enquiry into the rights of third parties is not within the purview of the section. The Receiver's power to sell is created by Statute and not by virtue of an order of Court. There was no proceeding before the Court with reference to such sale within the meaning of section 47. The purchaser who initiated the enquiry was no party to the insolvency proceedings.

Plaintiff's right of appeal against the order did not bar his additional right to have the order vacated in a suit. He could elect his remedy.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Respondent.—The power to enquire into an alleged obstruction is conferred on the Insolvency Court by section 18 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The order was competent to the Court to pass. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, in the absence of any express statutory prohibition, apply to proceedings under special laws. In any event, the present suit was not maintainable. The plaintiff's remedy was to appeal against the order of the Insolvency Court and as he has not done so, the order is final and cannot be vacated in a fresh suit.

JUDGMENT.

BAKEWELL, J.—Under section 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act the appointment of a Receiver vests the property of the insolvent in him, and under section 20 it is the duty of the Receiver to realise that property and he has power to sell it. This power is exercised by virtue of the authority conferred by the Statute, and not of a decree or order of the Insolvent Court directing a sale. There was, therefore, no proceeding before the Court with respect to such sale within the meaning of section 47 and the rules of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the sale of property in execution of a decree or order do not apply.

It is argued that under section 18 (3) the Court had power to remove a person in possession of property of the insolvent from possession, but this power is evidently intended to enable the Receiver to obtain control of the insolvent's property and not to provide for the determination of questions of title as between the insolvent and third parties. This is indicated by the proviso to this sub-section, which limits this power to persons whom the insolvent has "a present right so to remove." I do not think that this provision was intended to confer jurisdiction over a person against whom the insolvent had merely a right enforceable by a suit.

The parties to this suit were not parties to the proceedings in insolvency pending before the District Court in which the order in question purported to be made, and that Court was, therefore, not competent to try the issue now raised between these parties and its finding is not binding upon them (Civil Procedure Code, section 11).

I think, however, that the first prayer of the plaint is not correct in form in asking that the order of the District Court should be set aside; that is a matter within the jurisdiction of the High Court.

The cause of action is the threat of the defendant to obtain possession of property by means of irregular proceedings and the prayer of the plaint should be for a declaration of plaintiff's title and an injunction.

The appeal is allowed and the suit is remanded to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. Costs throughout will abide the result.

KRISHNAN, J.—The facts of this case necessary for the disposal of this second appeal are these. The plaint property was sold by the Official Receiver as the property of the insolvent, the 1st defendant, and it was purchased by the 2nd defendant. In attempting to take possession, the 2nd defendant was obstructed by the plaintiff who claimed the property as his own. The 2nd defendant then applied to the Insolvency Court to order the removal of the obstruction and to put him in possession. This petition was filed under Order XXI, rules 97 and 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the plaintiff and the 1st defendant were made counter-petitioners. After a summary enquiry the Court passed an order for the delivery of the property to the 2nd defendant. Plaintiff has brought the present suit for a declaration of his title and for an injunction restraining the 2nd defendant from taking possession under that order, and for possession if he is removed from possession pending suit.

Both the lower Courts have dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that it is not maintainable, plaintiff's only remedy being, according to them, an appeal against the order of the Insolvency Court. Plaintiff contends before us that that order is no bar to his suit, as it was passed without jurisdiction. A copy of the order has been filed in this Court as it was not filed in the lower Courts, and both sides have consented to this course.

I agree with my learned brother in thinking that the order of the Insolvency Court was one passed without jurisdiction. It was sought to be supported as a competent order under section 18, clause (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, or under section 47 of that Act read with rules 97 and 98 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 18, clause 3, is clearly intended, as pointed out by my learned brother, for the purpose of helping the Receiver to get possession of the insolvent's property: under it the Receiver but no one else can apply to the Court to direct a third party who is in possession of the insolvent's property to deliver it up to him, if the insolvent has a "present" or actual subsisting right to its possession. I consider that under that section the Court has power, in a proper proceeding instituted before it by the Receiver, to enquire into and decide on the merits of an adverse claim to possession set up by a third party, adopting the proper procedure for it. But in my view this question does not arise in this case, as no application whatever was made by the Receiver under the section. He elected to sell the property as that of the insolvent leaving it to the purchaser to take such steps, as he thought fit, to get possession of it. The application to the Court was made by the purchaser under the Code of Civil Procedure and the Receiver was not even a party to it: such an application clearly does not lie under section 18. The purchaser is a stranger to the insolvency proceedings and by his purchase he got no more rights than the insolvent himself had, to get possession of the property from the third party. The rules of the Code of Civil Procedure can be availed of only if section 47 of the Insolvency Act applies. To apply that section, it must be shown that there was some proper proceeding under the Act in the Insolvency Court; for section 47 merely provides for the procedure to be adopted "in regard to proceedings under the Act." See Guntapalli Narasimhaya v. Malapati Veeraghavulu (1). As that has not been shown, it is clear that the order of the Court on the application of the purchaser deciding in a summary way that plaintiff has no title to the property and that he should give up possession, was without jurisdiction.

That being so, I am of opinion that the order cannot be treated as a bar to the plaintiff's suit and that the suit is maintainable as an ordinary civil suit. Under section 41 of the Evidence Act it is open to the plaintiff to show that the order pleaded against him was delivered by a Court not competent to do so, that is, not having jurisdiction to do so and he has done that in the present case. It may have been open to him to apply to the High Court to set aside the order as one without jurisdiction, but it cannot be said that he was bound to do so or that it was his only remedy, though he would have been well advised if he had adopted that course. He was entitled to choose his remedy and the fact that he did not choose to come to the High Court cannot affect his right of suit under the general law. I think, therefore, his suit is maintainable.

The case of Hajee Abdul Lateef Sahib v. Official Assignee of Madras (2) and the case referred to in the foot-note to it, Official Assignee of Madras v. Mangayar Karasu Ammal (3), were both cases which arose under the Indian Insolvency Act and were brought to contest orders passed by the Madras Insolvency Court between the Official Assignee on the one side and the third party claiming title on the other. The orders being within jurisdiction under section 7 of the Act, the suits were held not maintainable. These cases are thus clearly distinguishable from the present case. The case of Pita Ram v. Jujhar Singh (4) is also distinguishable, as that was a case where the third party had himself elected to apply under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as he was entitled to do and though he had a right of suit as well, the learned Judges held that as he had elected to adopt one remedy and failed, he could not be allowed to fall back upon the other. Such a question does not arise at all in the present case. Here the plaintiff was brought into the Insolvency Court by the purchaser, that and in a proceeding which the Court was incompetent to adopt; the fact that he did not plead to the jurisdiction of that Court cannot give that Court jurisdiction, nor can it be treated as an election of his remedy by the plaintiff. The Allahabad case, therefore, does not apply.

No other authority has been cited before us. I am, for the reasons above stated, of opinion that the lower Courts were wrong in dismissing the plaintiff's suit as not maintainable. I would, therefore, set aside their decrees and remand the suit to the District Munsif for trial and disposal on the remaining issues. As pointed out by my learned brother, the prayer in the plaint to set aside the order of the District Judge is not correct in form; but it is not material to the plaintiff and will, therefore, be disallowed.

I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother as to costs also.

No. 872 OF 1912.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Mortgage, suit on—Defendant claiming prior charge—Suit decreed—Appeal by defendant—Court-fee payable.

In a suit on foot of a mortgage one of the defendants claimed that she had a prior charge on the property sought to be sold. The defendant's contention was overruled and the suit was decreed. Defendant appealed praying for a declaration that she had a prior charge over the property and that it could only be sold subject to that charge:

Held, that the defendant's prayer was for a declaration with consequential relief and that she must, therefore, pay ad valorem Court-fee on the amount of the charge claimed by her. [p. 313, col. 1.]

FACTS of the case appear from the following

OFFICE REPORT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff for recovery of Rs. 2,500 on account of principal and interest on foot of a mortgage, dated 4th May 1893, by enforcement of hypothecation lien.

Musammot Moti Begam, one of the defendants, defended the suit on the allegation that the property sought to be sold was conveyed to her as security for her dower-debt under a prior bond executed by her deceased husband, Sayed Hasan, on 9th February 1892, which bond was subsequently renewed by the heirs of her deceased husband on 5th August 1910. The said defendant contended that the property could not be sold until payment of the money due to her on account of her dower-debt secured by the deed of mortgage which she put up as a shield.

The suit was valued at Rs. 2,500, and a Court-fee of Rs. 150 was paid thereon.

At the trial of the suit the Court held that the plaintiff's mortgage was prior and decreed the plaintiff's suit. A decree was accordingly passed for sale of the mortgaged property under Order XXXIV, rule 4.

Musammot Moti Begam appealed to the lower Appellate Court, setting up inter alia a plea of priority and genuineness of the mortgage held by her. The lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the Court of first instance by extending the time for payment of the decretal amount, and in other respects the appeal was dismissed.

The appeal was valued at Rs. 2,500, and a Court fee of Rs. 150 was paid thereon. The proper valuation of the appeal was Rs. 2,519 inclusive of interest from date of suit to date fixed for payment of the decretal amount awarded in the decree appealed from, and a Court-fee of Rs. 155 was payable upon that valuation. Rs. 150 having been paid, there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 5 to be made good by the defendant-appellant for the lower Appellate Court.

Musammot Moti Begam has preferred this second appeal and the relief sought by the appeal is that the Hon'ble Court will be pleased to allow the appeal and declare that the appellant has a prior charge for the amount of her dower-debt and the property can be sold only subject to her charge. The appeal is valued at Rs. 2,500, and a fixed fee of Rs. 10 has been paid, apparently on the ground that a mere declaration is sought by this appeal.

I think a Court-fee of Rs. 10 paid in this Court is quite inadequate. The defendant-appellant seeks by this appeal to go behind the decrees of the Court below, decreeing the plaintiff's claim for sale of the mortgaged property and declining to accept the plea set up by the defendant in the Courts below and repeated in this Court in a somewhat different form.

The suit was a suit for sale on a mortgage on the basis of which the Courts below have passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. The defendant comes to this Hon'ble Court in second appeal, and by making a prayer in the form of a declaration wants to get rid of those decrees. Assuming that the defendant-appellant does not state in distinct words that the decrees below should be set aside, one should see what will be the consequence, if the declaration prayed for, be granted. Leaving out the question that the appellant is avoiding the decree passed against her, it is evident that the property will be subjected to a double charge created by the mortgages held by the parties and out of sale-proceeds the plaintiff may not get anything after meeting the prior charge of the defendant.

I am quite certain that the appellant is seeking for a declaration with a consequential relief, and, as such, she must pay ad valorem Court-fee of Rs. 175, on the amount of her mortgage, i. e., Rs. 3,000. Rs. 10 having been paid, there is therefore a deficiency of Rs. 165 due from defendant-appellant for this Court.

Total deficiency due from defendant-appellant for this Court and lower Appellate Court is Rs. 170.

The following objections to the report of the Stamp Reporter were raised by Counsel for the appellant:—

1. The object of the appeal is not to get rid of the decrees of the Courts below nor does the appellant seek "by this appeal to go behind the decrees of the Courts below decreeing the plaintiff's claim for sale of the mortgaged property", as remarked by the Stamp Reporter.

2. The appellant is desirous that the decree for the sale of the property may be allowed to remain intact but, it may be declared that her dower-debt is a prior charge. Almost a similar question arose in a case of Rup Chand v. Fateh Chand (1) and it was decided that a Court fee of Rs. 10 on the memorandum of appeal was sufficient.

3. Having regard to the above circumstances the Court-fee of Rs. 10 paid by (1) 11 Ind. Cas. 977; 8 A. L. J. 821; 33 A. 705.

the appellant on the memorandum of appeal is sufficient.

4. The Court-fee in the Court below was paid on the amount of the mortgage money under section 7 of the Court Fees Act and was sufficient and the Stamp Reporter is not justified in demanding any Court fee on the amount of interest on the memorandum of appeal either in this Hon'ble Court or in the Court below.

REPLY OF STAMP REPORTER.—In submitting the papers to you under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, I beg to add that the ruling relied upon by the learned Counsel has no application at all to this case, and that according to the long standing practice of this Court ad valorem Court fee is always charged on pendente lite interest.

I cite two cases, viz., Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (2) and Baji Lal v. Gobardhan Singh (3).

These are converse cases. In these cases the appellants sought to get rid of the liability imposed by the decrees appealed against, while in the present case the appellant is seeking to impose a further liability on the property in suit. In the second ground of appeal the appellant distinctly assails the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the right of the appellant under the deed was barred by time and extinguished for all purposes under the law. The relief sought by the appeal may be read thus:—

It may be declared that the appellant has a prior charge for the amount of her dower-debt and that the property can be sold only subject to her charge by reversing the concurrent findings of the Courts below, in so far as they affect her deed, on the ground set forth in the memorandum of appeal.

I most respectfully submit that a very substantial consequential relief is involved in the case and under section 7, clause (iv) (c), read with clause 1 of the Court Fees Act, the appellant must pay ad valorem Court-fee on the amount of her own deed amounting to Rs. 3,000.

If the appeal prevails and the Hon'ble Court holds that the appellant has a prior charge and directs the property to be sold subject to her prior charge, the appellant may apply for sale of the property under Order XXXIV, rule 12, and the Court acting under Order XXXIV, rule 13, may first satisfy the prior charge out of the sale-proceeds and then give the balance to the plaintiff-respondent. If the law allows such a procedure, the appellant will get her mortgage money on payment of Rs. 10 without bringing a fresh suit.

In any case I most humbly submit that it is manifestly a case in which the appellant is not only trying to get rid of the liability imposed upon her by the decree but to impose a further liability on the property, and as such the appellant must pay ad valorem Court-fee on the further charge thus imposed.

NOTE BY THE TAXING OFFICER.—I have heard the learned Counsel and am not convinced by his arguments. In the appeal to the District Judge, Saharnapur, full Court-fee was paid. In this appeal the whole of the decree is attacked by the second ground. I agree with the Stamp Reporter that the full Court-fee should be paid on this appeal, but Mr. A. Raoof maintains that he seeks merely a declaration and that the case is one of general importance in view of the Full Bench ruling, Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (4). At his request I submit the question for the decision of the Hon'ble Taxing Judge.

The Stamp Reporter should quote the rulings on which he relies.

Mr. A. Raoof, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The amendment has been made. Court-fee must be paid on the amount of the prior charge. I allow two days to make good the deficiency.

Order accordingly.

Execution of decree—Instalment decree—Default in payment of instalment, effect of—Limitation.

A decree for Rs. 800 odd made on the 28th June 1910 provided that the debt should be paid off by eight annual instalments of Rs. 100 each, and there was a term in the decree that on failure to pay any one of these instalments before the next had become due, the creditor could call in the whole amount of debt with interest at the agreed rate. No instalment was ever paid and in September 1915 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree:

Held, that the right to execute the decree for the whole amount of the debt having accrued to the decree-holder as a complete legally enforceable right before the end of 1910, and the limitation allowed to him within which to enforce it being three years, the application for execution was barred by time. JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The point raised here is one of considerable interest and must, I think, have been one of frequent occurrence. We are not referred to any decision of our High Court upon it. The appellant, however, relies upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (1), which would appear to be conclusive in his favour. With great respect, I am doubtful whether the reasoning of that judgment will stand critical analysis and I will briefly give my reasons for being of a different opinion.

The point arises in this way upon an instalment decree in a very common form. A debt of roughly Rs. 800 had to be paid off by eight annual instalments of Rs. 100 each, and there was a term in the decree that on failure to pay any one of these instalments before the next had become due, the creditor could call in the whole amount of debt with interest at the agreed rate. It is found as a fact that no instalment was ever paid. The decree was made on the 28th June 1909. In September 1915, the creditor presented this Darkhast, and the question decided in the Court below was one of limitation. It was decided against the judgment-creditor. The ground of appeal is that it was optional with him to waive all breaches on the part of the debtor to fulfil his obligations under the instalment decree and so, at the very end of the eight years, sue for at least three instalments in arrears then due. If this view be correct, it follows that the creditor would likewise be entitled to sue, within three years of failure to pay the last instalment, for the total amount of debt with interest. But that right had accrued to him as a complete legally enforceable right before the end of 1910 and the period of limitation allowed to him, within which to enforce it, would have been three years, no longer. I am entirely unable to accede to the argument that that right assumes the nature of a recurring right under an agreement such as this. For the effect would be that no matter how complete the right to call in a definite sum of money had become, the judgment-creditor might ignore it and extend the period of limitation, perhaps to the extent of some twenty instead of three years; as for example, if the instalment decree had provided for the repayment of the capital sum over a period of twenty years. Such decrees are by no means infrequent. Now, let me carry the analysis a little further. In all decrees of this kind the provisions for the payment of instalments are provisions in favour of the debtor, not the creditor. The very form of an instalment decree pre-supposes that the creditor's rights to that extent are curtailed and the debtor's rights enlarged. The right to pay by instalments, subject to conditions, is the debtor's not the creditor's right. The creditor's right is to enforce the payment of the full amount upon breach of condition, thus putting an end to the instalment decree as an instalment decree.
(1) 16 A. 371; A. W. N. (1894) 115; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 241.

RAICHAND MOTICHAND GUJAR V. DEND LAXUMAN BURE.

This analysis will, I think, at once reveal what seems to me, with great respect, the basic fallacy of the Allahabad decision. Nor do I think that the correct principle is in any way impaired by what is after all rather a sentimental consideration veiled in a specious argument, that construing decrees of this kind, as I would construe them, would be to compel the creditor to act harshly towards the debtor. When we remember that in any event the creditor has three years in which to consider his position after breach of condition, I confess, it appears to me, almost absurd to say that by dealing on principles of strict reasoning and logic with these decrees we should offer inducements to creditors to press too hardly upon their debtors. For after failure on the part of the debtor to pay one year's instalment and in the absence of any intention on his part to pay any further instalment in the future, it ceases to become a question of indulgence at all. What the creditor would do, on the principle permitted by the Allahabad Court, would be no more than to balance the pecuniary advantages and disadvantages of enforcing the decree at once or waiting for the last instalment. If I am to accede to the view pressed upon me by the learned Pleader for the appellant, it would always be open to the judgment creditor under a decree of this kind, allowing him ample interest, to sit quiet for a lengthy period and then call in the capital, with the accumulated interest, as though no right had been conferred upon him perhaps ten years earlier to the sum then due, a right governed by the ordinary law of limitation.

In my view, this and all similar cases fall to be decided on some such principle as I have endeavoured, perhaps roughly, to outline. If I am so far right, on the finding of the fact by the lower Court, this Darkhast is not in time, and this appeal ought to be dismissed with all costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree.

In this particular case, which is the case of a decree payable by instalments, the first instalment was payable on the 6th of June 1910, and it was provided that in case of default in paying an instalment within the time fixed for the payment of the next instalment thereafter, the plaintiff should recover in one sum the whole amount due at that time, together with interest, by the sale of the mortgaged property. Ordinarily the mortgagee would, of course, have been entitled to recover the mortgage debt in one lump sum after the expiration of the period of six months fixed by the decree. In this particular case he is not entitled to recover the entire sum unless the judgment-debtor fails to pay one of the instalments of Rs. 100, which is less than one-eighth of the entire sum. That is in itself a very great privilege to the judg.

ment-debtor, a great disadvantage to the creditor. But supposing that the debtor fails to take advantage of this valuable privilege, what follows? One would suppose, at least I should suppose, that what followed naturally would be that the privilege would be cancelled and that the judgment-creditor would thereupon become entitled to recover the whole debt in the usual way. And this result would be in consonance, it seems to me, with ordinary legal and equitable principles and is exactly what would be expected from the application of common sense and fair dealing. And as a matter of fact it is generally understood, in this Presidency by our Judges, that what I have just described is the principle which underlies the framing of instalment decrees. We have here a case in point. The trial Judge and the Judge of first appeal both of them unhesitatingly accepted the principle which I have indicated, a principle which leads to the conclusion that where the privilege is not taken advantage of by the judgment debtor, the decree ceases to be an instalment decree and becomes enforceable as an ordinary decree for the payment of a lump sum. This, of course, is a view which for all ordinary purposes is beneficial to the creditor. It enables him immediately to get in the whole of the debt instead of waiting for the prolonged period covered by payment of instalments. But it happens here, and it has often happened before, that the judgment-creditor is negligent of his own interests. He allows time to elapse, and when he finds that more than three years have passed without his enforcing the right to get in the judgment-debt as a whole and finds himself faced by a point of limitation, then he turns his back on the arguments which one would expect from him at ordinary times and takes to those which would for ordinary purposes be appropriate to the judgment-debtor. This revolutionary method of argument is, of course, not of a kind which appeals to a Court, for Courts prefer consistency of principle.

I have said what I consider to be the ordinary principle, and all that remains is to consider whether, in this particular decree, there are to be found indications that it is based on that principle, or whether it is intended by this particular decree to provide for some different solution of the question, what is to happen on failure to pay an instalment. I have quoted the passage pertinent to the point from the decree and it seems to me to be one of an ordinary kind, one which we must interpret by the principle which I have indicated. Therefore, I think that the lower Courts were quite right in dismissing this Darkhast as time-barred, and that the decree of the lower Court ought to be confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Letters Patent Appeals against the decrees of Mr. Justice Fletcher, differing in opinion from Mr. Justice Smither, dated the 30th May 1917, in Appeals from Original Decrees Nos. 387, 478 and 431 of 1914 respectively.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of

FLETCHER, J.—These appeals are preferred by the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 against the judgment of the learned First Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated the 31st of March 1914, decreeing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint, being the lands included in khatian No. 85-1 prepared and published under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, appertain to Mahal Ushpara, Touzi No. 2999, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the entire rent of the said lands and for other relief. The plaintiff's title is as follows:—The plaintiff was the owner of $\frac{1}{5}$ th of Mahal Madrasa, bearing the Touzi No. 145 in the Collectorate of the 24 Perganas. The remaining $\frac{4}{5}$ ths of the said Mehal formerly belonged to Hari Mohan Roy and Peary Mohan Roy. Within such Mehal there is a taraf called Ushpara and in that taraf there is a Mouza Gangapur Bagmari. On the 25th of Chait 1266 B. S. one Gokulmoni Dassi executed a kabuliyat in respect of 1,000 bighas appertaining to the said Mouza in favour of Hari Mohan Roy and Peary Mohan Roy, and on the 2nd of Assar 1287 B. S. she executed a similar kabuliyat in favour of Kailalva Nath Biswas, the then owner of $\frac{1}{5}$ th of the Estate Touzi No. 145.

In the year 1290 a measurement was made of the land in the possession of Gokulmoni. She was found to be in possession of 1,819 $\frac{1}{2}$ bighas and a fresh kabuliyat was executed by her. Then Peary Mohan Roy, who had acquired his brother's share in the property, sued Gokulmoni for arrears of rents in respect of his share and obtained a decree. In execution of such decree Gokulmoni's tenure was brought to sale and purchased by Peary Mohan Roy. One Tasseruddi Mondal then put in a petition under section 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure and obtained an order for restoring him to possession, but before that order was made Peary Mohan instituted a suit No. 138 of 1890 against Gokulmoni, Tasseruddi and the owners of Touzis Nos. 172 and 173 for establishment of his title to and confirmation of possession of the said tenure. This suit was decreed in the First Court. An appeal was then preferred to the High Court. Whilst such appeal was pending, Peary Mohan parted with his interest in the Touzi and the tenure to Maharaja Sir Jatindra Mohan Tagore, the late father of defendant No. 6. Ultimately the judgment was upheld on appeal.

Gokulmoni had executed two mortgage-deeds in favour of Ram Kristo Nashkar—one in Bhadra 1293 and the other in Aswin 1295. Ram Kristo brought a suit on these mortgages and obtained a decree. In execution of this decree the mortgaged properties were brought to sale. Some of the mortgaged properties were purchased by Ram Kristo Nashkar and the remainder by Parmessar Mal.

SHIB CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY v. HARENDRA LAL RAI CHOWDHURY.

Parmessar Mal, having failed to obtain possession of the property purchased by him, brought two suits against Maharaja Sir Jatindra Mohan Tagore and others for establishment of his title and obtained decrees which were affirmed on appeal on the 5th November 1903. Parmessar Mal then sold his interest to Ram Kristo Nashkar's executor, the defendant No. 1. In 1906 and 1909 the plaintiff sued the Maharaja and the defendant No. 1 for arrears of rent but only obtained a decree for the amount admitted by defendant No. 1.

In 1903 a partition was effected by the Collector between the plaintiff and his co-sharer; the plaintiff became the owner of the taraf Ushpara, the taraf being given the Touzi No. 2999, but in the Record of Rights prepared and published under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint were included in khatian No. 85-1, and described as belonging to the owners Nos. 147-1, 147-2, 172, 173 and 2999 and in the possession of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. On this the plaintiff brought this suit for establishment of his right to the property in dispute as a part of his Mahal Ushpara bearing Touzi No. 2999 and for a declaration that he is entitled to the entire rent receivable in respect of the same. The defendants No. 4 are the owners of the adjoining Mouza Tardaha. On the 19th of March 1860 the then owner of Mouza Tardah granted to Tarak Nath Bose, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, a lease of 300 bighas rent free for the first seven years and ultimately at a rent of 8 annas a bigha. The 300 bighas was stated in the lease to lie "east of the Samedgiriganj" which it is common ground is the river Bidyadhari. On the 6th of April 1870 the predecessor-in-title of the defendant No. 4 granted a permanent lease to one Jadab Chandra Banerjee of 725 bighas within the boundaries mentioned therein at a rent rising ultimately to 9 annas a bigha.

Gokulmoni, as already stated, acquired the interest granted to Jadab Chandra Banerjee by two kobalas, dated respectively the 24th February and the 11th July 1879. Gokulmoni mortgaged by two mortgages, dated respectively the 31st of August 1886 and the 25th of June 1888, both her lease-hold interest held from the predecessor of the plaintiff and that originally granted to Jadab Chandra Banerjee in favour of Ram Kristo Nashkar as mentioned before. On the 12th of September 1889 the suit already mentioned was brought to enforce these two mortgages and a decree was passed on the 31st of December 1890, which was upheld on appeal. In execution of this decree the property was brought to sale, a portion of the mortgaged property was purchased by Ram Kristo Nashkar and the rest by Parmessar Mal. Parmessar Mal, being unable to obtain possession of the property purchased by him, brought a suit against Maharaja Sir Jatindra Mohan Tagore to recover possession of the same. Parmessar Mal was successful in that suit. The judgment of this Court in that suit was delivered on the 2nd of April 1903, the Court holding that whether the mortgaged property was held out of the Estate Nos. 172 and 173 or Estate No. 145, the mortgages to Ram Kristo Nashkar were valid mortgages. On the 16th of May 1902 Maharaja Sir Jatindra Mohan Tagore brought a suit against the Boses to recover possession of a portion of the land covered by the decree in Suit No. 138 of 1890, which was in their possession, and on the same date the Maharaja brought a similar suit to recover from the Nashkars a portion of the land covered by the same decree in excess of the 1,819½ bighas in possession of the Nashkars—both these suits were withdrawn.

On the 5th May 1903 Parmessar Mal sold his interest to Doyal Nashkar, executor of the Will of Ram Kristo Nashkar, as already stated. Then followed two suits I have already mentioned for rent by the present plaintiff against Nashkar. These suits were only partially successful. Now it is obvious in the present case that the main point to determine in this appeal is what is the boundary between the Mouza Ganga-pur Bagumari and the Mouza Tardah. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that as it had been determined in the Suit No. 138 of 1890 that the river in its present position is the boundary between the two Mouzas, the matter is res judicata and he has, therefore, not considered the very careful report and map prepared by the Commissioner in the present case.

Saib Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Harendra Lal Rai Chowdhury.

Of course, if the river in its present course must be taken as the boundary between the two Mouzas, then doubtless the judgment of the learned Judge is correct.

But, in my opinion, the matter cannot be disposed of in so simple a manner. The plaintiff in Suit No. 138 of 1890 was entitled to the equity of redemption of Gokulmoni's tenure held out of Estate No. 145 and was also entitled to 4/5ths of the Zemindari interest. Even if it be assumed in favour of the plaintiff as against the Panihati Zemindars that by reason of the judgment in Suit No. 138 of 1890 there is an estoppel as regards 4/5ths of the property in dispute, the Nashkars and the Boses have a distinct and separate interest in maintaining the Record of Rights as at present. With regard to the Nashkars the present suit seeks for a declaration that they are liable to pay rent at the rate of 12 annas a biga for the whole of the land in dispute as being held under Gokulmoni's tenure held out of Estate No. 145. Unless it is open to them to contest the fact that the property is not held out of Estate No. 145, then they will be liable to pay rent at the rate of 12 annas a biga, as claimed by the plaintiff in this suit, instead of the lower rate reserved by the lease to Jadab Chandra Banerjee of which they are the assignees. The Boses, in the event of the matter being res judicata, are in a worse position for unless the property in their possession is held out of Estates Nos. 172 and 173, they have no interest in the land in dispute which is the plaintiff's case. Both the Nashkars and Boses have therefore a very material interest as to whether the disputed property lies within the limits of the Estate No. 145 or within the limits of the Estates Nos. 172 and 173, and the case cannot be disposed of as it has been by the learned Subordinate Judge by simply saying that the Nashkars and the Boses will pay their rent to the plaintiff instead of Panihati Zemindars. No estoppel as against the Nashkars can arise by reason of the judgment in Suit No. 138 of 1890. They claim under mortgages which were prior in date to the institution of that suit and not being represented in that suit, they are not bound by the decision [Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1)]. As regards the Boses, they claim under a permanent heritable lease. It has been argued that they were represented in Suit No. 138 of 1890 by their landlords. Whatever may be the correct view as to common tenants being represented by their landlords, a tenant having a permanent and heritable right cannot, I think, be so represented. This was the view taken in the case of Seshappaya v. Venkatramana Upadya (2). It is, therefore, I think, essential (whatever may be the position of the Panihati Zemindars), in order to adjudicate on the rights of the Nashkars and Boses, to determine whether the property in dispute forms a portion of the plaintiff's estate or whether it forms a part of the Estates Nos. 172 and 173.

The report of the Commissioner in the present case and his map are to the effect that the plan prepared in Suit No. 138 of 1890 is wrong. I was much struck during the argument in this appeal that the learned Vakil for the respondent did not refer to the map prepared by the Commissioner but attempted to support the judgment appealed against on the ground that the judgment was res judicata and in so far as it was not res-judicata, it was an important piece of evidence and ought to be given effect to. But unless a case of estoppel arises, it is the duty of the Court to consider whether the judgment in Suit No. 138 of 1890 is correct. That judgment proceeded on the footing that the river was the boundary between the two Mouzas and that boundary was ascertained by a relay of the survey map. But rivers in India frequently alter their courses, and we have to see whether the river shown in the earlier survey map is in the same position as the river shown in the map prepared in Suit No. 138 of 1890. I think the Commissioner in this case has shown that the map in Suit No. 138 of 1890 was incorrectly relaid. It was not suggested that the Commissioner has not done his work well. He was called as a witness by the plaintiff and was only cross-examined as to whether the instrument he used was correct. The instrument he used was the property of the Court and there is no reason to think it was not accurate now at the time of the Revenue Survey map, which was purported to be relaid in Suit No. 138 of

(1) 8 A. 324; A.W.N. (1886) 101; 5 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 105.

SHIB CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY v. HARENDRA LAL RAI CHOWDHURY.

1890, Mouza Gangapur Bagmari was bounded on the west by the river along the southern $\frac{2}{3}$ rds of its western boundary. Tardah was on the other side of the river. If the river has moved west since the Revenue Survey, it has left Gangapur Bagmari and there is land between. In the Revenue Survey the shape of Gangapur Bagmari is roughly

The distance from A on the river side to B is less than half the distance from B to C. There has been no change in the area B C D E. In the map prepared in Suit No. 138 of 1890 the distance from the river bank to B is greater than the distance from B to C. That is, the river is more than twice as far west of B than it was at the time of the Revenue Survey. The river has, therefore, moved westwards. Further, in the Revenue Survey map starting from the south the line of the river is a little east of north, but in the map prepared in Suit No. 138 of 1890 it is west of north. Nor is the report of the Commissioner in this suit the first occasion in which it has been suggested that the map in Suit No. 138 of 1890 is inaccurate.

In the Rent Suit No. 2 of 1906 brought by the present plaintiff a map (Exhibit B 145) was prepared. This map shews the river far west of the old boundary, and the Commissioner appointed in that suit reported that the river "as it at present exists lies far to the west of the western boundary line as laid down in my map according to the Revenue Survey map."

The Commissioner in this suit reported that the area of the land described in Khatian No. 85/1 lying within Gangapur Bagmari was bighas 2,131-13-0 gundas equivalent to local bighas 1,887-15-10-17 gundas, an area sufficient to satisfy the 1,819 $\frac{1}{2}$ bighas comprised in the lease to Gokulmoni by owners of the Estate No. 145.

In my opinion we ought to accept the report and map of the Commissioner prepared in the present case and accept as the boundary between the two Mouzas the red line shown on the Commissioner's map as the relay of the boundary line from the Revenue Survey map.

Further, I do not think that the decision in Suit No. 138 of 1890 gives rise to a case of res judicata as regards $\frac{4}{5}$ ths of Zemindari interest in Mouza Gangapur Bagmari. The plaintiff in that suit sued for possession on the lease granted to Gokulmoni by the owners of Mouza Gangapur Bagmari. No doubt the issue was raised as to whether the property sued for was within the limits of Mouza Gangapur Bagmari or of Mouza Tardah. The title to the zemindari interest at the date of the grant of the lease to Gokulmoni would be a matter in issue in that suit, but when once it was determined that the lease to Gokulmoni was a valid lease and covered the land in dispute, it was wholly immaterial to inquire whether or not the plaintiff in that suit had also acquired a fractional interest in the Zemindari. The fact that the plaintiff had a $\frac{4}{5}$ ths share in the zemindari interest in Mouza Gangapur Bagmari did not affect his claim in that suit in any way. The plaintiff in that suit was bound to succeed or fail on his proving or failing to prove that Gokulmoni had a valid lease of the property sued for. I think that the plaintiff in the present suit is not litigating under the same title as the plaintiff in Suit No. 138 of 1890 and, therefore, he is not entitled to use the judgment and decree in that case as an estoppel against the Panibati Babus in the present case.

It is a matter for comment also that the plaintiff has never realised more rent than the Rs. 1,424, which is given in the compromise petition before the Collector as the rent of Mouza Gangapur Bagmari. The learned Judge seems to think that it is doubtful whether there ever was a bari known as Puti Baba's bari: Puti appears to be a name commonly applied to a person whose proper name is Preonath. The 59 kabuliyats produced by the Boses and the boundaries given in the same strongly support the case of the Boses. The conduct of the defendants in either not appearing before the Commissioner or appearing by representatives who were of no assistance is to be condemned, but I am satisfied that the Boses have in fact been in possession of the land they claim.

The plaintiff has clearly not been in possession of the lands outside the limits of his Mouza as shown in the map of the Commissioner. His whole case as to this land rests on the judgment in Suit No. 138 of 1890 and, in my opinion, that judgment does not assist him in the present suit.

In the result, I think we ought to set aside the judgment and decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and in lieu thereof we ought to declare that the western boundary of the plaintiff's Mouza is the red line shown in the Commissioner's map prepared in this suit as being the relay of the western boundary shown in the Revenue Survey map. As to lands within that boundary in the possession of the Nashkars, the plaintiff will be entitled to get rent at the rate of 12 annas a bigha.

The rest of the plaintiff's claim ought to be dismissed. I think there ought to be no order as to the costs of this suit either in this Court or in the Court below.

SMITHER, J.—The plaintiff is proprietor of Gangapur Bagmari, in his Estate No. 2999, formerly a part of Touzi No. 145. This is not now questioned. He asserts that the lands in suit are his property as appertaining to that estate, and by adverse possession.

He also says that the lands are included in a tenure, called Gokulmoni's tenure, held under him by defendant No. 1, who is bound to pay rent at the rate of 12 annas per bigha. These are his principal assertions.

But in the Record of Rights entries have been made showing not only the plaintiff, but also the proprietors of Estates Nos. 147-1, 147-2, 172 and 173 as proprietors of these lands; and defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and not only defendant No. 1, as tenants.

Therefore, the plaintiff wants a declaration that all the lands are included in his Estate, and that defendant No. 1 is bound to pay him rent for all the lands.

These are the principal prayers.

The plaintiff says that the lands in suit now (plaint, paragraph 14) were also in suit in No. 138 of 1890 (Alipore Subordinate Judge's Court) and that it was then decided that all the lands, extending to the river Bidyadhari on the west, were within his Estate, and that the proprietor of Estates Nos. 172 and 173 had no title or possession in them. In the Thak map, Gangapur Bagmari extends westward to the river.

In Suit No. 138 it was decided that the river was still the boundary on a relay of the Thak map, and a decree was given accordingly.

If the river is still the boundary, and has not moved away westwards, the plaintiff succeeds, as against the Tardah Zemindars, proprietors of Estates Nos. 172 and 173.

In fact the relay of the Thak in suit No. 138 was incorrect. The river then was, and still is, far west of the Thak boundary of Gangapur Bagmari. Of the reasons for holding this, sufficient have been stated by my learned brother. We agree on that point, which is a very important point in this case.

But I am unable to agree that the decree in Suit No. 138 has no effect by way of res judicata, as between the plaintiff and the Tardah Zemindars.

The plaintiff in that suit was $\frac{4}{5}$ ths proprietor of the present plaintiff's estate, and was also proprietor of Gokulmoni's tenure. Against him, in an execution proceeding, one Tasseruddi had succeeded on a claim that he, Tasseruddi, held the lands under a tenure under the Tardah Zemindars, Estates Nos. 172 and 173. On this, the plaintiff sued, asserting, paragraphs 1 and 4 of that plaint, his $\frac{4}{5}$ ths proprietary title, and, paragraphs 2 and 5, his right to Gokulmoni's tenure. He said, paragraph 6, that Tasseruddi had successfully claimed, as holding under a tenure under the Tardah Zemindars. He asserted, paragraph 7, that the land was not in Tardah at all, and that neither the Tardah Zemindar nor Tasseruddi had any right in it. He said, paragraph 8, that he made the Tardah Zemindars parties, because they had set themselves up to be proprietors of the land. He prayed for a declaration of his title and for other reliefs.

The Tardah Zemindars contested the suit to the end, through a period of 8 years. In their written statements, Exhibits 37 and 38, they denied that the lands were in Bagmari, in the plaintiff's estate (Exhibit 37, paragraph 4, Exhibit 38, paragraph 3) and they asserted that they were in their own estate, Tardah Nos. 172 and 173 (Exhibit 37, paragraph 6, and Exhibit 38, paragraph 3). They denied that the plaintiff had possessed the land as of Bagmari (Exhibit 37, paragraphs 5 and 7, and Exhibit 38, paragraph 6). They asserted possession through their own tenants (Exhibit 37, paragraph 6, Exhibit 38, paragraph 4) and they asserted that by their, the defendants' long possession, and owing to the plaintiff's not having possession, any claim of the plaintiff was barred by limitation (Exhibit 37, paragraph 5, Exhibit 38, paragraph 5). The tenants defendants also fought the suit. The Tardah Zemindars had granted a patta under which the tenants claimed.

The only issues framed were:—

First.—Is the suit barred by limitation?

Second.—Do the disputed lands or any of them appertain to thak No. 145 or to taluks Nos. 172 and 173?

A Commissioner was deputed to relay the thak maps. He says in his report, Exhibit 10, that his instructions were to ascertain "whether the land was in taluk No. 145, Bagmari, as claimed by the plaintiff, or in taluk Tardah Nos. 172 and 173 of the answering defendants." In his judgment, Exhibit 49, the learned Judge, in first appeal in that suit, says, "the plaintiff, therefore, files this suit, in which he seeks to have it declared that the disputed plots appertain to Mouza Gangapur Bagmari, and for establishment of Zemindari title in 12 annas 16 gundas, i. e., $4\frac{4}{5}$ ths, etc."

The judgment states the contention of the parties, and then proceeds to ascertain the boundary between the two estates; and finds in favour of the plaintiff, relying partly on the Commissioner's report. The finding is not very clear here, but the decree declares the plaintiff's title (Exhibit 52 confirming that decree).

Having found this point in favour of the plaintiff, that judgment proceeds to discuss the question of possession, which was claimed, through various tenants, by both Zemindars. Finally, it concludes, "upon the whole I came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's title prevails and as it is not shown that it is barred by limitation, he is entitled to the reliefs claimed."

It is to be noticed that while the finding as to title is that the plaintiff's title prevails, the finding as to possession is not that the plaintiff had possession within twelve years but only that it was not shown that he was barred.

On this there was an appeal to the High Court, which delivered the judgment, Exhibit 50.

In this judgment, it is noticeable how well the Court and the parties understood that the Zemindar's interest was at stake. That was the issue: and the judgment takes it to be almost the only question for decision. It states, "The plaintiff sues for a declaration of his title to and confirmation of possession of two plots of land, on the allegation that they belong to Mouza Gangapur Bagmari, Estate No. 145, of which he is the proprietor of a share of 12 annas 14 gundas." The Court then found that the question of title was settled by the decision of the Court of first appeal, but remanded the case for re-hearing of the question of limitation. The First Appellate Court then again, Exhibit 51, decided the question of limitation in favour of the plaintiff, and so confirmed its original decree. The decree is Exhibit 52.

There was an appeal by the Tardah Zemindars to the High Court. Their appeal was dismissed. The decree is Exhibit 54. It was argued before us that the Zemindari title was not really in dispute but only title to the tenure of Gokulmoni. That if that plaintiff had succeeded as entitled by Gokulmoni's tenure, he would have won the whole case, and so no decision as to the Zemindar's title would have been necessary.

But the holder of the Zemindari title was to get the rent, and had other valuable interests, whoever might be held to have tenancy right, and the tenure of Gokulmoni might be held not to cover the land or to be good, and yet the Zemindari title might stand. The Tardah Zemindars had actually granted a patta purporting to cover the land or some of it: and they asserted title in themselves, as Zemindars, to all the land: and they denied the plaintiff's title and tried to keep him out of possession, through tenants denying him, and recognizing themselves. The plaintiff had, I think, every right to sue for a declaration of his Zemindari title as against those Tardah Zemindars and the question was fought out, and as between the parties to that suit, that decision is binding. It would perhaps have been better if the owners of the remaining 1/5th share of the Zemindari had been made parties, but their absence would not leave the question open as between persons who were parties. That plaintiff claimed interest as Zemindar in 4/5ths of the land, and as tenure-holder in all the land, and he got that interest declared. The present plaintiff is the representative of that plaintiff, in respect of the 4/5ths proprietary interest, and also owns the remaining one-fifth.

The result is, in the absence of any subsequent change by adverse possession or other causes, that the present plaintiff, by virtue of that decision, has proprietary interest in 4/5ths of the land then in suit, as against the Tardah Zemindars.

That land has to be located.

I agree in accepting as correct the map and report of the Commissioner in the present case. He has relaid the map prepared in suit No. 138. The land then in suit includes land outside the land covered by the thak map.

As to the thak relay I would accept the blue line, as recommended by the Commissioner in paragraph 17 of his report, and not the red line, accepted by my learned brother. I find no reason not to accept the Commissioner's view. He seems to have done his work very carefully.

Therefore (as I find also that the plaintiff is not time-barred), the plaintiff will get a declaration that he is sixteen-annas proprietor of all the lands within the blue line, and is four fifths proprietor of all the lands between the blue line and the orange line, vide the Commissioner's map, and paragraph 18 of his report.

As to limitation—It was argued that since the decision of Suit No. 138 the plaintiff's rights have been destroyed in some of the lands, by the adverse possession of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and of the Tardah Zemindars through them.

But since that decision the Tardah Zemindars have not realised rent from them.

These defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 have never claimed proprietary right or any other than tenancy right, for themselves. They came into the land as tenants, and have never asserted any higher right, and can now have no higher right on a plea of adverse possession as against the Zemindar.

In the plaint, the plaintiff asks for a declaration that he is entitled to rent at the rate of 12 annas per bigha for some land, and at the prevailing rate for other land: and the lower Court has given a declaration that he will get rent at 12 annas per bigha for all the lands in the possession of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. This cannot stand.

I agree with my learned brother in finding that the Boses are in possession of the part of the land called Puti Babu's bheri. The lower Court has not come to clear findings as to the Boses' possession and has finally given directions as to what is to be done as to land which may hereafter be found to be in their possession. He has found that if they have possession, it is by permission of defendant No. 1. This is based on the ekrar, Exhibit A (94).

I find that the Boses have possession of the part of the land called Puti Babu's bheri (vide Commissioner's map and report), and that they held it before the existence of Gokulmoni's tenure, and not by permission of Gokulmoni.

The ekrar was executed in 1821, and it was not till 1884 that even on paper Gokulmoni had any right under the Bagmari Zemindars, in any land west of Andharia khal. The ekrar recognises the possession of the Boses of land west of the khal. In the kabuliyat of 1880, under which Gokulmoni then held, her western boundary was the khal.

Puti Babu's bheri is west of the khal between it and the river.

It was only in 1884, that Gokulmoni got a settlement purporting to cover land west of the khal, extending to the river. The Boses had held that land from long before that, and they never gave up possession. Whenever occasion arose, they successfully asserted it. It is to be noticed that in the ekrar itself, which was executed to provide for the work and expenses of keeping up embankments for the benefit of both parties, it is admitted that the Boses were in possession not by permission of Gokulmoni, but as having a settlement of the land (jamai), i. e., as of right. The deed provides for the continuance of the respective possessions of the parties, till boundaries are demarcated by the landlords. There is nothing to indicate that the Boses ever parted with possession, nor is it probable. When the decree-holder in Suit No. 138 took out delivery of possession, he found them there. They had not been parties to the suit. He brought another suit, to eject them. When that suit had been pending for two years, he withdrew, having lost the Zemindari interest. That was the last attempt to disturb the Boses: and they are not likely to have gone out voluntarily. But the Boses have never claimed any right higher than a tenancy right. They must pay rent to the Zemindar, the plaintiff. But it cannot be decided in this suit what the rent or rate of rent should be. They do not hold under Gokulmoni's lease.

Defendant No. 1 is in possession of the remaining bheris. Two of these are Andharia bheri and Dasani bheri. For them the plaintiff can get rent at Rs. 740 a year, as decided by the High Court, Exhibit B-149, and Exhibit 59, until the rent is altered.

The High Court left the question of rent open, in connection with the other two bheris, Jongra and Nazir's bheri.

The plaintiff's Zemindari title in part of these lands has been established and he is, therefore, entitled to rent. My learned brother and the learned Subordinate Judge have both held that this should be at twelve annas per bigha. It will be declared accordingly. The rest of the plaintiff's claim should be dismissed. I would allow the Tardah Zemindars and the Boses half their costs in this appeal, as they have succeeded in respect of a considerable part of their claims.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The facts have been set out in the judgments of the learned Judges of this Court upon whose difference of opinion the matter has been referred to us; as also in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. It is not necessary to repeat them in detail.

The suit is by the plaintiff against six defendants. It was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge as against defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and decreed against the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. On appeal to this Court the learned Judges differed and as there was, therefore, no judgment concurring in, varying or reversing the decree appealed from, it was ordered that the decree of the Subordinate Judge be affirmed and the cross-appeals dismissed, each party paying his own costs. The case has, therefore, been referred to us for decision under the Letters Patent.

There are three appeals before us in which the defendants severally are appellants. In Appeal No. 9 of 1917 the 1st defendant is Appellant, in Appeal No. 8 of 1917 the 2nd and 3rd defendants are appellants and in Appeal No. 6 of 1917 the 4th defendant is appellant. In each of the appeals the plaintiff and the defendants other than the appellants are respondents, the 5th and 6th defendants not appearing in any of the appeals.

The plaintiff is the owner of Taraf Ushpara in Estate No. 2999, formerly part of Touzi 145. In Ushpara there is a Mouza called Gangapur Bagmari. In the western portion of Bagmari there is a mokarrari lease which was formerly held by one Gokulmoni Dassi and is now held by the 1st defendant. The land covered by this lease is the subject-matter of this suit. The plaintiff says that the whole of the lands in suit are his property appertaining to Ushpara No. 2999, and that he is entitled to the entire rent for the land. He brings this suit because in the Record of Rights entries have been made showing not only the plaintiff but also the defendant No. 4 (in respect of Estates Nos. 172 and 173) and the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 (in respect of Estates Nos. 147-1, 147-2) as proprietors of the land in dispute. It also shows that not only defendant No. 1 but also defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are in possession as tenants. These last named defendants are tenants of defendant No. 4. The suit has been dismissed as against the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and we are no longer concerned with them. Estates Nos. 172 and 173 are represented by the 4th defendant. The estate is called the Tardah estate and its owners the Panihati Babus. This estate is to the west of that of the plaintiff. The western portion of Bagmari abutting it has, so far as it is in cultivation, been recovered from jungle. As the portion of Tardah abutting Bagmari was also jungly, a dispute has arisen as to the ownership of the lands. The suit, therefore, is one as between two Zemindars, namely, the plaintiff and the Tardah proprietors represented by the 4th defendant, and the point in issue is whether the land in suit wholly belongs as alleged to the plaintiff, or whether a portion of it belongs to the proprietors represented by defendant No. 4. It is admitted that the portions of Bagmari called Dasani Bheri and Andharia Bheri belong to the plaintiff but these defendants claim as their own the Bheris known as Jongra and Nazir which are said to be in the possession of defendant No. 1 as their mokur-rari tenant, and Puti Babu's Bheri, which is said to be in the possession of their tenants defendants Nos. 2 and 3. All the defendants made common cause to resist the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff's title to Estate No. 2999 is not in dispute, but whether the lands in suit are part of that estate.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit with costs against defendants Nos. 1 to 4. He declared the plaintiff entitled to the disputed land which is included in Khatian No. 85-1 as part and parcel of Touzi No. 2999, Mahal Ushpara, and awarding him possession of the same through his tenant the 1st defendant, who by his purchase of the tenure was said in the decree to stand in the place of Gokulmoni. Rent was awarded against him at the rate stipulated in the lease, viz., 12 annas per bigha for all lands found in the defendant No. 1's possession as Gokulmoni's tenure on measurement of 80 cubits to a rasi, a cubit being equal to 18 inches. He then held that if the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 be found on the same system of measurement to be in possession of any portion of the disputed land in excess of what is stated in their lease, they were ordered to pay rent to the plaintiff at the above rate and the defendant No. 1 will get remission to that extent, or to the defendant No. 1. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judge held that the judgment given in a previous suit No. 138 of 1890 instituted on the 2nd of July of that year was res judicata. A main question in the present case is what is the boundary between Mouza Gangapur Bagmari and Mouza Tardah. In that suit judgment in which has been held to be res judicata the Court held that the Bidyadhari river in its present condition, which is practically represented by the orange line in the Commissioner's map, is the boundary between the two Mouzas. In the Thak map Gangapur extends westward to the Bidyadhari river. In Suit No. 138 it was decided that the river was still the boundary on a relay of the Thak map and a decree was given accordingly. If the river in its present course is by virtue of the previous decision or in fact the boundary between the two Mouzas, then the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is correct. On appeal to this Court both Fletcher and Smither, JJ., held that in fact the relay of the Thak in Suit No. 138 was incorrect. They held that the river then was and still is to the west of the Thak boundary. Fletcher, J., was of opinion that the report and map of the Commissioner prepared in the present case should be accepted as also the red line shown on the Commissioner's map as the relay of the boundary line from the Revenue Survey map. Smither, J., said he would accept the blue line as recommended by the Commissioner in paragraph 17 of his report. In either case the western boundary of Bagmari is placed well to the east of the present position of the Bidyadhari river, the course of which (both the learned Judges held) has changed. The difference between the judgments of our learned brothers on this point is that the red line is further to the east of the river than the blue line, with the result that (even apart from the question of res judicata) the plaintiff gets less according to Fletcher, J.'s judgment than according to that of Smither, J. The adoption of the blue line gives the defendant No. 4 some 100 bighas less than he would get by adopting the red line.

In fact the learned Government Pleader who appeared for defendant No. 4 said he was satisfied with Fletcher, J.'s decision except as to Jongra Bheri. But the principal point of difference between our learned brothers is on the question whether the judgment in Suit No. 138 of 1890 was or was not res iudicata, and if so, between what parties to this suit. Smither, J., agreeing with the Subordinate Judge, has held that it is res iudicata, holding also that it is so as to 4/5ths of the land and other 1/5th not being represented in that suit. Fletcher, J., was of opinion that it is not res iudicata. The result according to the Subordinate Judge is that the plaintiff practically gets all the lands sued for lying to the east of the present position of the Bidyadhari river. According to Fletcher, J.'s judgment the red line shown in the Commissioner's map, being the relay of the western boundary shown in the Revenue map, is the western boundary of the plaintiff's Mouza. It is declared that the plaintiff is entitled to rent at the rate of 12 annas per bigha in respect of lands within that boundary in the possession of defendant No. 1 and the rest of the claim is dismissed. By Smither, J.'s judgment the plaintiff gets a declaration that he is the 16-anna proprietor of all the lands in dispute east of the blue line and (by virtue of the previous decision) of 4/5ths of all the lands between the blue line and the orange line which runs close along the river. The area between the blue and the orange line is said to be 1,365 bighas. The plaintiff is held entitled to rent at 12 annas per bigha from the 1st defendant in respect of lands held by him. Both the learned Judges also held that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are in possession of part of the land called Puti Babu's Bheri and have been holding it before the existence of Gokulmoni's tenure which the defendant No. 1 now represents. They are ordered to pay rent to the Zemindar, the plaintiff, though the rent or rate of rent is not decided in this suit.

As there was thus no majority reversing the Subordinate Judge's judgment it stands and is the subject of the present appeal.

It is convenient to deal with this complicated appeal firstly as between the rival claimants to the Zemindari title. The issue then is whether the lands in suit belong to the Zemindari of the plaintiff or the Tardah proprietors (defendant No. 4). The points on this head are whether there is a res iudicata by virtue of the decision in Suit No. 138 of 1890 as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 4 (using that expression for the parties represented by him); whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation, and whether his title has been lost by the alleged adverse possession of defendant No. 4 through his tenants defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The second part of the case involves an enquiry whether the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are his tenants, and at what rate. It is only necessary to discuss the issue between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, for the former defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have come to an arrangement to which I next refer. Defendant No. 1 contends that he is not bound by the decision in Suit No. 138 to which he was admittedly no party and in which (he contends) he was not represented. If so, his learned Pleader argues that it is open to him both to contend that the plaintiff is not his landlord and that if he is, he holds his tenancy under him on the terms under which he had a lease from the Tardah proprietors.

The plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 agree to the following terms:—

(1) That the plaintiff will be entitled to get from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to the extent of the plaintiff's interest, as will be determined by the Court in the lands hereinafter mentioned, rent at the rate of 8 annas only per bigha for the 16 annas as provided for in the patta Exhibit A-93, dated the 7th Chait 1236 B. S., for the lands of the part of Puti Babu's Bheri shown in the Commissioner's map in this case enclosed by a line indicated by the letters A. A. A. in red ink.

(2) That the plaintiff admits that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have got a permanent maurasi mokarrari right to the said lands with all the incidents of the lease Exhibit A-93, dated the 7th Chait 1236, B. S.

(3) That each party to this compromise will bear his own costs throughout.

(4) That the map prepared by the Commissioner will form a part of the decree.

Dealing with the primary issue of res judi-

cata first, the facts touching Suit No. 138 of 1890 are as follows:—

On the 6th April 1870, the Panihati Babus gave a permanent lease (Exhibit B 6) to Jadab Banerjee of three plots of land in Jongra Bheri of 301, 220 and 204 bighas, making in all 725 bighas, at a full rate of 9 annas per bigha. On 3rd December 1870 the same lessors gave another permanent lease to the same lessee of 795 bighas in Nazir's Bheri at a full rate of 8 annas a bigha. Then on 24th February 1879 the co-sharers of Jadab conveyed an 8-annas share in these lands and in another lease of 2,000 bighas, covered by a lease (not produced) of 17th July 1864 in Jongra Khal excluding (it is said) Jongra Bheri, to Gokulmoni Dasi. And on the 11th July 1879 Jadab sold the other 8 annas to Gokulmoni, who thus became entitled to the whole 16 annas under the two leases.

On the 6th April 1880 Gokulmoni took a permanent lease (Exhibit 7) from the 4/5ths owners of Bagmari Estate No. 145 of two plots of about 600 and 400, in all about 1,000 bighas. The 600 bighas are stated to be in Dasani Bheri and the 400 in Andharia Bheri. As the leases from the Panihati Babus were of Jongra and Nazir's Bheris, it would seem that the land covered by the lease was in the main at least different, though it is said by the learned Pleader for defendant No. 1 that it is possible that in some respects there may have been overlapping. The full rate was 12 annas per bigha, which for 4/5ths of 1,000 bighas works out at Rs. 600. It allowed for increase of rent on increased area found on re-measurement. On the 15th June 1888 a lease of the 1/5th interest was granted by the Bagmari proprietor, Kaivallya Biswas. The full rent was 150 for the 1/5th interest in the 1,000 bighas. The land was subsequently re-measured and on the 11th April 1884 the 4/5ths Bagmari proprietor gave Gokulmoni a fresh lease in respect of 1,819½ bighas (Exhibit 8). No similar lease was granted by the 1/5th proprietor but rent was paid as though such a lease had been granted. The position at this point is that Gokulmoni possessed a lease hold interest from the Bagmari proprietors of Andharia and Dasani Bheris and of the Jongra and Nazir's Bheris from the Tardah proprietors purchased from Jadab Banerjee and his co-sharers. Gokulmoni and her husband then executed two mortgages of 31st August 1886 and 26th June 1888. These are not in the paper-book but with consent we have referred to the mortgages which are printed in paper-book of the Appeal No. 83 of 1890. We are not concerned with the later mortgage, which was of Rannar Bheri. The earlier mortgage alone deals with the property in dispute in this suit. It mortgaged lands covered by the lease of the Tardah Babus to the Banerjees, viz., 3,520 bighas which comprised the 2,000, 725 and 795 bighas above mentioned. There was no mortgage of the Andharia and Dasani Bheris. The subject of the lease from the Bagmari proprietors were not mortgaged. The mortgage was to Ram Kristo Naskar, predecessor of defendant No. 1. A mortgage decree was given on 31st December 1890. Four months before this Peary Mohan Roy representing 4/5ths Bagmari proprietors instituted Suit No. 138 of 1890. The way that suit came about was as follows: After the mortgages Peary Mohan Roy, in a suit for rent against Gokulmoni, executed his decree and purchased her jote subject to the right of the mortgagee, if any. Roy, got possession on which one Tasiruddi Mollah put in a claim which was allowed but before he could get possession Roy brought a suit to establish his title, being No. Suit 138 of 1890, in respect of which the issue of res judicata arises. In that suit it was decided that the lands in dispute (which are those in dispute now) were in the estate of the present plaintiff. Subsequently Ram Kristo Naskar executed the mortgage decree. Five plots covered by the first mortgage were sold, viz., plots No. 3 (part of Jongra) and No. 5 (Nazir) to one Parmeshwar Mal and plots Nos. 1, 2, 4 including the rest of Jongra Bheri, were purchased by the mortgagee Ram Kristo Naskar, Parmeshwar re-sold later to Dyal Naskar, with the result that the tenancy title in all the plots is in the first defendant. The conveyance by Parmeshwar (Exhibit 55) contains, it is said, an error in so far as the schedule speaks of rent being payable in respect of Chuk of 220 bighas and 795 bighas being payable to the plaintiff, for these were properties leased by the Tardah Zemindars. This, however, is not admitted. It appears to be the fact that the defendant No. 1 is in possession of all the lands which Gokulmoni held,

SHIB CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY v. HARENDRA LAL RAI CHOWDHURY.

From the above recital of facts, however, it appears that Andharia and Dasani Bheris covered by the lease given by the Bagmari proprietors were not mortgaged or sold under the mortgage decree. Therefore, defendant No. 1 purports to show documentary title only as regards Jongra and Nazir's Bheris, and he can then only rely on his possession and that of his predecessor since 11th September 1893, when execution was had of the mortgage decree, as regards the rest of the property. However the documents may be, the parties have always proceeded and now proceed on the assumption that the defendant No. 1 has a tenant's title to the whole of Gokulmoni's jote, whether held under the Tardah or Bagmari proprietors. The plaint so deals with the matter and the learned Pleader for the plaintiff states that he admits that defendant No. 1 is the tenant of Gokulmoni's jote held under Estate No. 145 of the Bagmari proprietors.

Dealing with the question of identity of parties first, the plaintiff Peary Mohan Roy in Suit No. 138 represented (it is admitted) the present plaintiff as to 4/5ths, the other 1/5th not being represented, and the Roy Chowdhury defendants represented the Tardah estate now represented by defendant No. 4. The present defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 were not parties to the Suit No. 138, unless it can be said that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were represented by their landlords, the Tardah proprietors, and that defendant No. 1 was represented by Gokulmoni Dasi whose properties he subsequently purchased. This point, so far as it affects the 1st defendant, I deal with later.

As regards the issue, there can be no question that the same issue was decided in Suit No. 138 as is in contest now. The dispute really ranges round the question whether the parties were litigating under the same title. It is argued for the defendant No. 4 that they were not, because what was in issue was, it is said, not the Zemindari title, but the mokurrari title of Gokulmoni which the then plaintiff had purchased. It may be conceded that the suit might have been framed in this way, in a manner to make it clear that it was a matter of indifference who was the Zemindar and that all that in which the plaintiff was concerned was to establish his right to the mokurrari, under whomsoever it might be held. It may also be that if pleadings are framed to call for a decision on one issue, the fact that others are unnecessarily introduced will not make a decision on such issues res judicata. It is unnecessary to discuss this point here. It is enough to say that on my construction of the pleadings and issues in the suit the Zemindari title was directly put in issue. I need not recapitulate the facts supporting this conclusion set out in Smither, J.'s judgment. There is an obvious reason why the Zemindari title was put in issue, for the plaintiff was both Zemindar and purchaser of the tenure and, therefore, the party entitled to the rent if he established both titles. He was interested to establish both titles and in my opinion sought by his suit to do so. The Panihati Zemindars met him on that issue and the Court decided it. I am of opinion therefore that as between the rival Zemindars, the plaintiffs and defendant No. 4, the judgment in suit is res judicata.

Apart from res judicata the plaintiff has sought to establish his title on the facts to all lands up to the Bidyadhari river on the west or to the orange line on the map, which closely follows it and which he is willing to accept, being the boundary laid down in Suit No. 138. In other words, he contends that the judgment is not only res judicata but is correct as regards the boundary which in that suit was relaid from the survey-map. In Suit No. 138 the orange line on the map was found to be the western boundary and this practically corresponds with the Bidyadhari river. If this be the fact it is not necessary to rely on res judicata.

The Commissioner, however, was of opinion that Mouza Bagmari as shown in the map prepared in Suit No. 138 was not a correct representation of the Mouza as shown on the Revenue Survey map. He shows the position of the Bidyadhari river according to the survey map. It is not now found, he says, at that place. Its present position is shown. He says that the different positions of the river can only be explained in two ways. Either the river has, since the date of the Revenue Survey, changed its course or it was not properly delineated on the Survey map. As regards the latter supposition, it is to be observed that there is a rebuttable presumption of accuracy in favour of the Survey map. Has that presumption been rebutted? Both Fletcher and Smither, J.J., were of opinion that the river had moved westwards. As against this it has been argued that a case of alluvion and diluvion was not made, and that this is one of the smaller rivers in which it might not be expected. It is also said that a comparison of the areas show that the Survey map was incorrect. On the other hand it is admitted that the river is still a running stream and there is direct evidence in this case that the river has shifted owing to a "drying up". There is no evidence that the river has not changed its course and I am not prepared, therefore, to hold that the revenue map was wrong and that the relaying of it in Suit No. 138 was correct. I think we should adopt the blue line as the western boundary of Bagmari. The result, therefore, is that, as Smither, J., holds, the plaintiff is entitled, if his claim is not time-barred and if there has been no adverse possession, to a declaration that he is 16 annas proprietor of all the lands in suit within the blue line and is, by virtue of res judicata as between him and defendant No. 4, the four-fifths proprietor of all the lands between the blue line and the orange line as shown on the map attached.

I am of opinion further that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation or lost by adverse possession.

It is said that defendant No. 4 has had adverse possession through his tenants. The pleading of this defendant in paragraph 19 of his written statement asserts a title by adverse possession and limitation against the plaintiff. The plaintiff put in issue his title by adverse possession. So also did the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, a matter with which we are not now concerned.

But defendants Nos. 1 and 4 did not and cannot do so now. The Subordinate Judge held, as did also the learned Judges of this Court, that limitation does not arise. I am of the same opinion. The Subordinate Judge says as regards limitation and adverse possession by defendants Nos. 2 and 3:—

"With regard to Gokulmoni's Chuk there is nothing to show that either Gokulmoni or her husband ever paid rent to the Panihati Zemindars and the rent receipts granted to Doyal Kristo by the said Zemindars relate to Mouzas in Beotab and Tardah. The challans by which Ram Kristo deposited rent to Sita Nath Das relate to Rannar in Koridanga and Kushdanga. It is not at all likely that the Maharaja, after having secured a decree in respect of the land covered by the Taluk No. 145, would allow any portion of it as shown in the map to be possessed by any third person. The patta granted by the Panihati Babus to Tarak Nath Basu (see Exhibit A-93) is a junglebari lease, in respect of certain jungle lands situated in Taraf Tardah in village Tardah, and the area was 300 bighas. In the Chapperbundi map Exhibit A (233) the jungle portion to the west belonged to several estates including Estates Nos. 172 and 173. The Mouzawari Exhibit E shows that in Bagmari the Estates Nos. 172 and 173 have 194 bighas (quere acres) + cottas 1 chattack of land, while in Gangapur according to Rudd's Robakary there was no land belonging to the said estates and so at the time of Revenue Survey this quantity of land, viz. 194 bighas (quere acres) and odd was detached from Gangapur Bagmari and assigned to Tardah. Thus on a consideration of the evidence before me I am of opinion that the defendants were never in possession of any portion of Gangapur Bagmari as appertaining to Tardah, and it is not at all likely that the owners of the adjoining Mouzabs would trespass into any portion of the plaintiff's Taraf in the face of the Revenue Survey map."

This question of adverse possession was argued before this Court but has not been gone into in detail in the judgments of the learned Judges of this Court, except that Smither, J., holds that since the decision of Suit No. 138 the Tardah Zemindars have not realised rent from defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Whether the matter was seriously argued or not the point is clear enough. There is no documentary evidence to show that the Panihati Babus collected rent from Jadab Banerjee or from Gokulmoni. This was also held in the appeal in suit No. 138. In that case also the Panihati Zemindars did not produce their account books. It is a strong point that Gokulmoni, who had a lease from the Tardah proprietors, executed a kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff: thus indicating that she could not get possession from the Tardah proprietors of the lands in suit. The dakhilas produced refer to lands admittedly belonging to Tardah and to Beota. After attorning to the plaintiff, Gokulmoni's possession would not be adverse. The learned Pleader for the defendant No. 4 laid most stress on possession of Puti Babu's Bheri, admitting that the evidence as regards the other Bheris was weak. The rent receipts granted to the Basu defendants by the Panihati Babus relate to 300 bighas only, which, it is contended, are ill-defined: and if (as I find) the title was in the plaintiff, the defendant No. 4 as a trespasser cannot claim the benefit of constructive possession. As regards the Babus themselves, they have never claims any right higher than a tenancy right.

According to the Commissioner's report the defendant No. 1 did not appear before him on the spot and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear before him at all. They should have pointed out the lands of which they were in possession. They have not identified the Tardah lands. But the Amin says: "At the time of surveying the lands in suit no one of the defendants pointed out the portions which each defendant claims to be in possession of." These two objections as regards limitation and adverse possession fail.

It was also contended that there was a res judicata against the plaintiff. In judgment in Suit No. 2 of 1906 the decree was by consent for A and B plots (Andharia and Dasani Bheris) and the title to plots C and D (Jongra and Puti Babu's Bheris) was expressly left undecided. In the next Rent Suit No. 14 of 1909 there was no decision on title and the Panihati Zemindars were not parties. Rent was awarded as regards plots A and B which had been the subject of consent in previous suits. It is admitted by the plaintiff that this judgment is res judicata as regards the amount of rent (12 annas) payable in respect of Andharia and Dasani Bheris. But there is no res judicata as regards title.

I now pass to the case of the tenants. As regards defendants Nos. 2 and 3, as the Zemin-dari title of the plaintiff has been declared by the previous portions of this judgment, there will be a decree as against them in the terms agreed upon and previously mentioned.

As regards defendant No. 1 he has contended that the former suit, No. 138 was not res judicata either as against defendant No. 4 or himself. The former point I have dealt with. As regards himself he was not a party to the former suit and being a permanent tenant, he was not represented in the former suit by the contending landlords. But it is sought to bind him on the ground that Gokulmoni was a party and he now holds her interest. But Gokulmoni only represented the equity of redemption and did not, therefore, represent the mortgagee's interest. The fact that subsequently this defendant purchased under his mortgage part of her interest and later on the rest of her interest from Parmeshwar Mal will not have the effect, in my opinion, of making her at the time of suit No. 138 his (the 1st defendant's) predecessor-in-interest. Nor, in my opinion, have the cases, which hold that a mortgagee of an undivided share is bound by a decree in a partition suit to which his mortgagor is a party, any bearing on the question before us. The former suit No. 138 was therefore not, in my opinion, res judicata as against the defendant No. 1. What, however, is the effect of this finding? Defendant No. 1 does not claim any interest other than that of a tenant and it has been established in this case, to which he is a party that the plaintiff is his landlord. The result is that he must pay rent to the plaintiff, but as the former suit was not res judicata as regards him, the rent and incidents of his tenancy must be determined according as it is found that he is in possession of land covered by the lease given by the Bagmari proprietors to Gokulmoni or not. It is admitted that as regards Dasani and Andharia Bheris he holds these lands of Gokulmoni and must, therefore, pay the rent which she had to pay, that is 12 annas a bigha, and is otherwise governed by her lease. But as regards Jongra and Nazir's Bheris it is not clear what lands in these Bheris are covered by Gokulmoni's lease from the Bagmari proprietors and what are covered by lands leased by her from the Tardah proprietors. There must be an enquiry as to this and rent must be paid at 12 annas for any lands found on enquiry to be covered by the lease of the Bagmari proprietors to Gokulmoni, and as regards these lands any other incidents of her lease will apply. In the case of lands of Jongra and Nazir's Bheris not so covered and formerly held under the Tardaha proprietors the incidents of their lease will govern, and the defendant No. 1 will pay to the plaintiff rent for lands in Nazir's Bheri at 8 annas a bigha and 9 annas rent for lands in Jongra Bheri respectively.

There will then be a decree to the following effect:—In my opinion the plaintiff has established his title as Zemindar to the whole of the disputed land in suit to the east of the blue line shown on the map and to 4/5ths of the land between the blue and orange lines shown on the map. In respect of the land the title to which is so declared the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are his permanent Mourasi Mokurrari tenants. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 will pay rent in respect of Puti Babu's Bheri in their possession at the rate of 8 annas per bigha and the decree, so far as they are concerned, will be in terms of the agreement above stated. The defendant No. 1 will pay rent at the rate of 12 annas per ligha for the Bheris Andharia and Dasani in his possession and will hold the same on the terms of the lease granted by the Bagmari proprietors to Gokulmoni, and as regards Jongra and Nazir's Bheris I would direct an enquiry to determine the question what lands in these Bheris held by the defendant No. 1 are comprised within the lease granted by the Bagmari proprietors to Gokulmoni Dasi and what lands, if any, were held under leases from the Tardah proprietors. In respect of lands in these Bheris found to have been comprised in the Mokurrari lease granted by the Bagmari Zemindars to Gokulmoni Dasi, the defendant No. 1 will pay rent to the plaintiff at the rate of 12 annas per bigha and will hold such lands on the terms of the lease last mentioned; and in respect of lands in these Bheris not so found but formerly held under the Tardah Zemindars, the defendant No. 1 will pay rent to the plaintiff at the rate of 8 annas for lands in Nazir's Bheri and 9 annas for lands in Jongra Bheri respectively and shall hold the lands under the terms of the lease granted by these Zemindars. Thus the rent payable (whether under the lease from the Tardah proprietors or under Gokulmoni's lease) is 16 annas to the plaintiff in respect of all land to the east of the blue line and only 4/5ths in respect of land between the blue and the orange line. The plaintiff's suit beyond what is above declared is dismissed.

In the appeal of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 each party will, as agreed, bear his own costs throughout. As regards the appeal of the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 each party will bear the costs of this appeal and of previous hearings, as each party has been to some extent successful in their claims. The cost of the further enquiry here directed will be disposed of on such enquiry by the Judge before whom it is held.

Grants, kinds of—Resumption—Burden of proof.

For the purposes of resumption all ancient grants fall into two main categories: grants of lands burdened with service, and grants of office to which lands are annexed by way of remuneration instead of or along with cash. The former grants are always irresumable, unless the grantor can show that they have been specially conditioned so as to enable him to resume for failure to perform these services, or at his own will to discontinue the services and resume the lands. Grants under the second category are always resumable, unless the grantee can show that they have been specially conditioned otherwise so as to prevent their resumability. In every case it is always a question of fact to determine, whether the grant in suit falls within the first or the second category and the burden of proof must necessarily be upon the grantor seeking to resume to show that either the grant was of a kind falling under the second category, or if a grant of the kind falling under the first category, that it was specially conditioned. JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—This is one of a fairly common and always interesting class of cases. Where ancient grants in this country are brought into controversy at the suit of the grantor seeking to resume, the law has in this Presidency at any rate been clear, simple and invariable ever since I have had any practical knowledge of it. All grants of that kind for the purpose of applying this law fall into two main categories; grants of lands burdened with service, and grants of office to which lands are annexed by way of remuneration instead of or along with cash. The former grants are always irresumable, unless the grantor can show that they have been specially conditioned so as to enable him to resume for failure to perform these services or at his own will to discontinue the services and resume the lands. Grants under the second category are always resumable, unless the grantee can show that they have been specially conditioned otherwise so as to prevent their resumability. The first category has been sub-divided, though I think quite unnecessarily, for the purpose of discussing the broad principles of law in the case of Lakhamgula v. Keshav Annaji (1), into (a) grants burdened with service; (b) grants for services rendered in the past and to be rendered in the future, or, as we find in the older cases, pro servi- tiis impensis et impendendis. For the purpose of ascertaining the grantor's right to resume, this sub-division seems to me to have no relevance and to be of no assistance. Thus in every case of the kind it is always a question of fact and nothing more to determine, whether the grant in suit falls within the first or the second category. If it be found to fall within the first category, it is always prima facie irresumable. If it be found to fall within the second category, it is always prima facie resumable. And in every case the burden of proof must necessarily be upon the grantor seeking to resume to show that either the grant was of a kind falling under the second category, or, if a grant of the kind falling under the first category, that it was specially conditioned. Once these principles are clearly understood, I cannot see how there can ever be any difficulty in deciding cases of the kind we are dealing with, beyond of course the always extreme difficulty of ascertaining what the actual facts were in the case of very ancient grants, where the actual deed, if ever there was a deed, has long since been lost.

Here, I gather that the learned Judge of first appeal really meant to find that this grant was a grant of land burdened with services. He has referred to a very recent decision in the case of Yellava v. Bhimappa (2) which, again, has been followed and approved in the case of Baslingappa v. Chandrapa (3), as though this decision introduced some new element into the law. I do not think that it either did or was intended to. The reason why, as I understand it, the discussion was longer than is common in such cases to-day, was to rule out the rather vicious distinction drawn in a Calcutta case between "public" and "private" services. That distinction never has been recognised, as far as I know, in this High Court; and a very little reflection will show that in dealing with these ancient grants it would be virtually impossible to maintain such distinctions between the kind of services with which the lands were at the time the grant was made intended to be burdened. Nor in principle can the kinds of service so distinguished be of any value as affecting the application of the perfectly well-settled law. The most that could be said in favour of even noticing terms of this kind is that although the grants might have been in the first instance burdened with services and so irresumable, special conditions might be sought to be proved, and then it might become a question whether the grantor would be permitted under those conditions to dispense with services in the performance of which the public indirectly had an interest. I think, however, that going into nice refinements of that kind only complicates this simple branch of the law quite unnecessarily and with very little likelihood of helping us in its practical administration.

Now, looking to the nature of this grant which is admittedly nearer two centuries than one century old, I see no reason whatever to doubt but that on the facts before them the Courts below have come to the right conclusion. It is in the first instance extremely improbable that an Inamdar or a Durbar would create and grant a state office of peon, annexing thereto state lands by way of salary. On the other hand, it is extremely probable that the grantors here did in those remote days grant certain lands so that the grantees and their descendants should, when called upon, render to the grantors the services of peons. However that may be, the only facts found here, and the only facts which could be found, are that the grantees have been in continuous possession rent-free for about one hundred and sixty years; and there is absolutely nothing known of the actual terms, if any terms there were, of the original grant. In my opinion, therefore, only one inference was possible, and that is the inference which the Courts below have drawn, viz., that this was a grant of lands burdened with services. As such the lands were irresumable.

In my opinion the decision of the Courts below is right and this appeal (and the other sixteen companion appeals) ought to be dismissed with all costs.

HEATON, J.—In this case the first Court found what were the proved circumstances concerning the relations between the plaintiff, the Inamdar, and the defendant, who was granteo under him, and from those circumstances, undoubtedly correctly, inferred that the grant was not resumable. The same conclusion was reached by the Court of first appeal. In that Court, I gather from the judgment that the circumstances were not disputed and the only matter which the Court had to decide was whether, that being so, the lower Court was wrong in holding that the grant could not be resumed. The first Appellate Court decided, I think rightly, that the trial Court was not wrong. That is enough for the purpose of deciding this appeal. But some allusion has been made to a judgment of my own in the case of Yellava v. Bhimappa (2). It has been suggested in argument that this judgment is misunderstood, but I do not myself find any particular reason for supposing that it is. The only general importance of that judgment lay in the fact that we were declining to follow a decision which had been come to by the High Court of Calcutta. In every other particular it is merely a decision on the particular circumstances of that case; and though the decision may have been of the highest importance to the parties, it was not, excepting in the one matter I have mentioned, of any general importance.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 87—Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, non-transferable, mortgage of—Abandonment of holding—Landlord, right of, to recover possession.

Where an occupancy raiyat executes an usufructuary mortgage of his non-transferable holding and puts the mortgagee in possession, the landlord is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment of the holding within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. [p. 331, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 23rd

of August 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Sadar, dated the 15th of March 1915.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

“ This is an appeal by the plaintiff, whose suit for ejectment of the defendant from certain land has been dismissed.

The land in suit formerly constituted an occupancy holding, the tenant of which executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant and put him in possession of the land. In accordance with the terms of the mortgage, the defendant paid the rents, which were accepted, but not in her own name. The plaintiff also alleged that the tenant refused to pay the rent and eventually surrendered the holdings to him. The only evidence adduced to prove the surrender is the plaintiff's own testimony and I do not consider that testimony to be sufficient. In any case under section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no surrender is valid without the consent of the incumbrancer.

The plaintiff, however, relies mainly, in appeal, on the fact of the usufructuary mortgagee having been put in possession as entitling him to eject him. In support of this proposition of law he relies on the rulings reported as Krishna Chandra Datta Chowdhury v. Khiran Bajania (1) and Rasik Lall Dutt v. Bidhu Mukhi Dasi (2). They are both cases of a usufructuary mortgagee having been put in possession by the tenant. In the first case it was held that the landlord was entitled to eject the tenant, and in the second case it was held that he was entitled to eject the mortgagee. In the latter case, however, it was found that the tenant had abandoned his residence and made no arrangement for the payment of rent. These seem to have been the findings on those points on the first case, but then that case was decided under the previous Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1869). In the Full Bench case reported as Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3) it was laid down that the transfer of an occupancy holding otherwise than by sale does not entitle the landlord to re enter, unless there has been an abandonment or surrender by the tenant. What constitutes an abandonment, is defined in section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Amongst the essentials required by that section, is the abandonment by the tenant of his residence. In the present case the tenant has apparently not abandoned his residence, which, however, is in another village. Under these circumstances I am unable to hold that the tenant has abandoned the holding within the meaning of section 87, and that being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to eject the mortgagee. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.”

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Appellant.—Upon the findings of fact arrived at in this case the appeal ought to be decreed. The Court of Appeal below has misapplied the Full Bench case reported as Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3). There may be a forfeiture by the tenant in ways other than that laid down in section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court has only considered, whether there has been an abandonment within the meaning of section 87. It has not considered the Full Bench case in all its aspects.

Babu Satcowripati Roy, for the Respondent.—The mere fact that a tenant has executed a usufructuary mortgage of the entire holding, does not of itself cause forfeiture of the tenancy. Refers to Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (4). The Additional District Judge has found that there has been no abandonment by the tenant, consequently the suit has been rightly dismissed.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, in reply.—The Full Bench case was decided after the case in Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (4) and the conditions for a forfeiture are laid down there. If there is anything in Bhupendra Nath Bose v. Bansi Tanti (4) against the Full Bench that has been overruled by implication.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of Manupur, dated the 23rd August 1915, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The suit was brought for khas possession. The plaintiff was the landlord. The defendant was an usufructuary mortgagee of the recorded tenant who had been put into possession and the plaintiff, therefore, sued the defendant to recover possession. What the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found is this: He has found that the facts proved in this case do not show that the tenant abandoned the holding within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it is laid down by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (3) that where the transfer is the sale of the whole holding the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding, but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. The learned Judge in this case has only enquired into (a), namely, as to whether there had been an abandonment within the meaning of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He has not enquired into either (b) or (c), as he ought to have, to find whether the landlord has a right of re-entry. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back to that Court for the learned Judge to come to a conclusion as to whether there was a relinquishment of the holding or a repudiation of the tenancy and to pass a proper decree. Costs will abide the result of the re-hearing by the lower Appellate Court.

Case sent back.

A sale of the whole of a raiya holding at fixed rent is not invalid merely because the landlord's fee is not paid. But when the sale is only of a part of such a holding the landlord is not bound to recognize the purchaser, as such a sale constitutes a division of the holding. [p. 336, col. 1.]

A title acquired by adverse possession against a tenant is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 336, col. 2.]

Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen, 11 Ind. Cas. 453; 14 C. L. J. 136, relied upon.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Noakhali, dated the 2nd of September 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Sudharam, dated the 24th of June 1915.

FACTS.—One Munsur Ali was the recorded tenant under defendant No. 3. Munsur Ali sold the disputed land, which was a part of a raiya holding, at a fixed rent to one Asrab Ali in 1899. Asrab Ali in his turn sold it to one Yakub Ali in 1904. Yakub sold it to one Fazar Ali defendant No. 1 in 1905, who again sold it to Abdul Kabir defendant No. 2 in 1908. Fazar Ali took a barga lease from defendant No. 2 after the sale. No landlord's fee was paid in respect of the first three transfers. In the last sale, however, in 1908 by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 the landlord's fee was paid. But in spite of that the defendant No. 3, the landlord, sued Munsur Ali, the recorded tenant, for the entire rent and in execution of the rent-decree the entire holding was sold, the landlord himself being the purchaser. The disputed land was then settled by the landlord with the plaintiff, who brought this suit against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for declaration of title and for recovery of khas possession.

FAZAR ALI MISTRI v. AMIR BUKSH MIAN.

The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the last sale by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 was in fact recognised by the landlord, apart from any legal question arising from the payment of the landlord's fee. The lower Appellate Court, however, disbelieved the story of recognition and decreed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that as no landlord's fee was paid in respect of the first three kabalas, the sales were invalid and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 got no title to the land, and the payment of landlord's fee in respect of the last transfer did not help the defendants. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed to the High Court.

Babu D. L. Kastgir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitter), for the Appellants.—The finding of the Subordinate Judge that the first three transfers were invalid because no landlord's fee was paid, is clearly wrong. He overlooked the provision of section 1 of Act I (B. U.) of 1903. And as the landlord's fee was paid with respect to the last transfer, the landlord had clear notice of the title of the defendant No. 2 and he was bound to make the defendant No. 1 a party to the rent suit. The decree made in the suit against Munsur Ali alone was only a money-decree and the title of the defendant No. 2 did not pass by the sale in execution of that decree. Even if the findings of the Subordinate Judge are assumed to be correct, then as Munsur Ali parted with the disputed land in 1899, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be held to have acquired title by adverse possession and as such title is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as it has not been annulled by a notice under section 167 of the Act, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed.—Referred to Gokul Bagdi v. Deben-dra Nath Sen (1).

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.—On a proper construction of the kabuliyat by the original tenant to the landlord, it would appear that the holding is only kaimi, i.e., permanent but not a rai-yati at a fixed rent. Kaimi does not import fixity of rent. The landlord was not, therefore, bound to recognise the transferee of the holding.

[WALMSLEY, J.—It appears that this plea was not taken in the lower Court.]

The defendants do not say in their written statements that the holding was one at a fixed rent. They only say, it is a kaimi rai-yati holding and their case was that they were recognised by the landlord. The first Court also does not find that the holding was one at fixed rent. In the lower Appellate Court, for the first time, it was said that the rai-yati was one at fixed rent.

If, however, the rai-yati is taken as one at fixed rent, the transfer not being of the whole but only of a part of the holding with a distribution of rent, the landlord was not bound to recognise the transferee. See section 3 of Bengal Act I of 1903.

Moreover, section 1 of Bengal Act I of 1903 says that the sales will not be invalid merely because no landlord's fee is paid. But it nowhere says that the landlord is bound to recognise the transferee, even if no landlord's fee is paid. The last transfer being by an unrecorded tenant, the landlord was not bound to recognise the transfer even if landlord's fee was paid.

As regards the question of title by adverse possession, the defendants should not be allowed to raise the plea in this Court, as the plea was not taken in the written statements nor in any of the Courts below, and no issue was raised upon that point.

Facts are to be investigated before a finding can be arrived at as regards the question of title by adverse possession. The mere fact that Munsur Ali sold the disputed land twelve years ago, would not be sufficient for the finding that he lost the title to it by adverse possession.

Adverse possession imports wrongful possession, but as the title of Asrab Ali, the original transferee, was acquired lawfully as against Munsur Ali, viz., by purchase, the possession of the said Asrab Ali was not adverse to Munsur Ali. It is not the case of the plaintiff that Asrab Ali and his vendors acquired no title as against Munsur Ali, but his case is they acquired no title which the landlord was bound to recognise.

Babu D. L. Kastgir, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment. One Jainuddi held a kaimi rai-yati under defendant No. 3; on the death of Jainuddi his son Munsur Ali held the raiyati. In 1912 defendant No. 3 sued Munsur Ali for rent of the holding and in execution of the decree granted to him he caused the holding to be sold and bought it himself. After his purchase he settled a portion of it with the plaintiffs who are his sons, and they have brought the suit to eject the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The defence is that Munsur Ali sold a part of the jote, the part in dispute, to Asrab Ali in 1899, that Asrab Ali sold it to Yakub Ali in 1904 and Yakub Ali to Fazar Ali defendant No. 1 in 1908, and Fazar Ali to Abdul Kabir defendant No. 2 in 1908 and that Fazar Ali has taken a barga lease of it from Abdul Kabir.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the lease to the plaintiffs was made bona fide, that the raiyati was one at a fixed rate of rent, that defendant No. 3 did not recognize the transfer of the other defendants, that landlord's fees ought to have been paid but were not paid by Asrab Ali, Yakub Ali and Fazar Ali, that the transfers were in consequence invalid, that the payment of landlord's fees on the occasion of the last transfer did not confer any title upon Abdul Kabir, and that as the holding was sold in execution of a rent-decree obtained against the registered tenant the plaintiffs have acquired a good title by settlement from defendant No. 3. On these findings he decreed the plaintiffs' appeal and suit.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appeal, and on their behalf it is argued that the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the provisions of Act I (B. C.) of 1903 in holding that the successive transfers were invalid, and that as against Munsur Ali the defendant Abdul has acquired a good title by adverse possession and this constitutes an incumbrance which can be annulled only under the provisions of section 167 of the Tenancy Act.

If the whole holding had been sold the first contention would be correct, but the 3rd section of the Act mentioned lays down that the provisions of section 88 are not affected. The transfer was of part of a holding, and constituted a division which the landlord was not bound to recognise, and, the lower Appellate Court finds, did not recognise.

The second argument, however, seems to be sound. Munsur Ali parted with his right and possession in 1899 or fifteen years before the date of suit, and since then the portion of the holding has been in the possession of Asrab Ali and the subsequent purchasers down to Abdul Kabir. As against Munsur Ali the latter has title by adverse possession, and this I think comes within the meaning of the word incumbrance as defined by section 161 of the Act. This view was taken in the case of Gokul Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (1), where the facts are very similar.

On this ground the appeal must succeed.

The defendants' appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

When in a suit on a bond, the plea of discharge is set up and the document creating the obligation is produced by the defendant, the onus of rebutting the presumption of discharge lies in the first instance on the plaintiff, but this burden is one which will under the circumstances easily shift as the evidence is developed. Appeals from two judgments and decrees, dated the 16th December 1913, of the Allahabad High Court (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.), which reversed two judgments and decrees of the Additional Judge of Meerut.

Mr. B. Dube, for the Appellant.

Dr. Abdul Majid, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad. The High Court reversed by these decrees two decisions of the Additional Judge of Meerut. The appellant, who was plaintiff in both suits, claimed payment or sale under two mortgage bonds executed by the respondents respectively. The question which arises in each case is much the same. It is one of fact, and is whether the debt had been truly discharged and the bond returned to the mortgagor.

It will be convenient to refer first to the suit against Musammat Begam-un Nisa. This suit was commenced in July 1910 to recover the balance of principal and interest said to remain due on a bond, dated the 30th December 1890, for Rs. 8,000, or for a sale. The bond was given by the lady to one Sant Lal to secure that sum with interest. It is common ground that five payments on account were actually made under the bond, amounting in all to Rs. 3,930. About these there is no dispute; the question relates to three subsequent payments alleged to have been made as follows:—

485 rupees on the 18th March 1894;

150 " " 20th June 1895;

5,200 " " 1st July 1896.

The last of these payments is expressed in the receipt relied on by the respondent to be in complete discharge of everything due on the bond, which is stated to be returned. The bond was written in Urdu and contains a stipulation that, whatever the mortgagor should pay, the payment should be endorsed on the bond, specifying how much was for principal and how much for interest. The receipts in question purport to be so endorsed. They are not signed, excepting that the receipt for Rs. 5,200 purports to have appended to it the name of Har Gulal. Har Gulal was a money-lender who carried on business jointly with his son, Sant Lal, at Budhana, in the Meerut district. The son predeceased the father in March 1898, and the father died in August of the same year. It was in favour of Sant Lal that the bond was granted, but it appears to have been held jointly and to have passed to the father on Sant Lal's death. The endorsements of the first five payments on account, which are not in dispute, were proved to have been written in Sant Lal's handwriting, although they bear no signature. As to the first of the three disputed endorsements, the handwriting is not identified. But as to the last two, including the acquittance in full on payment of Rs. 5,200, the handwriting was established on the balance of evidence as that of one Khalil, now dead, a peon. There is controversy as to whether Khalil was in the service either of Har Gulal or of his son Sant Lal. All these alleged payments, if they were made, were made during Sant Lal's lifetime.

Har Gulal left a Will, dated the 1st April 1898. By this Will he purported to leave his property, which included the bonds in question, to Sant Lal's widow, Musammat Sukhi, for life and afterwards in full ownership to the appellant, who was a minor and did not attain his majority until 1910. Musammat Sukhi died in April 1899. The relatives contested the validity of Har Gulal's Will and there were disputes as to her possession of the shops in Budhana, where the business of lending money was carried on. The Magistrate intervened, and a Tahsildar came and put fastenings on the doors of the shops, which contained deeds and account books, and other documents and also ornaments. In their Lordships' opinion, the evidence establishes that on the night of the 9th October 1899, some person or persons improperly broke the fastenings and abstracted much of what was in the shops, including a number of deeds and account books. A report of the occurrence was made to the Deputy Superintendent of Police. He, however, after investigating the occurrence, appears to have thought that it was the outcome of a dispute between the relatives as to the succession, and he did not proceed further.

KUNDAN LAL V. BEGAM-UN-NISA.

As to the second suit, this was brought against the respondent Inayet Ali Khan, who is the son of the first respondent, to recover the balance due under a mortgage-bond, dated the 17th August 1894, and executed in favour of Sant Lal. This bond also belonged to the firm and it passed on Sant Lal's death to his father. The nature of the proceedings, the form of the bond and the main circumstances do not differ materially from those in the other case. It is not in dispute that under the bond of Inayet Ali Khan a first instalment of Rs. 300 was repaid on the 14th August 1895 and that a proper endorsement of payment was made in the handwriting of Sant Lal, although not signed by him. It was apparently not the practice to sign such endorsements. The controversy is as to four further instalments alleged by this respondent to have been paid by him to Sant Lal, and after his death to his father Har Gulal, and after the death of the latter to Musammât Sukhi, the widow of Sant Lal. These instalments are as follows:—

4,300	rupees	on the 15th February 1897.
298	" "	13th April 1898.
800	" "	3rd July 1898.
50	" "	21st October 1898.

57 rupees are said to have been remitted by the widow.

The four instalments set out appear endorsed on the bond given by the second respondent. As to the first of the four disputed endorsements, that for Rs. 4,300, the evidence renders it uncertain who wrote it; but, in their Lordships' opinion, it was not written by Sant Lal. The second and third were found by the Courts below to have been written by Khalil already referred to, the peon as to whom it is in controversy whether he was ever employed by Har Gulal and Sant Lal or not. The fourth purports to have been made in October 1898 after Har Gulal's death. The endorsement is in the writing of one Lachman Das, a relative of Musammât Sukhi, Sant Lal's widow, from whom he held a power-of attorney. This endorsement is to the effect that Rs. 50 had been received by the widow, who, on the other hand, had remitted Rs. 57, with the consequence that the bond was returned to one Rahmat Khan as agent for the 2nd respondent, Inayet Ali Khan.

The case of the appellant as regards the two bonds is that the disputed instalments were never paid. He accounts for the possession of the bonds by the respondents respectively by saying that they were carried away from the shops of Har Gulal when these were raided on the night of the 9th October 1899, after the widow's death, and when the dispute as to the succession to Har Gulal's property arose. In this way they finally got into the hands of the respondents, who managed to acquire them and are then said to have made false endorsements. The signature of Har Gulal on the bond given by the 1st respondent is, according to the appellant, a forgery. On the other bond there is no signature by either Har Gulal or Sant Lal. The Additional Judge of Meerut, who tried the two suits, decided in favour of the appellant. After hearing the witnesses he arrived at conclusions as to their credibility. He was influenced in coming to a decision by the circumstance that in the first case he had before him the account books of Har Gulal and his son Sant Lal up to 1896, although those for the three years subsequently had, he concluded, been taken when the shops were raided in October 1899. The earlier books covered the period in which two of the instalments had been alleged to have been paid, on the 18th March 1894, and 20th June 1895, under the bond first referred to. These would naturally have been entered in the accounts, as had been the case with the earlier items not in dispute. But they were not so entered, although the practice of Har Gulal and Sant Lal was to make such entries. He was also impressed by the circumstance that the next endorsement on the first bond, that of the payment of an alleged instalment of Rs. 5,200 on the 1st July 1896, was in Khalil's handwriting. He considered that there was no sufficient explanation offered why it should have been made by Khalil, and not by either Har Gulal or Sant Lal themselves. On a review of the evidence in each case, he came to the conclusion that the endorsements in dispute in the case of each bond were fictitious, and he decided in favour of the appellant.

The High Court expressed a different view in two elaborate and full judgments. They thought that there had been suspicious delay on the part of the appellant in bringing the suits; that the evidence as to the loss of the documents and account books was weak; that some of the oral testimony given on behalf of the appellant, and particularly that as to the position of Lachman Das, and that as to the various payments, was unsatisfactory. They held in the result that the appellant had failed to discharge the burden which rested on him of proving the case he sought to make and that the respondents were entitled to judgment.

It is no doubt true that the initial burden of proof rests on the appellant in such a case as this, both on general grounds and by reason of the provisions of section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act. But this burden is one which shifts easily as the evidence is developed, and their Lordships do not, after considering facts which appear to them to be sufficiently established in the two suits, attach much importance to the question on whom the initial onus lay. Nor are they impressed with the delay in bringing the suits. The appellant was a minor up till 1910, and it was only in that year that the disputes as to who was entitled to succeed to Har Gulal's estate were finally settled. The appellant's guardian, his uncle, Nawal Kishore, might well hesitate before that stage was passed about launching these cases on his ward's behalf. As to the raiding of the shops on the night of the 9th October 1899, their Lordships entertain no doubt that this raid took place, and that a large number of documents, including bonds and books, were abstracted. If so, some of these may well have got into the hands of the various debtors. The only evidence as to whether the documents taken comprised the bonds in question is that of Nawal Kishore, who says that he had seen them among the others just before the raid. It is far from unlikely that they were along with the other documents, but it would be unsafe to place reliance on Nawal Kishore's recollection after many years, if the conduct of the respondents did not in itself render it probable that they had got possession of the bonds and had dealt with them improperly. As to this, their Lordships are impressed by the unlikelihood that the endorsements were genuine. Khalil was only a peon, employed at a very small remuneration, if employed at all, by Har Gulal and Sant Lal. Why should these men of business have entrusted such a person with the making of endorsements on the bonds of vital importance? Why should Sant Lal, who knew Urdu and had been himself in the practice of making the endorsements on these bonds, have allowed Khalil to do it in at least one case which occurred during his own lifetime? How did it happen that in the instance of the endorsements on the first bond those that were disputed did not appear in the books which have been produced for the period in which they took place, and which record the earlier and undisputed endorsements? Again, on a scrutiny of the original of the first bond their Lordships are impressed by the obvious difficulty which anyone would experience in coming to a reliable conclusion as to the alleged signature by Har Gulal to the acknowledgment of the payment of Rs. 5,200, as well as by the fact that Sant Lal, the grantee of the bond, who was then alive and the only one of the two who knew the Urdu language, in which the bond was written, did not sign it himself, if it was to be signed at all. As to the story told by Lachman Das, who made the endorsement on the second bond of the receipt of the final instalment of Rs. 50, their Lordships think, with the learned Judge who tried the case and saw him in the witness-box, that his story is one that it is not safe to accept. He could not read his own endorsement and could barely write. His memory was defective. He had been Musammat Sukhi's attorney, but he was not clear as to the circumstances under which he ceased to be so. Their Lordships think that the trial Judge was warranted in attaching little value to his evidence, given twelve years after the alleged transaction, as to the facts connected with this endorsement.

The considerations to which they have now referred make their Lordships think that on the balance of probability the bonds in question were among those improperly removed from the shops in October 1899, and that they got wrongly into the hands of the respondents and were by them fraudulently dealt with. They have arrived at this conclusion only after considering the circumstances of the case as a whole, in which no element can be adequately weighed without weighing it in relation to the other elements. The case is one in which it is far from easy to ascertain the truth, and there are points in it which have caused them anxiety. For instance, no witness was asked by the appellant's Advocate the specific question whether the signature of Har Gulal to the endorsement of receipt of Rs. 5,200 on the bond first referred to was genuine. The respondent's witnesses swore that it was. But it is evident that the trial Judge was satisfied that no part of this endorsement was genuine, and he may well have thought that no evidence that could be offered was likely to be reliable, and also that no further evidence as to the signature was required when he had arrived at the conclusion that the whole group of endorsements in which this was included were fraudulent. The non appearance of certain of the disputed payments in the account books which were produced, the unsatisfactory reasons given for Khalil being allowed to make the endorsements, and the circumstances in which the bonds and the books were abstracted in 1899, formed grounds, when taken together, on which a Judge who tried this case might well reject the whole of the story told on behalf of the respondents.

In the same way, the circumstances render doubtful the evidence of Lachman Das as to the part he alleges that he played in returning Inayet Ali Khan's bond as satisfied on receiving Rs. 50 on behalf of Musammatt Sukhi on the 21st October 1898. At that date disputes had arisen which rendered the lady's title to the bond doubtful, and it is not probable that Inayet Ali Khan would at that time have been content to recognise her as entitled to receive the instalment and hand over the bond discharged. It is more likely that Lachman Das was got hold of by the mortgagor at a much later date after Musammatt Sukhi's death, when her title to have given her discharge at the time had become established. The evidence Lachman Das gave in the box was, on the face of it, not very reliable, and the trial Judge did not place reliance on the evidence of Qubul Singh, a witness who was brought before him to confirm the story told.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the evidence in this litigation, taken as a whole, is of such a character and so full of doubtful statements that it could only be weighed adequately by Judges who had seen the witnesses. The learned trial Judge formed an opinion, after seeing them, adverse to the respondents, and in their Lordships' view the balance of probabilities lies on the side of the conclusion to which he came. After weighing the elaborate and searching criticism to which his judgment was subjected by the learned Judges of the High Court, they have arrived at the conclusion that there was not sufficient reason for overruling that judgment. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be allowed, and that the decrees of the Additional Judge of Meerut should be restored. The respondents must pay the costs of the appeals to the High Court and to the Sovereign in Council.

Plaintiff made a speculative purchase of a piece of land from the defendant. The latter protected himself by inserting a clause in the conveyance to the effect that if the plaintiff was dispossessed by anybody other than the vendor defendant, the latter would not be liable to the purchaser:

Held, that on his failure to get possession of the land, the plaintiff was not entitled to a refund of the purchase-money.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 5th Court, Midnapore, dated the 8th of November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Tamluk, dated the 5th August 1914.

FACTS.—One Kailashi Dasi, defendant No. 3 in the present case, sold the disputed land to Haradhan Das, defendant No. 4, for legal necessity while her son, Issar, defendant No. 2, was a minor, and possession was delivered to him (defendant No. 4). Issur, on attaining majority, sold the same land to Badan Das, defendant No. 1, who again sold it to the plaintiffs, Indra Das and another. There was a clause in the kobala executed by Badan, defendant No. 1, in favour of the plaintiffs to the effect that the defendant No. 1 would be liable to refund the consideration money or to pay compensation only in the event of the plaintiffs' failure to get possession by reason of any act done by defendant No. 1 and not by any act of a third party. The plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of the disputed land and in the alternative for refund of the purchase-money. The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below. Hence this appeal.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra (with him Babu Mohini Mohan Bose), for the Appellants, contended that the lower Appellate Court ought to have awarded them at least a decree for the refund of the purchase-money, as they were bona fide purchasers for value. Under section 55, sub-section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act, there is an implied covenant for title on the part of the vendor defendant No. 1 and the vendor is bound to refund the purchase-money, inasmuch as it has been found that he has no title to the property. The case reported as Basaraddi Sheikh v. Enajaddi Maleah (1) is not against me, since the clause (1) 25 C. 298; 2 C. W. N. 222; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 200.

mentioned in the kobala is not such a bar as to deprive me of the purchase-money. Referred to the case reported as Digambar Das v. Nishibala Debi (2).

Babu Saroda Charan Maity (with him Babu Bhupendra Kumar Ghose), for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff-appellant made a speculative purchase of the land from the first defendant. The latter protected himself by inserting a clause in the kobala to the effect that if the plaintiff-purchaser was dispossessed by anybody other than the vendor, the vendor would not be liable to the purchaser. The learned Subordinate Judge held that effect should be given to the saving clause, and I think he was correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs—one set to the defendant No. 1 and one set to the defendant No. 4, who appear by different Vakils.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Archaka, succession to office and emoluments of—Widow, whether excluded from inheritance.

Held, per Curiam (Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dissenting).—A Hindu widow is not disqualified by reason of her sex from inheriting the service and emoluments of an Archaka office held by her husband. [p. 349, col. 1; p. 351, col. 1.]

ANNAYA TANTRI v. AMMAKA HENGUSU.

Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji, 19 Ind. Cas. 337; 35 A. 283; 17 C. W. N. 741; 11 A. L. J. 548; 17 C. L. J. 612; 15 Bom. L. R. 606; (1913) M. W. N. 536; 14 M. L. T. 27; 40 I. A. 97 (P. C.), explained and distinguished.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The succession to temple offices is governed by user, which is taken to represent the intentions of the founder, and in Southern India the user in the case of temple Archakas is that the office is hereditary and descends in the ordinary course of succession to women, who are not themselves competent to perform the duties of the office by ministering in the temple and perform them by deputy. [p. 348, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the incompetency of a claimant to the office of Archaka by reason of sex and the incompetency due to any other cause. So long as a Hindu widow is held incompetent by reason of her sex from performing the duties of a priestly office, she is also incompetent to inherit the service and emoluments of the office. [p. 349, col. 2; p. 350, col. 1; p. 351, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 445 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Karkal, in Original Suit No. 314 of 1914.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 30th November and the 3rd December 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant and of Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for Respondent No. 1, and Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 14th December 1917, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The question for consideration in this second appeal is whether the plaintiff, a widow, is entitled to recover possession of the property which was enjoyed by her husband and his predecessors by doing Archaka service in a temple. The Courts below have given her a decree for possession. Mr. Sitarama Rao, relying on Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1), has argued at some length that as the plaintiff is not competent to perform the Archaka service, she is not entitled to the property. Ayling and Hannay, JJ., in Ramasundaram Pillai v. Savundaratha Ammal (2) and Kumaraswami Sastri and Phillips, JJ., in Rajeswari Ammal v. Subramania Archakar (3) have dissented from Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1).

In these circumstances, it becomes necessary to consider the question in some detail as to which of these conflicting views should be followed.

In Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1) Sadasiva Aiyar, J., who delivered the leading judgment, lays stress upon the duties attaching to the Archaka office as opposed to rights, and says that the emoluments should go only to those who are competent to perform the services. It is true that from the point of view of the worshipper, it is the fitness of the Archaka for the discharge of his duties that has to be considered. From the point of view of the Archaka, the question of secular rights is more important. In considering the relative importance of the two functions and in endeavouring to reconcile these two conceptions, the historical aspect of the grant for service in temples may be considered.

It is often said that there is nothing in the Hindu Law Texts on the question. It may seem strange that in a country where religion plays such an important part in the daily concerns of the people, there should be so little about succession, etc., to religious institutions and offices in the writings of the Rishis or of their commentators. The reason is not far to seek.

In the Vedas and in the ancient Smritis, we do not hear of the founding of temples. It is to the Puranic age that we owe their existence. In Manu's days, the only religious teacher was the ascetic Sanyasi. He gave instructions to his disciples, who in their turn spread the light of wisdom among the lay people. There were no places of worship, and no images to worship. It was to Budha that India owes the introduction of fixed places of worship and of ordained orders of preachers.

ANNAYA TANTRI V. AMMAKA HENGSO.

In Buddhism there are three essentials: (a) Adoration of Budha, (b) observance of his laws and (c) the congregation. Budha instituted the order of monks and nuns with a view to religious instruction being imparted to the uninitiated. Places of shelter or refuge were founded in order that the world-weary may retire to them and receive religious consolation. From these simple beginnings a disciplined army of Bikshus came into existence, and edifices known as monasteries were erected to afford facilities for prayer, consultation and contemplation. It is to this period that we owe the founding of temples in Southern India. The followers of Budha pursued a policy which was resented by the orthodox. Temples for the worship of Siva and Vishnu were established mostly by non-Aryans at or about this time to circumvent the Buddhist influence.

The second period begins with the advent of Sankara. He found that the ancient worship of the elements was losing hold on the popular mind, and that the people were being led by the precepts of Buddhism into the track of atheism. He had to fight blind orthodoxy behind him and materialism ahead of him. He adopted a compromise. He founded Mutts which took the place of monasteries. He founded various orders of Sanyasins who were enjoined to lead celibate lives and to impart religious instruction. He undoubtedly succeeded in driving Buddhism from the land: and he laid the foundation for institutions which cannot be said to have fully served the purpose which he had in mind.

The successors of Sankara did not find it easy to console the religiously-inclined by the doctrines of Advaitic philosophy. Sankara was described as the pseudo-Budha. The common people hankered after something more real than is to be had in the severely logical philosophy of Sankara. Three philosophers, who gave prominence to the existence of a personal God, diverted public attention from Sankara's teachings. The Vaishnavaites, the Madhwas and the Saivites founded independent Mutts where the Dvaitic philosophy was taught. They had to proceed a step further. They accepted control over existing temples and encouraged the construction of new temples in honour of the particular deity they represented as the Supreme Being.

As this is a rough summary of events, I should not be understood as saying that all the temples in India came into existence only in the way I have described. There were apparently some independent institutions.

By this time, the Puranas had gained a hold on the popular mind, and the worship of the Avatars of Vishnu and of the manifestations of Siva came to be regarded as the essential features of religious life among the people. Rich endowments were made for the upkeep of the temples. But the priests capable of rendering services in these institutions had to be found. It has always been the belief in India that the nearer a man is to God, the farther is he from Him. The following Slokas from the writings of Vaidyanatha Dikshiter express the ultra-orthodox and conservative view of the office of an Archaka in a Hindu temple.

* * * * *

The above Slokas (verses) may be translated thus :—

"Saathathapa" says :

"A Vipra (Brahmin), though well versed in Vedas, who performs pooja for the sake of money for a period of three years, is known as the Devalaka: such a person becomes incompetent to perform the usual Havya and Kavya rites enjoined on Brahmins."

Again it is said in the Samgraha :

"A Vipra, who, though he may be well-versed in the four Vedas, is desirous of getting money, and who performs the worship of the gods for the sake of another will be considered equal to a Chandala.

The Devalakas are classed under three heads: Some as Karmadevalakas; others as Kalpadevalakas; and the rest as Suddha-devalakas.

He who knows the precepts as ordained in the Aagamas and makes a living by performing worship to Rudra and Kali is called Sudhadevalaka, and is excluded from taking part in all.

A person performing pooja will not become a Devalaka if the worship is conducted in accordance with the sacred injunctions of the Rishis. Therefore with all care the pooja should be conducted according to the precepts of the Vedas, or, done in the Vaidika fashion. He is called a Karmadevalaka who performs the worship of the gods always in a Kamya form (i. e., for the sake of attaining some desired object) and is incompetent to perform the ordinary Karmas.

An Archaka even if he is an authority on the four Vedas and knows the rites prescribed in Pancharathra but is devoid of Deeksha or consecration, is known as Kalpadevalaka."

Then the propitiatory ceremonies for these sinful acts are prescribed: "A Vipra who sells for another the Nitya Karmas, such as Snanam (bathing), Ishtapoortham (performance of pious or charitable deeds, performing sacrifices, and digging wells and doing other acts of charity), Uposhanam (fasting) and Vratams (religious acts of devotion) as are ordained in the Shruthis and Smritis has to undergo, by way of Prayaschitam, Maghasnanam in the month of Maagha; and, after performing thrice the Chandrayanam at the full moon, should diminish his food by one mouthful every day during the dark fortnight till it is reduced to zero at the new Moon, * * * and so on, then he attains the highest purity".

The Archakas having been looked down upon in the above manner, naturally great inducements had to be offered, by liberal grants of land and by the promise of perquisites. That is how the Archaka office came to be founded.

I have thus far given a brief outline of the origin and spread of temples and of the manner in which the Archaka office was instituted. My survey shows that the founder of the temples looked to the due discharge of the services in the temple as his primary and sole object. The Archaka accepted his position as giving him primarily a means of livelihood and to his posterity, and as ultimately enabling him to minister to God. The existence of various Inams in the name of the Archakas is irrefutable evidence that rich endowments were granted to them to bind them to the service of the deity. These endowments were intended, and in most cases expressed to be, from generation to generation. It may be assumed that the donors were not over-anxious to make hereditary grants to the donee's family without regard to the latter's capacity to perform religious worship; but the law would not have permitted them to stipulate that the property shall be enjoyed only by those competent to minister in the temple. They must have trusted to chance to see that the descendants of the donees carried on the good work for which their predecessors were given grants.

Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar asks why, if that must be presumed to have been the intention of the donor, should the inheritance go to persons who by themselves are incapable of discharging the duties. The answer is that Courts and even Legislatures must trust to the same chance which the founders calculated upon when they endowed the Archaka office. What reason have Courts for holding that a reversioner would be a more welcome minister of religion than the gumastah employed by a widow to perform the services? It would be an ideal to be sought after, if the community interested in temple worship were to be permitted to select on the death of an Archaka a person competent to fill his place. Even in this view, can we trust to society here or elsewhere to be guided in the selection of an Archaka solely by considerations of religious merit and fitness? There is no guarantee that a nominee of the community would be a fitter Archaka than the proxy of the widow. Non constat, he would be worse than a male reversioner of the last Archaka. Under such circumstances, there cannot be much room for doubt, that society would prefer that the secular rights with the obligations to do or to get done the spiritual duties should vest in the line of heirs to whom private property would descend. The confirmation of numerous grants in this Presidency by the Inam Commissioners in the name of the widows and daughters of the deceased Archakas indicates that the Government of the country have recognised the principle of heredity as the only safe guide in such matters. I see no reason why Courts should not be guided by the executive action of the Government in these matters.

I shall briefly refer to one other reason why the principle of heredity should not be departed from in the case of these offices. It is common knowledge that the Archakas of a temple form a caste among themselves. They are a select people. In the case of the great temple at Chidambaram, they claim to have come down to earth with the deity. They do not intermarry with the other Brahmin sects. Among these people, the moment that a boy is married, he gets a share in the emoluments of the Archaka office. This testifies to the solicitude of this class of people for an early expansion of the sect. In the case of other Siva temples, the Archakas are known as Gurukkals. Unfortunately they are a diminishing race. They are not permitted to take brides from other Brahmin sects; and worship in a temple cannot be performed by a Brahmin who is not a Gurukkal. In the Vaishnava temples, there are two prominent classes of Archakas: the Pancharatrias and the Vaiganasas. I do not believe even these intermarry. A temple whose services are performed according to Pancharatra rituals cannot be served by a Vaiganasa Archaka and vice versa. These limitations show that the field of choice for the Archaka service in Hindu temples is very limited. It would often lead to the application of the principle of escheat, if the grants made for their services are not continued in the line of the heirs of the last male Archaka.

I have referred to the above considerations out of deference to the views of my learned brother Sadasiva Aiyar, J. No one shows more anxiety than the learned Judge that the true intent of a grant should be strictly enforced. I respectfully share his anxiety, but as I have shown above, the change that he gives his sanction to, while upsetting fixity of tenure and disturbing long understood and enforced notions of rights of property, is not calculated to bring the Courts any the nearer to the administration of the golden rule that competency to minister and capacity to inherit should go hand in hand. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the widow is not entitled to inherit her husband's property granted for the performance of religious services.

I shall now examine the case-law on the point to see how far the learned Judge's conclusions are supported by decided cases.

I shall first deal with Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (4), which apparently has not been considered in any of the three decisions of this Court, and on which Mr. Sitarama Rao naturally laid great stress. The facts of the case must be examined in some detail in order to show that while it does not lend support to the contention of the learned Vakil, it can be regarded as an authority for the proposition I have suggested. The temple in respect of which the office was claimed belonged to the Gossain sect of Vallabhachariars. The Vallabhachariars, as explained in the judgment of the High Court of Allahabad in Mohan Lalaji v. Madhsudan Lala (5), from which there was an appeal to the Judicial Committee in Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (4), are a Vaishnava sect of religious teachers who founded temples. The question before the Judicial Committee was whether the grandson by the daughter of the last male Archaka was entitled to succeed to the office and the emoluments in preference to the reversioner of the last male holder. It was found in that case that the Gossain sect of Vallabhachariars took daughters from a sect known as the Bhat in marriage. On the marriage of the Bhat daughter into the Gossain family she was initiated into the Mantram of the Gossain sect. The ritual in a Gossain temple was essentially different from the ritual observed by the Bhats in their temples. The Gossain daughters were similarly married by Bhats, and I take it, although it is not so mentioned in either the judgment of the High Court or in that of the Privy Council, that the Gossain daughter marrying a Bhat husband would be initiated into the Mantram of the Bhat sect. I must not omit to mention a statement in the judgment of the Right Honourable Mr. Ameer Ali that the daughters of a Gossain, although married into a Bhat family, remained in the Gossain house. In these circumstances the question was whether in a temple whose rituals were of the Gossain sect, a Bhat grandson of the last male Gossain could inherit the office and the emoluments. The Judicial Committee held that he could not. It is stated in the judgment of the Board that after the death of the last male holder his widow and his daughter were in enjoyment of the office and emoluments. Mr. Sitarama Rao suggested that the widow and the daughter were competent to perform the religious worship in the Gossain temple. There is no express mention of their having officiated in the temples. From my experience of South India I cannot believe that where a large congregation of males assemble for worship, a female would be allowed to perform religious service within the temple. In the north the Gosha system is prevalent and the seclusion of women is more pronounced than in the south; and I would require very strong evidence to hold that the widow and the daughter of the deceased male Gossain were as a matter of fact officiating as priestesses in the temple. I must take it that they employed deputies to perform their duties. If my surmise is correct, it lends great support to the proposition that so long as the service can be done by a proxy, there can be no objection to women inheriting the office and emoluments of an Archaka.

Then it was argued, if a proxy was held competent to perform the duties, why should not a Bhat grandson have been allowed to inherit the office and the emoluments, on the understanding that he should employ a Gossain priest to officiate in the temple. The position of a widow or daughter and a grandson are not in pari materia. In the case of a grandson, he starts a new line of descendants, and to countenance the employment of a perpetual gumastah in the case of males would not be right; therefore, the Judicial Committee held that as a grandson suo moto is entitled to minister in the temple and as the grandson was of Bhat origin and incompetent to perform religious worship in a Gossain temple, he should be discarded in favour of a Gossain reversioner who was competent to perform religious worship by himself. In that judgment, however, it is pointed out that ordinarily the descent of debutter property vesting in an officiating priest would go to the ordinary heirs of the last holder, unless there was some usage or course of devolution or some other circumstance to indicate a different mode of devolution. The conclusion of the Judicial Committee was that in the particular case, the circumstances and the usage pointed to a mode of devolution different from that of the ordinary descent of property. In my opinion, this decision is no authority for the proposition that competency to officiate is a sine qua non of capacity to inherit. On the other hand the fact that the widow and the daughter were allowed to inherit the office and the emoluments is a strong indication that service in a temple can be rendered by a proxy so long as the essential nature of the worship is not departed from.

Now, I shall deal with the other cases bearing on the question. In Tangirala Chiranjivi v. Raja Manikya Rao (6) Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., said: "The District Judge has assumed that a minor, a female and a person unlearned in the Vedas would lose the right to the service in the temple. There is no basis for the assumption."

My experience of life in this Presidency is that in innumerable cases services in a temple are performed by proxies employed by women. In Mujavar Ibrambibi v. Mujavar Hussain Sheriff (7) referring to the competency of a Mahomedan lady to perform the duties of Majavar of a durga which was not of a secular nature, Turner, C. J., and Kindersley, J., stated that it was not proved "that the plaintiff had ever participated in the profits or performed the duties by proxy," thereby indicating that if she had got the service done by a proxy she would have been entitled to the office. In Sheshu Ammal v. Soundaraja Aiyar (8) the learned Judges state: "They further explain that an Archaka Meerassee, which is the species of Meerassee involved in Suit No. 111 of 1846, on the file of the Hindu Sudder Ameen referred to by the Civil Judge, and a Poorohita Meerassee, also instanced by the Civil Judge, may descend to a female and the functions thereof be performed by deputy."

ANNAYA TANTRI V. AMMAKA KENGUSU.

These are all the Madras decisions, and Mr. Ganapati Aiyar in his book on Religious Endowments after reviewing these authorities has come to the conclusion that it has been the uniform practice in Madras to allow females to inherit the Archaka service and the emoluments. In Bombay the same view has been held. In Kesharbhat v. Bhagirathibai (9) the learned Judges state the law thus: "Finally, with respect to the objection, that a Hindu female cannot perform the duties which attach to the office for the maintenance of which the allowance was granted, it may be observed that the defendant has not proved the existence of any usage in conformity with his allegation." So the burden was cast upon the objector to show that the usage was different. At the end of the judgment the learned Judges reserved liberty to the reversioner to bring a separate suit to support his position that a widow was not competent to inherit the office and the emoluments of Archaka. In Sitarambhat v. Sitaram Ganesh (10) the learned Judges of whom Couch, C. J., was one, proceeded on the assumption that the priestly office would descend in the ordinary line of succession through daughter to her son. The decision in Dhuncooverbai v. Advocate-General (11) may be explained away, as Sadasiva Aiyar, J., suggests, on the ground that the office inherited by the widow was not a purely religious one.

The decisions of the Calcutta High Court also support this proposition. In Pocrun Narain Dutt v. Kasheessuree Dosee (12) the learned Judges say: "It has been held in the Court that a woman can be a mutwalli, and that the profits of a debutter can be received by a female." They held in that case that a woman can succeed to the office. In Joy Deb Surmah v. Huroputty Surmah (13) an issue was sent down to ascertain whether a female can succeed to a priestly office. The report does not say what the result of the finding was. In Mitta Kanth Audhikaree v. Nirunjun Audhikaree (14) Sir Richard Couch says that the right of performing worship of an idol follows the same line of succession as that of private property. In Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (15) Mr. Justice Mookerjee says at page 475: "There is no question that a Pala in the Kalighat Temple is heritable, and it is immaterial whether the heir is a male or female; the custom in this respect is established beyond doubt." These are all the authorities available on the question. None earlier than 38 Madras [Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1)] has been cited in which it has been laid down that a female is not entitled to inherit a priestly office and the emoluments. The decisions are practically uniform and it would lead to an unnecessary disturbance of rights of property, if we introduce the innovation that a female is not entitled to succeed to an Archaka office or emoluments. As regards the quotation from Jagannatha's Digest which Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar has extracted in his judgment, I may say that I have read it very carefully and there is no expression in it of any decided view one way or the other. The author quotes the contentions of both sides and leaves the reader to draw his own inference from the two statements. I am rather inclined to think that the weight of argument, if any, is in favour of giving females their right to hold religious office.

Although I have come to this conclusion, having regard to the strong view held by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and having also regard to the fact that it is necessary that a uniform principle should be enunciated in this matter to guide the Courts below, I think it desirable that the following question should be referred for the opinion of the Full Bench, namely, "whether a Hindu widow is incompetent by reason of her sex from inheriting the service and emoluments of a priestly office held by her husband."

NAPIER, J.—I agree that this question should be referred to a Full Bench in the terms suggested by my learned brother.

ANNAYA TANTRI v. AMMAKA HENGUSU.

This second appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench, dated the 14th December 1917.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.—Succession to a priestly office is based on the competency of the claimant to perform the duties of the office. Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkai (1). Even hereditary succession is subject to that rule. A woman can only discharge functions of a priestly office by proxy.

[WALLIS, C. J.—Is it not a question of usage and of the founder's intentions?]

The general rule is that incompetency to perform the duties of the office bars inheritance and women, being disqualified, cannot succeed to the office or its emoluments. Any special usage may be set up as an exception to the rule. Mitta Kanth Audhikaree v. Nirunjun Audhikaree (14), Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (16), Kasim Saiba v. Sudhindra Thirtha Swami (17) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (15).

Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Respondent.—The trend of judicial decisions in Southern India has been in favour of upholding a woman's right to an Archaka office. The circumstances of the case reported as Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (4) are different. Tangirala Chiranjivi v. Raja Manikya Rao (6), Subraya Kakramaya v. Subraya Palayya (18), Pankajammal v. Secretary of State (19), Ramasundaram Pillai v. Savundaratha Ammal (2) and Rajeshwari Ammal v. Subramania Archakar (3).

WALLIS, C. J.—It is well settled that the succession to temple offices is governed by user which is taken to represent the intentions of the founder, and it is not disputed that in this part of India the user in the case of temple Archakas is that the office is hereditary and descends in the ordinary course of succession to women, who are not themselves competent to perform the duties of the office by ministering in the temple and perform them by deputy. The opinion of the Pandits in Sheshu Ammal v. Soundaraja

Aiyar (8) shows that this was then the recognised usage. The question appears to have first come before the Court in 1910, but since that time there have been numerous decisions where the user has been recognised and enforced, and all the Hindu members of the Court with one exception have been parties to these decisions, which also are conformable with the decisions of other High Courts. The only authority the other way is the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkai (1), who considered that on principle a personally disqualified heir could not inherit the office and delegate the duties to others. In the argument before us it was again contended that the decision of the Privy Council in Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (4) was in accordance with this view and must be taken to have overruled the other cases. In that case the office of Archaka had descended to the widow and daughter of the last male Archaka, and the question was whether the daughter was to be succeeded by her son or by the reversioner of the last male holder. The Archakas were Gossains and there was a usage among them that females continued to belong to their father's kul or family after marriage. On this ground apparently the daughter had been allowed to fill the office even though married to a member of the Bhat community who was incapable of filling it. No question arose in that case as to the right of the widow and her daughter after her to fill the office; and it does not appear whether, while they held it, they performed the duties in person or by deputy. What their Lordships had to consider was, whether on the daughter's death the office should go to her son and her descendants, a line of heirs who as Bhats would be incapable of performing its duties, or should revert to the male heirs of the last male holder. Their Lordships at page 288* observe that the rule as to the Shebaitship being vested in the heirs of the founder "must, from the very nature of the right, be subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship", and they say later on that "to allow the plaintiff's claim to an admittedly Ballav temple, where the rights are performed according to Ballav ritual, which, it is clearly established, they cannot perform, would, in their Lordships' judgment, defeat the purpose for which the worship was established." A contrary decision would have involved the devolution of the office to a line of heirs incompetent to perform its duties. Moreover, the plaintiff's claim in that case was not shown to be in accordance with any well-recognised user, which is the best evidence of the founder's intentions. I do not consider that this decision of their Lordships warrants us in overruling the numerous decisions of this Court in conformity with the decisions of other Courts, by which the widow and daughter of the last male Archaka are held entitled in accordance with the established user to succeed to the office of Archaka discharging its duties by deputy and to transmit it to their heirs, who, as male heirs are preferred to female, will generally be competent to perform the duties in person. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., for whose opinion I have a great respect, considers, if I rightly understand him, that the established custom of female succession to this office is of so mischievous and objectionable a character that it cannot have been intended by the founder. That view is not shared by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., who has considered this aspect of the case in the Order of Reference, or by the other Hindu members of the Court who have considered the question. We should not, in my opinion, be justified in overruling on this ground the numerous decisions of this Court in which the usage has been recognised and enforced, unless its mischievous character had been established beyond all doubt or controversy. This has not been done and I feel bound to answer the question in the negative.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I have carefully re-considered my decision in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1) in the light of the later decisions of this Court quoted by my learned brother Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in his Order of Reference, also of his own keen and yet considerate criticisms (if I may be permitted to say so) of my said decision and also of the opinions of my Lord and of Mr. Justice Spencer on this reference. I am, notwithstanding, unable to convince myself that my opinion was erroneous. On the other hand, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (4) lends, in my opinion, strong support to my conclusion. With respect, I am unable to agree with Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar that the widow and daughter of the last male Shebait of the Ballavacharya Gossain sect in the Privy Council case must have been not competent to perform the duties of the office and must have "employed deputies to perform the duty", and that their enjoyment of the emoluments of the office during their lifetime must be due to their having performed the duties through such deputies and not directly. On the contrary, it seems to me clear from the report that the out-of-date unshastric custom obtaining in the south by which Dharmapathnies (who are Sahadharmacharines of their husbands) are considered incompetent to pronounce Mantrams and do religious duties along with (and even solely in the absence of) their husbands does not obtain among the Ballavacharya Gossains, one of the Vaishnavite sects which are in several respects much more liberal in the treatment of women and birth Sudras than other sects, though many Vaishnavite sects might have become very degenerate in other respects.

I am further unable to see that my conclusion as to Jagannatha's opinion and the weight of the authority of the texts quoted by him being in my favour is wrong.

A general rule has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that where a person is incompetent to perform the rites of a religious office, it would defeat the very purpose for which the worship was established, if he (including of course "she") is allowed to inherit the office. Any usage inconsistent with such purpose is clearly invalid in law. [See Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (20).]

I am unable to appreciate any distinction in principle between the incompetency of the claimant to the office by reason of sex and the incompetency due to any other cause. I do not think that the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council can be got round through any such distinction.

Though "law" is not always logical and though the narrow point referred to us relates to inheritance by a person incompetent by reason of sex alone for performing the duties of a religious office, I do not think that the considerations of the difficulties which are aggressively prominent when we take the four analogous cases (1) of a male heir being incompetent by reason of conversion to another faith when the inheritance opens, (2) of his becoming incompetent after the inheritance opens, (3) of a female heir being incompetent by reason of conversion before the inheritance opens and (4) becoming incompetent after the inheritance opens, can be kept out of mind in deciding the present reference, especially having regard to the provisions of Act XXI of 1850.

Coming to the weight to be given to practice and usage, many pernicious and unshastraic usages have crept into the Hindu religious and social systems during dark medieval days and through efflux of time. Most of them entered gradually and insidiously through the tendency of that subtle materialism which sometimes parades as strict orthodox spirituality. The letter is exalted over the spirit, the so-called hereditary rights are given more importance than the performance of the religious duties, instead of the rights being kept as a very subordinate adjunct and appurtenance of the duties, and religious offices, and caste status are looked upon more as intended for the means of livelihood and for the enjoyment of worldly power and material possessions than as things bestowed upon one for helping all humanity in its evolutionary progress towards the common goal.

I respectfully agree with my Lord that the law as at present settled by the decisions of the Privy Council is that unless the usages in connection with religious institutions and offices are manifestly immoral or opposed to public policy or opposed to the intentions of the founders of a religious trust or manifestly injurious to the trust, the Courts are not entitled to go back for the law to the purer, more liberal and more ancient Shastraic fountain heads. The question, therefore, narrows itself to this: Whether the usage relied on by the respondents is manifestly injurious (both in its material and moral aspects) to the religious institution, and whether it could have been in conformity with the intention of the founder of the trust. It is on this question that I feel that there is real and substantial difference of opinion between myself and the learned Judges who have considered this question in this Court since 1910. My angle of vision in respect of these questions might have been affected by my long-standing interest and sensitiveness in the cause of Hindu religious and social reform on Shastraic lines. I find, however, that after making sincere attempts to allow as much discount as possible to the above factor, my view of the seriousness of the evils of usage in question has not been materially affected. While the incumbent of a religious office must be allowed to employ a temporary deputy when a temporary disqualification or inability occurs, such as birth and death pollutions, absence from home owing to urgent private affairs, etc., I am clear in my mind that a usage permitting a permanently disqualified claimant to receive the emoluments of a religious office and to appoint his or her own deputy to do the duties is of such a seriously mischievous character that it ought not to be recognised. I regret I am unable to agree with Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar that the performance of the duties through the deputy of a female disqualified heir is not less beneficial to the religious institution than the performance of the next qualified male heir. It is notorious that the deputy is usually chosen on the principle of a Dutch auction. The man who agrees to allow the widow to retain the largest portion of the emoluments of the office and to receive the least as his own remuneration is given the place of deputy. Thus when the usually small remuneration in rice and cash attached to the Archaka office does not go to the deputy who does the duties, the deputy cannot be expected to perform the duties at all satisfactorily. I do not see why a religious office should be considered less important than any other kind of office. To allow even the office of a peon to be held by a permanently disqualified man because he undertakes to appoint a deputy out of the remuneration of the office is, in my opinion, entirely mischievous and it ought not to be allowed even if it is sanctioned by usage.

In the result, my answer to the question referred is that so long as a Hindu widow is held incompetent by reason of her sex from doing the duty of a priestly office, she is also incompetent to inherit the service and emoluments of the office.

SPENCER, J.—Without laying down any rule as to particular institutions, in which there may be a special custom that females cannot succeed to the office and emoluments, the trend of decisions in this Court has certainly been to treat females as competent to succeed to the Archakaship of Hindu temples in this Presidency. See Subraya Kakramaya v. Subraya Padayya (18), Tangirala Chiranjivi v. Raja Manikya Rao (6), Ramasundaram Pillai v. Savundaratha Ammal (2), Rajeswari Ammal v. Subramania Archakar (3) and Second Appeal No. 2078 of 1915.

The judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (1) was an exception to the course of decided cases and was not adopted by Tyabji, J., who sat with him. I do not think it contains reasons of such weight as to justify a departure from the principle of stare decisis. I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1117 OF 1918.

July 25, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway.

MANGIA RAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

versus

GANESH DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Construction of document—Question of law—
Appeal, second—Mortgage with possession—Mortgagor taking mortgaged property on lease—Intention—Right of mortgagee to evict mortgagor.

Defendants executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the plaintiff on the 17th March 1913. The mortgage was declared to be with possession and redemption was to take place after two years. On the same date a rent deed was executed under which the mortgagors agreed to take the mortgaged house on lease at Rs. 3 per mensem, it being definitely stated that the mortgagee was in possession and that he was entitled to evict the mortgagors at any time by giving them one month's notice. It was, however, agreed that the rent was to be credited to the interest due under the mortgage-deed. Both these documents were registered on the 20th March 1913. On the 4th October 1915, the mortgagee instituted the present suit for the eviction of the mortgagors and recovery of Rs. 91-15-0 due as rent. It was contended that the two documents evidenced a single transaction and that, therefore, the suit for eviction was not maintainable:

Held, (1) that the question involved in the suit being one related to the construction to be placed on the two documents concerned, a second appeal was competent; [p. 352, col. 1.]

(2) that the fact that there was no reference to the lease in the mortgage-deed was a strong indication of the separate nature of the two transactions and all that was intended by the lease was that such moneys as were payable thereunder were to be given credit for; [p. 352, col. 2.]

(3) that at the time of the execution of the rent-deed, the parties clearly intended to establish the relation of landlord and tenant between themselves and, therefore, the mortgagees were at liberty to evict the mortgagors at any time. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 7th January 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Multan, dated the 17th February 1917, dismissing the claim with costs.

Bakhsbi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are briefly as follows:—On the 17th March 1913 Mangia Ram and others, defendants-appellants, executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Ganesh Das, plaintiff-respondent. The mortgaged property consisted of a house. The consideration was Rs. 2,000, which included the first year's interest in advance amounting to Rs. 240, the rate of interest being 1 per cent. per mensem, or Rs. 20 a month; the actual cash paid to the mortgagors would, therefore, be Rs. 1,760. The mortgage was declared to be with possession and redemption was to take place any time after two years. On the same date a rent deed was executed, under which the mortgagors agreed to take the mortgaged house on lease at Rs. 3 per mensem, it being de-finally stated that the mortgagee was mortgagee in possession and that he was entitled to evict the mortgagors at any time he wished by giving them one month's notice. It was, however, agreed that Rs. 3 per mensem was to be credited to the interest due under the mortgage-deed. Both these documents were registered on the 20th March 1913.

On the 4th October 1915, Ganesh Das instituted the present suit asking for the eviction of Mangia Ram and his co-mortgagors and for a decree for Rs. 91-15-0 due as rent under the rent deed. The defendants-mortgagors pleaded that these two documents evidenced a single transaction, and that, therefore, the suit for eviction was not maintainable; and the primary Court dismissed the suit. Ganesh Das appealed to the District Judge, who accepted his appeal and granted him a decree for eviction and for the amount claimed as arrears of rent. Against this decree the defendants-mortgagors preferred this second appeal through Mr. Tek Chand; and I have heard Mr. Durga Das for Ganesh Das, plaintiff-respondent. It was contended by Mr. Durga Das that inasmuch as the District Judge had held that the two deeds evidenced two separate and distinct transactions, this finding amounted to a finding on a question of fact which could not be re-opened in second appeal. With this contention I am unable to agree, as the question involved is undoubtedly one relating to the construction to be placed on the two documents concerned. On behalf of the appellants, Mr. Tek Chand referred me to Nathan Singh v. Mina Mal (1) and the Allahabad rulings referred to therein, as also to Madhwa Sidhanta Onahini Niahni v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (2). Mr. Durga Das has endeavoured to distinguish these rulings and has referred me to Chimman Lal v. Bahadur Singh (3), Venkata Chetty v. Aiyanna Gounder (4), Pindi Das v. Lal Chand (5) and Budha Shah v. Suleman (6).

The cases cited at the Bar proceeded on their own peculiar sets of facts and do not really afford much assistance in deciding the present case, though they are of value as indicating the principles governing the question before me. Turning to the documents in the case, it appears that the mortgage-deed clearly and definitely recites the fact that possession had actually been made over to the mortgagee. No provision is made for obtaining possession in default of any payment, such a provision being obviously unnecessary if, as a matter of fact, possession, constructive or otherwise, had actually passed. The interest payable was Rs. 20 a month; and redemption could only take place after two years. The rent-deed clearly and unmistakably recites that the mortgagee is a mortgagee in possession with full rights to lease the property to any one he pleases. The rent was apparently the actual rental value of the property (although of this fact there is really no evidence on the record). The mortgagee clearly intended to be regarded as a landlord under this rent-deed, and I see no reason for thinking that on the date of the execution of the deed the mortgagors had any other intention than that they should be regarded as his tenants. The mortgagee was at liberty at any time to evict the mortgagors by giving them a month's notice (with this provision he has complied and the suit was instituted after the issuing of the necessary notice). It is clear that so long as the mortgagee was in possession, he would be liable to account for such rents and profits as accrued from the property mortgaged and would be bound to give credit for such rents and profits in the first instance, no doubt, to the interest payable under the mortgage and then subsequently towards the principal. The mortgage-deed itself makes no reference to the lease and the rent was payable from the 17th March 1913. This fact, Mr. Durga Das claims, is a strong indication of the separate nature of the two transactions; whereas Mr. Tek Chand contends that it proves that the transactions were one and the same. In my opinion Mr. Durga Das's view is a correct one; and all that was intended by the lease was that such moneys as were payable thereunder as the produce of the mortgaged property were to be given credit for and credited to the interest due under the mortgage. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that the defendants-appellants are liable to eviction.

It was next urged that the amount claimed as arrears of rent was incorrect. According to the only accounts of the mortgagee with the mortgagors that are on the record, there is a sum of Rs. 240 still due as interest by the mortgagors. The amount decreed, when recovered, would, in any case, be credited to such sums as may be due under the mortgage; and I can see no reason for thinking that the plaintiff's claim is wrong.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. The ad interim order staying execution passed by me on the 15th July 1918 is set aside.

Appeal dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1830), ss. 29, 30—Sale by guardian without permission of Court, validity of—Sale for benefit of minor—Suit to set aside sale, maintainability of.

A natural guardian, who has also been appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act, cannot claim to be free from the limitations imposed by section 29 of the Act.

Section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act gives a minor the right to avoid a sale of his property made by his guardian without the sanction of the Court; so that even if the whole of the sale price was spent in benefiting the minor, he is still entitled to get back his property.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar at Gurdaspur, dated the 26th July 1916.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by Sham Das to recover possession of 6 kanals 4 marlas, which his mother sold during his minority to Shib Lal for Rs. 874-8-0. His mother was a certificated guardian under Act VIII of 1890. She sold without previous permission of Court, as required by section 29 of the Act, and so under section 30 the sale is voidable at the instance of the minor.

The lower Courts hold that plaintiff benefited to the extent of Rs. 824-8-0 and have given him a decree for possession on payment of that sum.

Defendant appeals. It is urged, on the strength of Tejpal v. Ganga (1) that the natural guardian, even though she be also the certificated guardian, is not bound by section 29 as she still has all the powers of a natural guardian. A later ruling of the Allahabad Court, Ram Chandar v. Chheda Lal (2), seems to take a different view. Section 29 applies to every one except the Collector and a guardian appointed by Will or other instrument, and I cannot see that a natural guardian can, after having been appointed a guardian under the Act, claim to be free from the limitations imposed by section 29.

As to ground 3 of this appeal it is pointed out that the minor, on coming of age, applied for his mother's removal from guardianship and said he had fully understood the accounts. But one may understand accounts and acknowledge their arithmetical correctness without ratifying sales or other transactions to which the accounts relate.

As to ground 3, the deed says the mother was to pay half expenses. The stamp on sale-deed cost only Rs. 9. Allowing another Rs. 9 for extra expenses, the mother would only have to pay Rs. 9 which may have come out of her own pocket.

As to the argument that when the sale was in the main at least for the minor's benefit, it should not be set aside, I remark that section 30 gives the minor the right to avoid the sale, so even if the whole of the sale price was spent in benefiting the minor still the minor is entitled to get back his land.

As to ground 4, no doubt Rs. 824-8-0 went to reducing a mortgage-debt created by the minor's father and that debt carried interest, so the minor was relieved of paying interest. On the other hand he lost possession of land worth Rs. 874-8 0. So I see no good cause for holding that he should now be made to pay interest to the defendant.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

RAJAH OF PITTAPUR—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Maintenance of junior members—Basis of right—Impartible zemindari, whether subject of co-parcenary—Custom—Maintenance out of impartible zemindari.

The right to maintenance of the junior members of a Mitakshara joint family, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary, begins where co-parcenary begins and ceases where co-parcenary ceases. [p. 358, col. 1.]

Two other categories of persons have by special texts a right to maintenance under the Mitakshara Law, viz., (1) Those who are debarred from inheriting by personal disqualifications e.g., the idiot, the blind from birth, the insane, etc. (2) Certain near relations, viz., the widow, the parent and the infant child. But these categories are exhaustive. [p. 358, col. 1.]

In impartible properties there is no co-parcenary, hence in such properties no one can claim maintenance on the ground that but for the custom of impartibility he could sue for partition. [p. 358, col. 1.]

Custom may and does affirm a right to maintenance out of an impartible Raj in certain members of the family. In the case of sons this custom is so well recognised that proof of it in individual cases is unnecessary. But there is no invariable or certain custom that any one below the first generation from the late Raja can claim maintenance as of right: any special custom to that effect must be pleaded and proved. [p. 358, col. 2.]

The grandson of the late Rajah of Pittapur, an impartible Raj, sued the devisee of the Raj for maintenance on the ground that by birth he had a right to maintenance out of the property constituting the Raj, which right followed the property into the hands of a third party:

Held, that there was no legal basis for any such claim. [p. 358, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court (Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair and Mr. Justice Oldfield), dated March 19, 1915, reported as 29 Ind. Cas. 356, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment and in the judgment of the Madras High Court (Sankaran Nair and Oldfield, JJ.) reported as 39 Madras 396; 29 Ind. Cas. 356. The plaintiff's suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but dismissed on appeal by the High Court. Plaintiff appealed to the Privy Council.

Mr. Upjohn, J. C. (with him Mr. Dunne, K. C.), for the Appellant, submitted that any devise made by the holder of an impartible Raj must be subject to the right of maintenance given by the Mitakshara to the junior members of the holder's family. The present holder of the Pittapur Raj has taken by devise from the late holder: he can only take subject to the obligation to maintain the members of the family.

[LORD DUNEDIN.—Could he devise to a stranger?]

Apparently he is not confined to the members of the family, but here it so happens that he has devised to the next person entitled to succeed.

An impartible estate is family property only in a limited sense, and the holder has in general the right of alienation: Santaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), but it is not self-acquired property, and the junior members of the holder's family have a right to be maintained out of it. Such right exists notwithstanding the power of alienation: the maintenance is a charge on the impartible estate: Muttusawmy Jagavera Yettappa Naicker v. Vencataswara Yettappa (2), Rama Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards [The Pittapur case] (3), Doorga Konwari* (7), Naraguntu Lutchmeedavamah v. Vengama Naidoo (8), Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (9).

In none of these decisions has it been doubted that maintenance is chargeable on an impartible estate.

The next question is whether the right to maintenance can be defeated by the holder of the impartible estate by alienation. We submit not. The Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act IV of 1882), section 39, assumes that the right to maintenance is a real right: it lays down that the right may be enforced against a voluntary transferee or transferee with notice. The Hindu Wills Act, 1870 (Act XXI of 1870), section 3, provides that a Hindu testator cannot by his Will defeat the right to maintenance.

To the same effect is the Probate and Administration Act, 1881 (Act V of 1881), section 149 (c).

Mr. Dunne followed: The High Court seems to have concluded that the right to maintenance is dependent on there being co-parcenary. That this is not so is apparent from the case of the widow. In Bombay it has even been held that if a co-parcener could sue for partition he could not sue for maintenance: Note to Himmatsing Becharsing v. Ganpatsing (10). The right to maintenance continues even in case of forfeiture: Musamat Golab Koonwur v. Collector of Benares (11), cited in Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 458 (8th Edition, page 634).

The right is attached to the property, and is not affected by the decision in Sartaj Kuari Deoraj Kuari (1).

In the case of the widow, it has been held that her right to maintenance, even when against her husband's father it was only a moral right, became a legal right against his property in the hands of his son: Janki v. Nand Ram (12).

Here the defendant is a gratuitous taker, and whether or not he is the Aurasa son, the last holder has given him the Zemindari on the footing of his being the Aurasa son: he is bound to maintain plaintiff out of the income of the Zemindari so obtained.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Respondent.—There is no text of the Mitakshara which supports the present claim. Impartible property is not the property of the joint family to which the holder belongs: it is not the subject of co-parcenary. The effect of property being partible is discussed in Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 275: the principal incidents are that—

1. In co-parcenary property no member can alienate.

2. The manager can alienate for necessity only.

3. Every person who has acquired an interest by birth can claim partition.

4. On the death of a co-parcener his interest passes by survivorship and not by inheritance.

5. Every member of the co-parcenary has a right to be maintained from it.

The right to maintenance arises by reason of co-ownership. Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 450. The right of the widow to maintenance is provided for by special texts which do not apply to a male member. At paragraph 450 Mayne refers to sundry special texts which give rights to maintenance to various persons. The case of Muttusawmy Jagavera Yettappa Naicker v. Venkataswara Yettaya (2) turned on one of these texts relating to the illegitimate son, which will be found in Stokes' Hindu Law Books, page 426 (Chapter I, XII.3).

The son has no right to be maintained from his father's self-acquired property: Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 454.

(12) 11 A. 194; A. W. N. (1889) 30; 13 Ind. Jur. 347; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 552 (F. B.).

GANGADHARA RAMA RAO v. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR.

In the case of an impartible estate the son is entitled to maintenance as against his father by custom: this custom does not extend to grandsons. The cases relied on are cases of son against father or brother against brother, but there is no case extending the right to a grandson or nephew.

The existence of such rights depends upon custom: Ekradeshvar Singh v. Janeshwari Bahusain (13).

In the case of the Pachete Raj it was held that the right to maintenance only extended to the sons and daughters of the Raja: Nilmony Singh v. Hingoo Lall Singh De (14).

The cases prior to Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) all proceeded on the basis that the impartible Raj was joint family property, and that, therefore, the right to maintenance attached to it as a matter of course: it is now, however, clearly settled that in an impartible estate there is no interest acquired by birth and no co-parcenary: Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), Sri Raja Rao Venkata Mahipat Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards (3).

There is no survivorship in impartible estate, for the reason that there is no right to claim partition: the two are correlative: Raja Chelikani Venkayamma Garu v. Raja Chelikani Venkataramanayamma (15).

Plaintiff here does not come as a relative, but claims that he is entitled to a portion of the income because defendant is a gratuitous taker. Plaintiff had no claim against the deviser, much less against defendant. Even his father was not a co-parcener: he has not lost any right to partition, and is not entitled to any maintenance as a consequence of any such loss. There is no authority in Hindu Law in support of his claim.

Mr. Kenuorthy Brown, followed: There is no general custom in an impartible Raj that any below the first generation from the last Raja are entitled to maintenance: Nilmony Singh v. Hingoo Lall Singh De (14).

Mr. Upjohn, in reply.—Plaintiff's right to maintenance accrued on his birth. The right to maintenance is irrespective of the right to partition. When the family property is impartible an adult son is entitled to maintenance, since that is the only mode in which he can obtain any benefit from the ancestral estate: Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 454 (8th Edition, page 626).

"Son" and "issue" include three direct descents in the male line: (idem para. 108, page 133, and para. 540, page 754), so that what is said of the son extends to the grandson also.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—The plaintiff is the son of an adopted son of the late Rajah of Pittapur, and he sues the defendant, the present Rajah of Pittapur, for maintenance. At the time that the suit was raised the father of the plaintiff was alive, but pending the suit he died. The Raj of Pittapur is an impartible Zemindari, and was devised by Will to the defendant, who was described in the Will as the Aurasa son of the late Rajah born of one of his wives, three years after the adoption of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff's father contested the right of the defendant to the Raj, and alleged that he was not the legitimate son of the late Rajah. In that suit the Subordinate Judge decided that the defendant was not legitimate and that the Raj was inalienable. The judgment was reversed and the case decided in favour of the defendant by the Court of Appeal and by this Board, who, without deciding as to the legitimacy of the defendant, held that in accordance with what had been laid down by this Board in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), the Zemindari of Pittapur being impartible, there was no right in the plaintiff to quarrel with the alienation made by the Will of the late Rajah.

GANGADHARA RAMA RAO V. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR.

The defendant in the present case resists the claim on the ground that no legal basis for the claim is alleged. The plaintiff did not attempt to prove that there was any custom affecting this particular Zemindari which enjoined the making of grants of maintenance to any persons, nor did he put his case on any claim resting on relationship, a relationship which, following his father's allegation, he did not allow existed, but he rested his case on what he alleged was the general law, viz., that by birth he had a right to maintenance out of the property constituting the Raj, which right followed the property into the hands of a third party. The learned Judge of the Subordinate Court gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff for maintenance and arrears. This judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeal, who dismissed the case. The ground on which the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded was shortly this: He considered that the Zemindari was joint family property, only with the peculiar quality that it was impartible. Being joint family property, the right which accrues to every junior member (and a grandson is such a junior member) in the case of the ordinary joint family under the Mitakshara Law exists also in this case. The learned Judges of the Court of Appeal held that after the decisions in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) and Rama Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards (3), it was impossible to base the plaintiff's right to maintenance on any right of co-parcenary accruing by birth, and that the case as put was based on no other ground.

It is beyond doubt that the decisions in the Madras Courts prior to the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) embodied the theory that there was joint property in an impartible Zemindari which only fell short of co-parcenary because, by custom, partition was inadmissible. It is needless to cite or examine the authorities, as their Lordships do not apprehend that there is any doubt as to this statement being correct. It will be sufficient to quote a fragment of the decision of the Court of Appeal in that case itself:—

"It must be conceded that the complete rights of ordinary co-parcenaryship in the other members of the family to the extent of joint enjoyment and the capacity to demand partition are merged in—or perhaps, to use a more correct term, subordinated to—the title of the individual member to the incumbency of the estate, but the contingency of survivorship remains along with the right to maintenance in a sufficiently substantial form to preserve for them a kind of dormant co-ownership."

But the decision of the Board which binds their Lordships made that view no longer tenable. It settled that in an impartible Zemindari there is no co-parcenary, and consequently no person existed who as co-parcener could object to alienation of the whole subject by the de facto and de jure holder. That judgment was followed and applied to this very Raj in the Pittapur case [Rama Krishna Rao v. Court of Wards (3)]. The import of these decisions was, in their Lordships' view, correctly stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Bachoo v. Mankorebai (16):—"It has now been definitely decided that in impartible properties there is no co-parcenary."

It was admitted on both sides of the Bar that in an ordinary joint family ruled by the Mitakshara Law the junior members, down to three generations from the head of the family, have a co-parcenary interest accruing by birth in the ancestral property; that this co-parcenary interest carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action of partition, and that until partition is de facto accomplished these same persons have a right to maintenance. It seems clear that this right is an inherent quality of the right of co-parcenary—that is, of common property. The individual enjoyment of the common property being ousted by the management of the head of the family, they have a right, till they exercise their right to divide, to be maintained out of the property which is common to them, who are excluded from the management, and to the head of the family who is invested with the management. As it is expressed by the late Mr. Mayne in his work:—"Those who would be entitled to share in the bulk of the property are entitled to have all their necessary expenses paid out of its income." It follows that the right to maintenance, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary, begins where co-parcenary begins and ceases where co-parcenary ceases.

There are, however, certain persons who, as is explained by express texts of the Mitakshara, while not entitled to succeed as co-owners, are given rights of maintenance. There is the category of persons who by reason of personal disqualification are not allowed to inherit. Such are the idiot, the blind from birth, the madman, etc. Such persons are debarred from the rights of co-parcenary, but are given maintenance in lieu. That this is owing not to a denial of their birth status, but to a personal disqualification preventing enjoyment, is clear by the fact that the children of such persons, being within the allowed degrees and not themselves stigmatised with the personal defect, get by their birth the full status of co-parcenary.

There must also be added another class, equally the subject of special texts. The right of this class to maintenance lies in personal relationship, but is limited to the widow, the parent, and the infant child. It does not include the grandson. It is obvious that so far as certain individuals are concerned this category overlaps the first. But it is an obligation which is independent of the fact of there being ancestral or joint family property. It is an obligation attaching to the individual. These categories exhaust the classes of persons who have such a right to maintenance under the Mitakshara Law.

Their Lordships will now revert to the position of an impartible Zemindari as it has been fixed by the decisions before referred to. An impartible Zemindari is the creature of custom, and it is of its essence that no co-parcenary exists. This being so, the basis of the claim is gone, inasmuch as it is founded on the consideration that the plaintiff is a person who, if the Zemindari were not impartible, would be entitled as of right to maintenance. There is no claim based on personal relationship.

This proposition, it must be noted, does not negative the doctrine that there are members of the family entitled to maintenance in the case of an impartible Zemindari. Just as the impartibility is the creature of custom, so custom may and does affirm a right to maintenance in certain members of the family. No attempt has been, as already stated, made by the plaintiff to prove any special custom in this Zemindari. That by itself in the case of some claims would not be fatal. When a custom or usage, whether in regard to a tenure or a contract or a family right, is repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts of a country, the Courts may hold that custom or usage to be introduced into the law without the necessity of proof in each individual case. It becomes in the end truly a matter of process and pleading. Analogy may be found in instances in the law merchant or in certain customs in copyhold tenure. In the matter in hand their Lordships do not doubt that the right of sons to maintenance in an impartible Zemindari has been so often recognised that it would not be necessary to prove the custom in each case. It is this which will explain the reference to rights of maintenance in cases decided subsequent to the decision in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1). For example, in the case of Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayadu v. Durga Prasada Nayadu (4) the judgment says:—

"As to the Zemindari estate, the Board held that it was impartible, and the consequence is that the plaintiffs as the younger brothers of the Zemindar retain such right and interest in respect of maintenance as belong to the junior members of a Raj or other impartible estate descendible to a single heir."

But their Lordships may agree here with what was said by the Court in the case of Nilmony Singh v. Hingoo Lall Singh D. (14):—

"We can find no invariable or certain custom that any below the first generation from the last Raja can claim maintenance as of right."

Apart from custom, what is left? The matter is tersely put by Sankaran Nair, J., in the Court of Appeal:—

"The plaintiff does not advance any claim based on relationship. He refuses to admit any relationship...As there was no community of interest the property is not burdened with his claim in the hands of a donee."

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 27th November 1916.

Mr. Lal Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Bakhshi Sohan Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Gurdaspur, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption on the ground that it is barred by limitation under section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. It appears to me that the plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed, though section 30 of the Pre-emption Act is not applicable. In my opinion, Article 10 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act applies and the plaintiff's suit, not having been brought within one year from the date of the registration of the deed of sale, is barred by time. The property sold was certain specific plots of land together with a share in the village shamilat.

ABHOY SANKAR MOZUMDAR v. RAJANI MANDAL.

The specific plots sold no doubt admitted of physical possession but the share in the shamilat did not. In Maluk Singh v. Muhammad (1) it was held, following the previous decisions of this Court, that where the sale in question included a share in the shamilat, even though the greater part of the property sold consisted of a separate holding, the whole subject-matter of the sale was not capable of physical possession within the meaning of Act XV, Second Schedule of the Limitation Act, Article 10, and the period of limitation in such a case is one year from the date of registration of the deed of sale. Counsel urges that no doubt that was the law at that time, but that under the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913 the present suit is governed by section 30. Section 30, however, only comes into operation in cases not provided for by Article 10 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. Article 10 lays down that where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession, the limitation for a suit is one year from the date of the registration of the deed of sale. When any part of the property sold does not admit of physical possession, then it is clear that the subject-matter of the sale as a whole does not admit of physical possession and Article 10 clearly applies in accordance with the ruling above quoted.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B.C. of 1885), s. 50—Land.

ABHOY SANKAR MOZUMDAR v. RAJANI MANDAL,

lord and tenant—Presumption of fixity of rent—Instrument stating rent to be variable, whether rebuts presumption—Purchaser of non-transferable holding, recognised, rights of—Sub-division or amalgamation of raiyati holding—"Hajat", meaning of.

Although the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding cannot claim recognition by the landlord as a matter of right, yet when he obtains recognition from the landlord, whether by payment or otherwise, then in the absence of special circumstances he is admitted into the original tenancy with all its incidents and becomes the successor-in-interest of his vendor. [p. 360, col. 2.]

"Hajat" is a well-known expression for a sum which though, described as rent but never having been part of the rent, is held in terrorem over the raiya and is recorded as held in suspense for the time being. [p. 361, col. 1.]

Per Richardson, J.—The language of clause (1) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is elliptical and the words which must be supplied after "have held at a rent or rate of rent" are "a tenure or holding or land constituting a tenure or holding." [p. 362, col. 1.]

Both the principal rule enacted in clause (1) and the subsidiary, but in practice extremely important, presumption created by clause (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act assume the continuity and identity of the tenure or holding throughout the whole period from the Permanent Settlement onwards. They are applicable to land which at the time when the question arises may form part only of the raiya's holding. Thus they apply to the several parcels of land of which the holding of a raiya consists when the question arises. Part of the holding may be inherited land. Part may have been acquired by purchase from another raiya. In either case the raiya may tack on his own occupation of the land at an unvaried rent to the occupation at an unvaried rent of his predecessor-in-interest, who as regards lands acquired by purchase from another raiya will include his vendor and his vendor's predecessors. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Section 50 is not affected by the variability of the rent at the inception of a tenancy. If the rent of a tenancy created prior to the Permanent Settlement, under an agreement which provided that the rent should be variable, has not in fact been "changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement", then it "shall not be liable to be increased". If an instrument is executed forty or fifty years later, the mere fact that the rent is expressed to be variable will by itself make no difference, as the provision for variability of rent may be merely a repetition of one of the original incidents of the holding. The true question in such cases would be whether the instrument created a new tenancy or whether it was merely confirmatory of a pre-existing interest or tenancy. [p. 364, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—These 18 appeals arise out of as many proceedings taken on the application of the landlord for the settlement of fair rents, in other words, for the enhancement of rent, under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 105-A the tenants contended that they held at fixed rents. In 16 cases the tenants succeeded in both Courts below, and in two they succeeded in the 2nd Court. Hence these 18 appeals by the landlord.

In all the cases it has been established that the tenants and their predecessors have held at a rent which has not been changed during the 20 years immediately preceding suit and they are, therefore, prima facie entitled to the benefit of the presumption arising under section 50, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In all the cases but one (Appeal No. 2181) Kabuliyats were executed by the tenants in the years 1295, 1296, 1297, or 1299. In eleven cases (Appeals Nos. 2180, 2184-88, 2190-92, 2194, 2196), these Kabuliyats show that the holdings as now constituted were formed by the amalgamation of inherited holdings with holdings otherwise acquired. The holdings are non-transferable.

The contentions of the landlords-appellants before us then are, firstly, that in the eleven cases just referred to the presumption is rebutted inasmuch as the acquisition of a non-transferable holding represents the creation of a new tenancy, and, secondly, that in these eleven cases and in six others (that is, in all except Appeal No. 2181) the presumption is rebutted by the further terms of the Kabuliyat.

I am unable to accede to either of these contentions. No doubt the purchaser of a non-transferable holding cannot claim recognition by the landlord as a matter of right, but if he obtains recognition from the landlord, whether by payment or otherwise, then in the absence of special circumstances, which do not here appear, he is admitted into the original tenancy with all its incidents and becomes the successor-in-interest of his vendor.

ABHOY SANKAR MOZUMDAR V. RAJANI MAMDAL.

Even if the opposite view were to be taken, still under section 50 (3) the presumption would not be rebutted as regards the portion or portions of the amalgamated holding representing the inherited holding. This point not having been taken in the Courts below the facts have not been investigated.

The 2nd contention is based on two portions of the Kabuliyats, one (the Kabuliyat in 1654) has been translated and we have been asked to take this as typical of all. The Kabuliyat begins thus: "Kismat nij Pushamlar madhye nowaji 1 Khada, 11 Pakhis, 22 Kanis jamir kat kami beshi sutre hajat asall bade Rs. 11-8-17 gondar jamar... Je ekkhani jote mahasoy digar jamidari sherestai lejha jai...."

Of this passage we have had placed before us translations made or examined by four different translators. One version runs: "Within Kismat Nij Pushamla there is recorded in your Zemindari Sherista a jote of 1 Khada, 11 Pakhis, 22 Kanis bearing an annual rent of Rs. 11-8-17 exclusive of all contingencies owing to variations."

The second runs thus: "In Kismat Nij Pushamla there is a jote of 1 Khada, 11 Pakhis, 22 Kanis of land bearing a variable rent of Rs. 11-8-17 exclusive of the amount payment whereof is kept in suspense by way of relief."

Neither of these translations can, in my opinion, be accepted as correct. 'Hajat' is a well-known expression for a sum which never having been part of the rent is held in terrorem over the Raiyat and recorded as held in suspense for the time being.

The difficulty experienced by the translators is caused by the words "kami beshi sutre", but these words in reality convey nothing more than the expression "less or more", and whether read with the figure of area or with the figure of rent contain no admission that the rent has ever varied or is liable to variation.

The later portion of the Kabuliyat on which reliance is placed is as follows:—

"Hereafter when you will cause the lands of my said jote (or jotes) to be measured, I, remaining present at all times with the measurement Amin, shall without concealment have all the lands in my possession measured: Furthermore, on the occasion of such measurement, on taking into consideration the quantity and quality of the land of the said jote, the nature and price of the crop and other local conditions; whatever rent you will (may) assess in a just and proper manner, I, bringing into force (abiding by) all the terms of this Kabuliyat, will pay the rent so assessed without demur (excuse)."

The learned Subordinate Judge was in doubt whether the clause above translated referred merely to excess lands, if any, or to all the lands comprised within the holding, but though the language is somewhat obscure and was possibly not intended to be plain to the Raiyat, the clause is, I think, to be read as providing not merely for additional rent on excess land but also for enhancement of rent, roughly on the grounds set out in section 30 of the Act.

But no variation has ever in fact taken place. The Raiyats have held at a rent which has not varied for the 20 years immediately preceding suit. They are, therefore, entitled to the presumption that they have held at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. The agreements, whether intended or not intended to have effect at some uncertain date after the years 1295 to 1299, certainly do not show that the holdings were created at sometime later than the Permanent Settlement or that between the time of the Permanent Settlement and the years 1295, 1296, 1297 or 1299 (as the case may be) the rent had been changed or had varied.

At the hearing on this point, we have been referred by the appellant to the case of Upendra Nath Ghose v. Dwarkanath Biswas (1) and by the respondent to the case of Bisseswar Ray Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (2). The first mentioned case appears to support the contention of the appellant and the second to support the view I take, but the reports do not set out the terms of the Kabuliyat there under consideration and neither case, therefore, can be regarded as an authority on the question before us. In the first mentioned case, moreover, the learned Judges appear to have found the creation of a new tenancy on admissions as to the state of things prior to the execution of the Kabuliyat there in question.

(2) 25 Ind. Cas. 228; 18 C. W. N. 949.

ABHOY SANKAR MOZUMDAR V. RAJANI MANDAL.

In the Kabuliyat before us I find neither of these things.

On behalf of the appellants it has also been faintly suggested that the Subordinate Judge should have held that the tenants were in possession of excess lands. It is sufficient to say that I agree with the Subordinate Judge's decision on this point.

In Appeal No. 2181, it has also been faintly suggested that the Subordinate Judge has come to his finding as regards the rent for the 20 years preceding suit on insufficient materials. He has proceeded on receipts or dakhilas from the years 1297 to 1308 on the oral evidence of the tenant, and on the non-production of the landlord's papers. In so doing he has fallen into no error of law. In this case there is no Kabuliyat and, therefore, nothing on which the appellant can rely as rebutting the presumption arising under section 50 of the Act.

For these reasons I should dismiss all these appeals.

In 16 of these appeals respondents have not appeared. These appeals will be dismissed without costs. In the remaining two the respondents have appeared and these appeals will be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—The language of clause (1) of section 50 is elliptical. "When a tenure-holder or Raiyat and his predecessor-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent, etc." To complete the sense something must be understood after the word "held." If we insert merely the word "land", then the rule laid down might apply to land which only forms part of a tenure or holding when the question arises. It is true that in clause (3) which relates back to clause (1), the expression used is 'land held by a Raiyat', but the exception at the end of clause () which speaks of "the tenure or holding" militates against such a construction of that and it would seem that the words which must be supplied are 'a tenure or holding' or 'land constituting a tenure or holding.' This is also consistent with the words 'alteration' in the exception. Alteration implies comparison. The area of the tenure or holding, when the question arises, must under this clause, be compared with the area of the tenure or holding at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

The word 'held' is similarly used in clause (2) and grammar requires that the same words should be supplied after it as in clause (1).

In this view both the principal rule enacted in clause (1) and the subsidiary, but in practice extremely important, presumption created by clause (2) assume the continuity and identity of the tenure or holding throughout the whole period from the Permanent Settlement onwards. The result so arrived at is, I think, in accord with reported cases decided under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The question of continuity may sometimes give rise to difficulty. In the case of Ryoti holdings, clauses (1) and (2) must be read subject to clause (3), which lays down that "the operation of this section, so far as it relates to land held by a Raiyat shall not be affected by the fact of the land having been separated from other land which formed with it a single holding, or amalgamated with other land into one holding." In this clause "land held by a Raiyat" obviously refers to land which either constituted or formed part of the original holding and the word "affected" means adversely affected, adversely, that is, to the Raiyat. The result seems to be that the main rule and the presumption are made applicable to land which at the time, when the question arises, may form part only of the Raiyat's holding. The Raiyat must, of course, show in the first instance that he has held the land at the same rent at least for the twenty years before suit.

The rule and the presumption may thus be applicable to the several parcels of land of which the holding consists when the question arises. Part of the holding may be inherited land. Part may have been acquired by purchase from another Raiyat. In either case the Raiyat may tack on his own occupation of the land at an unvaried rent to the occupation at an unvaried rent of his predecessors-in-interest, who, as regards land acquired by purchase from another Raiyat will include his vendor and his vendor's predecessors.

In the present case we are dealing with Raiyati holdings. The holdings, it may be taken, are of composite character, consisting partly of land belonging to the Raiyat's original inherited holdings and partly, it may be, of land acquired by purchase or exchange. The first contention of the appellant landlords is that the Court below was wrong in applying the presumption created by clause (2) of section 50 to holdings of this character or at any rate to the whole of the lands comprised in them. The point turns on clause (3) of the section and I agree with my learned brother that on the materials before us the contention must be rejected.

The second point presents more difficulty and it may be put in this way. If the tenant proves that he has held at the same rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement or for the twenty years before suit, is it a sufficient answer on the part of the landlord to say that while the rent has not in fact been changed, the tenant has held under an agreement, express or implied, according to which the rent would be a variable rent? If we are to be guided by the plain language of clause (1) of section 50, the mere fact that variability of rent is one of the original incidents of the tenancy affords the landlord no protection. When an occupancy Raiyat pays his rent in money, the rent is, generally speaking, subject to enhancement within the limits prescribed by the Act. That is to say, variability of rent is, generally speaking, an original incident of the holding. If it be sufficient for the landlord to advert to that fact, then section 50 would be of little avail to occupancy Raiyats. The section, however, does not provide a method of proving that the rent was originally fixed in perpetuity. It lays down that if the rent has not been changed for a certain time, it shall not be subject to enhancement.

This appears to have been the view taken in Bisseswar Ray Chowdhry v. Rajendra Kumar Singha (2). That case was referred to and distinguished in Upendra Nath Ghose v. Gopi Charan Saha (3). There, however, the question related to a tenure and the ground of the decision seems to have been that the agreement by which four tenures were amalgamated into one at a variable rent created a new tenancy. If the agreement created a new tenancy as from its date, it would not signify whether the rent was or was not subsequently varied so as to exceed the total of the rent previously payable for the four tenures. The case of Upendra Nath Ghose v. Dwarkanath Biswas (1) decided by the same learned Judges while it also related to a tenure is not so easy to distinguish. There a tenure appears to have been held for about 37 years at an unvaried rent but the landlord produced a Kabuliyat of the year 1840, by which the tenure-holder's predecessor-in-interest had expressly agreed to pay "enhanced rent according to the Pergana rate." It does not appear that the rent had ever in fact been enhanced. The learned Judges say: "The Kabuliyat may be considered either as a new contract under which the tenants agreed to pay enhanced rent or as a contract containing recitals of the incidents of the tenancy which was in existence from before. In either view of the matter it shows that the rent was enhanceable." It cannot be denied that if these observations were intended as an expression of general opinion on the construction and effect of section 50 they would apply as well to a Raiyati holding as to a tenure. But the learned Judges did not refer to the language of section 50 or to Bisseswar's case (2). Moreover, the terms of the Kabuliyat are not stated and if the Kabuliyat created a new tenancy, there was an end of the matter.

In the present case the transactions by which the landlord agreed to receive a lump sum as rent for all the lands comprised in each holding were, no doubt, accompanied by the execution of Kabuliyats importing that the rent so fixed was variable. But the lump sum was in each case merely the total of the rents previously payable for the separate parcels of land then amalgamated. Regard being had to clause (3), the mere amalgamation of the land, as we have already decided, would not have affected the operation of section 50 in favour of the Raiyat. Does the inclusion in the Kabuliyats of the condition relating to variability of rent make by itself any difference? Does it entitle the landlord to say offhand that here are new tenancies dating from the amalgamation?

NATHA SINGH v. CHUNI LAL.

In my opinion, when the questions I have put are fairly faced, they must be answered in the negative. Section 50 is not affected by the variability of the rent at the inception of a tenancy. Assume the creation of the tenancy prior to the Permanent Settlement under an agreement, which, whether in writing or not, must be understood to have provided that the rent should be variable. Nevertheless, under clause (1) of section 50 if the rent has not in fact been "changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement," then it "shall not be liable to be increased." If an instrument is subsequently executed forty or fifty years later, the mere fact that the rent is expressed to be variable will by itself make no difference. The provision for variability of rent may be merely a repetition of one of the original incidents of the holding, an incident which does not exclude the operation of section 50. The true question in such cases would seem to be whether the instrument on which the landlord relies is merely confirmatory of the pre-existing interest or tenancy or whether it creates a new tenancy, and in the case of Raiyati holdings this question must be considered with reference to the provision contained in clause (3).

In these appeals, I agree with my learned brother that the landlord has not succeeded in rebutting the presumption created by clause (2) by showing the contrary within the meaning of that clause.

I agree, therefore, that the appeals should be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Mortgage—Suit for interest—Subsequent suit for princi- pal, maintainability of—Construction of document.

Where under a mortgage-deed both principal and interest become due, the mortgagee must sue for both together, otherwise he is debarred under Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, from claiming in a subsequent suit what was not claimed in the prior suit [p. 365, col. 1.]

In a mortgage-deed executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff in 1909, interest was fixed nominally at Rs. 6 per mensem and a reference was made to an agreement between the parties to draw up a deed of lease of the mortgaged property. The lease was drawn up on the same day and provided that the mortgagor should pay rent at Rs. 6 per mensem. Plaintiff sued for the rent due to him in 1911 and obtained a decree. Subsequently he brought a suit for the recovery of the principal and interest due after 1911:

Held, that the mortgage and lease constituted one transaction and that the subsequent suit was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 365, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Amritsar Division, dated the 2nd February 1914.

Dr. G. O. Narang, for the Appellant.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff obtained a mortgage on two houses in July 1909 for Rs. 1,000. Interest was fixed nominally at Rs. 6 per mensem and in the mortgage-deed a reference was made to an agreement between the parties to draw up a deed of lease of the mortgaged houses. This lease was drawn up on the same day and provided that the mortgagor should pay rent at Rs. 6. The deed also provided that the mortgaged property must be redeemed within one year. Plaintiff sued for the rent due to him in 1911 in the Small Cause Court, Amritsar, and obtained a decree. At this time the principal mortgage debt had also become due. He now sues for the recovery of the principal and interest due since 1911. His case was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but the Divisional Judge has held that it is barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, under the authority of Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (1).

Counsel for the appellant argues before us that the deed of lease constituted an entirely separate transaction from the mortgage-deed, and he has referred to Pindi Das v. Lal Chand (2) in support of his argument. In that case, however, we notice that the lease was executed some weeks after the mortgage and that in the deed itself there was no agreement that the property should be leased. In the present case the lease and the mortgage-deed were executed on one and the same day and the mortgage-deed itself provided for the execution of a deed of lease. In our opinion the lease was granted simply to provide a mode for realizing interest payable on the mortgage amount, and we must hold that the parties stood in the relation of the mortgagee and mortgagor, and that as this relation is not altered by reason of the execution of the lease it cannot be in any way considered that there were divisible transactions. Similar cases have been discussed in Baghelin v. Mathura Prasad (3), Altaf Ali Khan v. Lalta Prasad (4) and Madhwa Sidhanta Onahini Nidhi v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (5). In none of these cases, however, was there such strong intrinsic evidence that two nominally distinct agreements formed one covenant. In both the Allahabad cases the deed of lease was drawn up subsequently to the deed of mortgage. We consider, therefore, that the learned Divisional Judge was amply justified in considering that there was only one covenant between the parties. In these circumstances Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (1) is a clear authority that when under a mortgage-deed both principal and interest have become due, the mortgagee must sue for both together and that otherwise he is debarred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, from claiming in the subsequent suit what was not claimed in the prior suit.

We, therefore, agree with the decision of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of—Landlord and tenant—Lease by ijaradar, after expiry of ijara and during pendency of ejectment suit, validity of.

W., who was the owner of a 12-annas share and an ijaradar of the remaining four-annas share of certain lands, made a settlement of the lands on the expiry of the ijara, while a suit by the proprietors for his ejectment from the four-annas share covered by the ijara was pending:

Held, that the raiyats with whom W. had settled the lands were liable to be ejected from the four-annas share covered by the ijara by the proprietors thereof, as W. did not act in good faith in making the settlement. [p. 367, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 30th of March 1916, reversing those of the Munsif, Boalia, dated the 22nd of March 1915.

FACTS will appear from the judgment.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta (with him Babus Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Probodh Kumar Das), for the Appellants.—The defendants obtained settlement from Messrs. Watson and Co. in 1305, while they were in possession under the ijara lease, therefore, the settlement is valid. The defendants have acquired a right of occupancy, and, therefore, the plaintiff has no right to eject the defendants. Referred to Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1).

If the defendants are not tenants, they are trespassers from 1305. In order to eject the defendants, the plaintiff must show that he was in possession within 12 years before suit. The suit was brought 16 years after the defendants obtained settlement and entered into possession.

[Babus Bepin Behari Ghose.—There is nothing in the written statement.]

[(1) 20 C. 708; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 477 (F. B.).

FELU SARKAR v. HEMANTA KUMARI DEBYA.

The tenants were not made parties to the suit of 1904, though the tenants were in actual physical possession, therefore, the present suit is barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The lower Appellate Court is wrong in assuming that the lands are nij icte lands, though there is nothing in the plaint and no evidence was adduced on that point.

The defendants took settlement from a co-proprietor in 1305 and paid rent, therefore, they have acquired a right of occupancy. Referred to Mookta Keshee Dossee v. Koylash Chunder Mitter (2).

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, II (with him Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi), for the Respondent.—The appeals are concluded by findings of fact. The plaintiff obtained a decree for khas possession against the pro forma defendants who are alleged to have made settlement of the entire interest with the present appellants. The question is, when did they obtain this settlement.

We say that the tenants obtained the settlement during the pendency of the suit. In the written statement, defendants nowhere state that settlement was made by pro forma defendants during the continuance of the ijara. Binad Lal Pakrashi's case (1) does not apply here. Referred to Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (3).

The doctrine in Binad Lal Pakrashi's case (1), cannot override the doctrine of lis pendens.

Latest case in which Binad Lal Pakrashi's case (1) is referred is Krishna Nath v. Muhammad Wafiz (4).

The case reported as Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1) is not applicable here, as the absence of good faith has been found on both sides. The question of khamar land would arise if the case of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1) were applicable. Assuming it is khamar, the tenants cannot acquire either the right of occupancy or non-occupancy, as the settlement was made by one co-sharer. Referred to Radha Prashad Wasti v. Esuf (5).

the other co-proprietors are not bound to recognise him but if he remains on the land for 12 years, the other co-proprietors cannot eject him upon the principle of the decision in Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1).

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are preferred by the principal defendants, the tenants. The plaintiff brought the suit from which they arise to recover khas possession of her share, approximately four annas, in certain land, by ejecting the principal defendants, and she made the Midnapore Zemindary Company, owners of the remaining interest, pro forma defendants. Her case was that she granted an ijara of her share to Messrs. Watson & Co., predecessors of the Midnapore Zemindary Company, and that at the expiry of the ijara she brought a suit against them in 1903, and obtained a decree, and that the tenant defendants obtained settlement of the lands during the pendency of that suit. The suits were dismissed by the first Court, but they were decreed on appeal.

The defence was that the defendants obtained settlement from Messrs. Watson & Co. in 1305 while the latter were in possession under their ijara lease.

The contentions pressed by the appellants-defendants are based mainly on the assertion that they obtained settlement in 1305, and I think it will be convenient to state them before turning to the findings recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge.

They are as follows:—

(1) The settlements were taken from Messrs. Watson & Co. who were owners to the extent of about 12 annas and ijaradars of the balance, and, therefore, it cannot be said that the defendants came upon the land other than in good faith.

(2) Even if it be held that the ijara lease came to an end before 1305, the suits are barred by limitation.

(3) If Messrs. Watson & Co. were not ijaradars in 1305, they were at any rate proprietors to the extent of about 12 annas; the defendants obtained settlement from them and after being in possession for twelve years, they acquired rights of occupancy which cannot be assailed.

GHULAM DASTGIR v. TEJA SINGH.

(4) The tenants were not made parties to the suit of 1908, although the plaintiff could not get khaz possession without obtaining a decree against them and, therefore, the present suit is barred by Order II, rule 2.

(5) As to the finding that the lands are proprietor's nij iote, this claim was not made in the plaint, it was not advanced in the first Court, and no evidence was adduced in regard to it.

The propositions embodied in the first four arguments are elementary, and it is conceded on the one hand that if the defendants obtained settlement in 1305, the arguments are unanswerable, and on the other that they have no foundation if the defendants did not obtain settlement until several years later.

The learned Subordinate Judge begins his judgment by an unfortunate misstatement: he says that the ijara expired before 1305, whereas it is admitted that there is no evidence to show when it expired. The mistake, however, does not vitiate his judgment, he goes on to record clear findings which are not affected by his belief that the ijara had undoubtedly come to an end before 1305. He points out that there are no kabuliyats in respect of the settlements said to have been made in 1305 and 1310: that the kabuliyats of 1317 were executed while the title suit was pending: and that the explanation offered for the absence of Dakhilas during the period 1305 to 1310 is not satisfactory; he then holds that the settlements cannot be placed earlier than 1317 and points out that at least some of the defendants knew of the litigation that was in progress, and that at any rate the pro forma defendants who granted settlement cannot have been acting bona fide.

These findings of fact dispose of four of the arguments advanced by the appellants, and it is unnecessary to say anything about the question whether the land is the proprietor's nij iote or not.

The appeals are dismissed with costs.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 22nd May 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl i-Hussain, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. Hari Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th of March 1914, Randhir Singh, defendant No. 2, sold a house situate in Gawal Mandi, Lahore, to Ghulam Dastgir, defendant No. 1. Plaintiff Sardar Teja Singh, who is the father of Randhir Singh, brought the suit out of which the present appeal arises for a declaration to the effect that the house in question was his sole property and that the defendants had no title thereto. The site upon which the house is built was purchased from one Kanhaya Lal in the name of Randhir Singh by a sale deed, dated 29th of June 1908, but plaintiff contends that the deed was executed benami in his son's name, he himself being the real purchaser. He also contends that the house was built with funds supplied by him and that it was not built for his son. The vendee, on the other hand, contends that the plaintiff bought the site and built the house on it as a gift to Randhir Singh and that the latter made a valid sale to him. On the pleadings of the parties nine issues were framed, which will be found in the judgment at page 232 of the paper book. The lower Court has discussed all these issues, but it is not necessary for us to refer to all of them. It will be sufficient to note that the Court found that the plaintiff was in possession of the house at the time of the institution of the suit, that the site was purchased by the plaintiff and the house was built by him, and that the name of defendant No. 2 was entered benami in the sale-deed of 1908; that the plaintiff never made a gift of the site and the house to his son and that he is not estopped from alleging that the sale was benami. It further held that defendant is not entitled to any equitable relief in consideration of the sum paid by him to Randhir Singh. On these findings plaintiff's suit was decreed, and Ghulam Dastgir has appealed to this Court.

The first point taken up by Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, Advocate, on behalf of the appellant, was that the plaintiff had given no satisfactory explanation as to why he had got Randhir Singh's name entered in the sale-deed of 1908, if he did not intend him to be the owner of the property sold thereby. It is true that plaintiff has not satisfactorily explained this. At the time of the sale in 1908 he was an Inspector of Police serving in the Ferozepore District, and the reason which he gives for not getting his own name entered in the sale-deed is that he was absent in another district and could not conveniently appear at the time of registration and, therefore, sent Randhir Singh to appear instead of him. This is not very satisfactory, because at the time of registration there is no necessity for the vendee to be present before the Sub-Registrar. It is further pointed out that in the notice which plaintiff had inserted in the Paisa Akhbar on the 13th of March 1914 (see page 23 of the paper book) he stated that the deed was registered in his son's name through a mistake or owing to some other reason. In other words, he did not then give the reason which he now assigns. At the time of registration Janmeja Singh, the brother of the plaintiff, appeared as guardian of Randhir Singh, who was a minor, and Counsel for the appellant has commented on the fact that Janmeja Singh has not been examined as a witness in order to ascertain what was the real reason why Randhir Singh's name was entered in the deed. For plaintiff it is explained that he is not on good terms with his brother and this is borne out by the evidence of Khalifa Hakumat Rai, see page 274, line 18, of the paper-book. In our opinion this question as to why plaintiff got Randhir Singh's name entered in the deed instead of his own is not of very much importance. It is a practice in this country for a man buying property to get the name of his wife or of his son entered in the deed instead of his own. Plaintiff may have had no particular reason for getting his son's name entered, or he may have had various reasons which he did not wish to state in Court. On the other hand, it is urged on behalf of the respondents that the defendant-appellant has not explained why Sardar Teja Singh should have treated his son Randhir Singh in such a very liberal fashion. He has got four other sons, and to none of them has he made a gift of this sort. The only explanation suggested is that Randhir Singh has got a defect in one of his legs or is clubfooted, and that on this account Teja Singh wished to provide for him. We do not, however, think that this was any sufficient reason for such a provision being made for him. Randhir Singh has appeared before us and told us that he is at present employed as a clerk in the Municipal Office on a salary of Rs. 22 a month. It is, therefore, clear that he has been educated and is fit to earn his own living, and we do not consider that the fact that plaintiff has not given a very satisfactory explanation as to why he caused Randhir Singh's name to be entered in the deed of sale of the site is very material to show that the plaintiff intended the property purchased to belong to his son.

Another part of defendant-appellant's case was that there was a stone tablet let into the house, on which was engraved the name of Randhir Singh, the contention being that this shows that the house belonged to him. The evidence on this point has been discussed in detail by the lower Court. It did not consider it to be very strong, some of the witnesses—for instance Dr. Amir Shah (D. W. No. 18)—appear to be men of position and respectability and we hardly think there are sufficient reasons for rejecting their evidence. At the same time, Dr. Amir Shah has stated that he himself has built a house which bears a tablet with his son's name upon it, but that the house belongs to himself and not to his son. This shows that the mere fact that a man has built a house and put his son's name on a tablet in it does not signify that the house belongs to the son. Our conclusion then is that there may have been a tablet bearing Randhir Singh's name in the house in dispute, but even if there was it would not necessarily show that the house was his property.

Now we have it clearly shown that the site was bought with the plaintiff's money and that the house thereon was constructed out of funds supplied by him. Moreover, all the correspondence relating to the house with the Lahore Municipal Committee was conducted by or on behalf of the plaintiff himself. Mr. Shafi on behalf of the respondents argues that these facts having been proved there is no presumption that the site and house belonged to Randhir Singh. He referred inter alia to the following authorities:—Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (1), wherein it was held by the Privy Council that where a purchase of real estate is made by a Hindu in the name of one of his sons, the presumption of the Hindu Law is in favour of its being a benami purchase and the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such purchased estate.

Moulvie Sayyud Uzhur Ali v. Musammatt Bebee Utaf Fatima (2), in which the Privy Council held that the principle with respect to benami purchases between Hindus laid down in Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (1) is equally applicable to similar transactions between Muhammadans.

In Moulvie Sayyud Uzhur Ali v. Musammatt Bebee Utaf Fatima (2) it was held that the real criterion in such a case as the present is to consider from what source the purchase money comes; that the presumption is that a purchase made with the money of A, in the name of B, is for the benefit of A; and it cannot be presumed from the purchase by the father, whether a Muhammadan or Hindu, in the name of his son that there was an advancement in favour of that son.

Counsel not only relies strongly upon the above rulings, but also upon the following facts, which according to him conclusively prove that the plaintiff is the owner of the property in dispute:—

(1) Plaintiff supplied the purchase money of the site.

(2) He is in possession of the title-deed and has produced it.

(3) He is in possession of the property.

(4) He erected the building at his own expense.

(5) He has received rent from the Police authorities for part of the building rented to Khan Bahadur Sufaid Ullah Khan, Inspector of Police.

The receipts for rent have been signed either by or on behalf of Sardar Teja Singh. There is some oral evidence that plaintiff stated to certain persons that he had given the house to Randhir Singh, but in our opinion this oral evidence is not of much value and certainly does not outweigh all the other evidence which goes to show that plaintiff is himself the owner of the property. Beyond the fact that the deed of sale of the site is in the name of Randhir Singh, there is very little evidence to show that he is really the owner. No doubt, he sometimes realised rent of the house but his father, the plaintiff, may very easily have allowed him to do this either as his agent or that he might be able to maintain himself.

The next point urged by Mr. Fazli Hussain on behalf of the appellant was that even if plaintiff was the owner of the house, he had allowed it to be considered that Randhir Singh was the owner and he was, therefore, now estopped from denying the fact. He referred to Mahomed Mozuff-er Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (3), where the following passage taken from a former judgment of the Privy Council occurs:—

"It is a principle of natural equity, which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title, unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to constructive notice, of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an enquiry that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it".

Mr. Shafi on behalf of the respondents also relies upon the concluding portion of this passage, for he urges that Ghulam Dastgir had notice of plaintiff's title, or, at all events, that circumstances existed which ought to have put him upon an enquiry that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it. In this connection he has referred to the agreement dated 4th of March 1914 entered into between Randhir Singh and Ghulam Dastgir, which is marked as Exhibit D-10 and printed at page 217 of the paper-book. This was an agreement for sale entered into a few days before Randhir Singh sold the house in dispute to defendant appellant. It shows that the purchaser was to retain Rs. 8,000 out of the purchase money, in case anybody set up a dispute in regard to the house, the said sum to be paid after the settlement of such dispute, and after the deduction of any debt which might be proved to be a charge on the house sold. Counsel also refers to a corresponding clause in the sale-deed itself, which will be found at the top of page 219 of the paper-book, which is as follows:—

"If anybody sets up any dispute with regard to ownership of the house and the site sold, I, the vendor, shall be responsible and answerable to defend that dispute".

He draws special attention to the fact that the house and the site were separately mentioned. He also refers to the letter (Exhibit D-4) dated 15th February 1914 (page 211 of the paper book) written by Randhir Singh to Ghulam Dastgir. The portion to which he draws attention is as follows:—

"As regards the conversation regarding sale of the house which took place between you and me through Sheikh Hussain Bakhsh, from whom I came to know that you want to enquire about my age and the original owner of the house, I can assure you that I am 22 years old and that the house is my property. I purchased the site of that house, filed a plan thereof, and got it constructed."

Counsel urges strongly that these documents show that Ghulam Dastgir knew that he was purchasing a doubtful title and anticipated some dispute. Also that he was not sure whether Randhir Singh was of full age and competent to contract. It is urged that he should have made some enquiries from the vendor's father Sardar Teja Singh. We are inclined to agree with Counsel that the above facts show that Ghulam Dastgir was not quite certain of Randhir Singh's title and of his competency to make a valid contract, and we think defendant certainly should have made further enquiries and specially should have enquired from Sardar Teja Singh who could have given him all information on the point. In addition to the above Counsel refers to the petition which Sardar Teja Singh presented to the Sub-Registrar, Lahore, on the 11th of December 1913, which is marked as Exhibit P-15 and is printed at page 16 of the paper-book. In this Sardar Teja Singh states:—

"I, being a Government employee, purchased a plot of land in the name of my son, Randhir Singh, I have constructed a building thereon by spending a great deal of money. Now my son, Randhir, has fallen under the clutches of certain Sahukars of Lahore, whose profession is to secure deeds for considerable amounts on payment of only small sums. He intends to sell or mortgage the kothi at the instance of Sahukars, brokers and immoral persons, but he has no power to mortgage or sell it. I want that he should not be able to take such action without my knowledge I, therefore, pray that at the time of presentation of any deed executed by Randhir Singh, my son, in respect of the said kothi intimation in this respect may be given to me."

Acting upon this petition the Sub-Registrar Lala Amar Nath warned the defendants at the time when they presented the deed for registration (see his evidence in this respect printed at page 248 of the paper-book). This gentleman's evidence has not been questioned by Counsel for the appellant, and we see absolutely no reason for not accepting it. It shows that Ghulam Dastgir had direct notice of Teja Singh's claim to the house which he, therefore, purchased with his eyes open. Under the circumstances, we consider that plaintiff is not estopped from denying Randhir Singh's title to the house and that no equities arise in favour of Ghulam Dastgir. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain says that his client has paid large sums of money to Randhir Singh out of the purchase money, namely,

Rs. 2,000 earnest money ;

Rs. 1,000 before the Sub-Registrar on the 19th of March 1914 ;

Rs. 1,900 in cash paid on the 1st of April 1914 ;

Rs. 5,137 paid to Ramun Shah, a creditor of Randhir Singh, on the 1st May 1914 ;

Rs. 100 paid to the vendor on the 11th May 1914; and

Rs. 1,762 paid to him on the 17th of June 1914.

Now the summons in the present case was served upon Ghulam Dastgir on the 29th April 1914 and we think it extremely improbable that he was so imprudent as to pay nearly Rs. 7,000 thereafter either to the vendor or to the vendor's creditor. If, however, he did so, he did it with his eyes open and in full knowledge of the vendor's defective title, and he is not entitled to compensation from Sardar Teja Singh, the real owner of the property.

We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's claim has been rightly decreed by the lower Court and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Accounts, suit for—Death of agent—Legal representatives of agent, liability of—Procedure.

The death of an agent during the pendency of a suit against him for accounts does not exonerate his legal representatives from all liability to the principal. After the death of the agent the proper procedure in the suit would be that the statement of claim put in by the plaintiff should be investigated, preferably by a Commissioner in the presence of the representatives of the deceased agent. The onus would be on the plaintiff to prove each item in the sum which he claims, i. e., to prove that each item was actually realised by the agent and further that it was not paid to his credit. The representatives of the deceased agent would be at liberty to adduce such evidence as they please to show either that the money was not realised by the agent or that after realisation it was paid to the plaintiff. The amount actually due being thus ascertained, the Court would pass a decree against the assets of the deceased agent in the hands of the representatives. [p. 373, col. 1.]

As a matter of fact this suit cannot be governed by the case reported as Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1), for that was a suit against the legal representatives of the agent but was instituted against the agent himself. This case is governed by *Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. the assets which have come into their hands from the agent. I must have my remedy in some way. If the defendant Baharulla acted as my agent, if he realised rents from my tenants and did not pay me anything if he did leaving some properties why should not my dues be paid out of that estate?

The case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Basanta Kumar Roy (2) clearly supports my position and the case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1) does not go against me, as there the suit was brought against the legal representatives.

Mr. Wahed Hossein, for the Respondents.—The question is whether the suit was framed rightly. So far as the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Basanta Kumar Roy (2) is concerned, that case is no authority for the proposition that such a suit may be maintained against the legal representatives of the deceased defendant, for that case was brought against the minors under certain sections of the Guardians and Wards Act. Hence the case reported as Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1) is the first case to be applied.

Moreover, here minors are involved as the representatives of Baharulla, and they do not know the terms of contract between their father Baharulla and the plaintiff and the proper person who could render accounts was Baharulla. If the case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1) is an authority in this case, then this suit should be withdrawn. So far as minors are concerned, there is another case, Manmothnath Bose Mullick v. Basanto Kumar Bose Mullick (3).

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff. The case has had a long history. The deceased defendant Baharulla executed a Kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiff, by which he undertook to pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,375 per annum and in return to collect the rents of a Mahal belonging to the plaintiff. He failed to carry out the conditions of the Kabuliyat and the plaintiff instituted this suit in April 1908 as a rent suit. Baharulla filed a written statement in which he objected that the sum to be paid by him could not be treated as rent, and a few months later the plaintiff amended his plaint and converted the suit to a suit for money instead of a suit for rent. The amendment was allowed. The first Court then decreed the suit in respect of the claim for damages for non-delivery of papers but dismissed it so far as the claim for money due under the Kabuliyat was concerned, as not being maintainable in the form in which it was brought. The learned District Judge on appeal upheld that decision. Then the case was brought to this Court and it was ordered by this Court that the suit should be treated as a suit for account and it was remitted to the first Court.

Before the case could be taken up by the learned Subordinate Judge Baharulla died. The plaintiff then brought his representatives on the record in his place. They objected that the suit could not be maintained as against them and both the lower Courts have upheld that contention. The learned District Judge purports to base his views upon the case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1).

It has been urged before us on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that, in spite of the death of the agent, he is at liberty to continue the suit against the representatives and that if the representatives cannot be asked to explain the papers kept by the deceased agent, at any rate, he, the plaintiff, is entitled to have his statement of claim against them investigated. It appears to me rather an extraordinary contention made on behalf of the defendants that the death of Baharulla should at once exonerate them from all further liability to the plaintiff. If the agent collected money belonging to the plaintiff which he ought to have made over to the plaintiff and failed to do so and died while such money was still due to the plaintiff, it is hard to believe that the agent's representatives are free from all liability, and the case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (1), to which I have just referred, appears to me to be an authority for taking this view. In fact, the present case is a stronger one, because the suit was brought and the order of this Court in appeal was made against the agent himself, whereas the case to which I have referred was brought after the agent's death against the representatives.

It appears to me that the proper order to pass in this case now is that the case should go back to the first Court and that the statement of claim which the plaintiff put in after the death of Baharulla should be investigated, preferably by a Commissioner, in the presence of the representatives of the deceased agent. The onus will be on the plaintiff to prove each item in the sum which he claims, that is, to prove that each item was actually realized by the agent and further that it was not paid to his credit. The defendants will be at liberty to adduce such evidence as they please, to show either that the money was not realised by the agent or that after realization it was paid to the plaintiff. The amount actually due will be ascertained and the Court will pass a decree against the assets of the deceased agent Baharulla in the hands of the representatives, that is to say, if any sum is found due to the plaintiff. The decree of the first Court with regard to the sum of Rs. 50 for damages will stand. The order of the first Court making the plaintiff liable for proportionate costs to the defendants is set aside. The plaintiff will get his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court from the contesting defendants.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the defendants asks that the plaintiff should be required to issue fresh processes against the minor defendants who have not entered appearance. This may be unnecessary but the plaintiff is directed to do so.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 31st March 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which the present appeal arises are as follows:

Before the first Settlement, Keora and Chatra (see the pedigree table at page 7 of the paper book) gifted the land in dispute and other land to their sister's son Bisakhi. On the death of Bisakhi his widow, Musammât Chando, was in possession. She made a gift of that part of Bisakhi's land which is not now in suit to her daughter's son, Tara Chand, the present plaintiff. The present defendants, the agnates of Keora and Chatra, the original donors, brought a suit for declaration that the gift should not affect their reversionary rights. During the pendency of the suit Musammât Chando died, so the suit was changed into one for possession. It was held in that suit up to the Chief Court that upon the donee dying sonless the property gifted would revert to the collaterals of the donors. It was however, held that as the reversioners, with the exception of Babu, one of the defendants in the present suit, had acquiesced in the gift, their suit should be dismissed; Babu was given a decree for his 1/6th share. The rest of the land which was not the subject of the gift by Musammât Chando to Tara Chand is now in dispute and the question is whether Tara Chand, daughter's son of the original donee, is to get it or the defendants who are reversioners of the original donors. In Gurdit Singh v. Prem Kuar (1) and Lachhman v. Bhagwan Sahai (2) it is (1) 3 Ind. Cas. 604; 84 P. R. 1909; 76 P. L. R. 1909; 118 P. W. R. 1909. (2) 10 Ind. Cas. 277; 68 P. R. 1911; 160 P. L. BINDU BASINI DASSYA v. SRIMANTA SIL.

laid down that there is no reversion to the collaterals so long as descendants of the donee, whether in the male or female line, are existing. According to these rulings Tara Chand, daughter's son of the original donee, is entitled to the land and not the defendants who are reversioners. But the question is whether the decision in the previous case operates as res judicata. The lower Courts have held that it does not. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the question was purely one of custom, but there is a sound proposition of case-law that an erroneous decision operates for the subject-matter then in suit but no further. It was further of opinion that as the land in suit was not in suit in the former case, the erroneous decision as to custom in that suit was not a bar to the trial of a similar issue of custom in the present suit. As regards the defendants other than Babu we have no difficulty in holding that the question is not res judicata. It was found in the former suit that they had acquiesced in the gift to Tara Chand and, therefore, their suit failed on that ground alone and it was not necessary to come to any decision on the question of custom so far as they were concerned. As regards Babu, however, we hold that the decision on the question of custom is res judicata. The point was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit between him and Tara Chand and was heard and finally decided by the Court in that suit, and it cannot, in our opinion, be re-opened. The question of the existence of a custom is one of fact, and there is no authority in support of the proposition that an erroneous decision on a question of custom between the same parties does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit even though the subsequent suit relates to other property than that concerned in the former suit.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, and in modification of the orders of the lower Courts give plaintiff a decree for possession of 5/6ths of the land, but the claim to the remaining 1/6th share which is that of Babu is dismissed. In the peculiar circumstances of the case we direct that the parties should bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 125 OF 1916.

May 27, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fletcher and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, Kt.
BINDU BASINI DASSYA AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS

versus

SRIMANTA SIL—OBJECTOR AND OTHERS—
JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage suit—Purchaser of portion of equity of redemption, whether can object to sale in execution—Independent title, whether can be enforced in execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47.

A purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property who is joined as a defendant in the mortgage suit, cannot, under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, object to the sale of the mortgaged property under the final decree in the mortgage suit on the ground that he has acquired a new and independent interest in that portion of the property. [p 375, col 2.]

Any right that he has to an interest outside and independent of the mortgage must be enforced by proper proceedings outside the mortgage suit. [p. 375, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Pabna, dated the 22nd February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty (with him Babus Mohini Mohan Chuckerbutty and Madhab Govinda Roy), for the Appellants.—Assuming that defendant No. 8 has a new title, what right has he to come under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, as a party to the suit as judgment-debtor. If he is a stranger, he cannot prefer a claim in a sale in execution of a mortgage decree, because the sale was at the instance of the Court. Section 47 applies only to adjust the rights of parties to a suit as judgment-debtors or decree-holders, but the claim section does not. If he assumes a new character he cannot come as a party to the suit. If the defendant No. 8 cannot come as a representative of the judgment debtor, by taking a new lease from the landlord he cannot divest me of my right of a decree-holder. It has been held by this High Court that if an application is made by one as an outsider and not as a mortgagor under section 47, such application is not sustainable and must be dismissed.

[FLETCHER, J.—This seems to be right. The other side can bring a separate suit on his new title but he cannot come under section 47.]

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Harish Chandra Roy), for the Respondents,—

BINDU BASINI DASYYA v. SRIMANTA SIL.

Mortgagor's right, title and interest was purchased by Kamini Sundari Debi, in execution of a money-decree before. She then sold it by a Kobala to me. Then the landlord after the sale took possession of the land on the ground that it was a non-transferable occupancy holding and there was abandonment. Then I took a settlement from the landlord subsequent to the suit by paying selami. The question is whether I claimed under that mortgage. The property now being sold is in my possession. When I was sued, I was sued in my capacity as a representative of the judgment-debtor, i.e., as a purchaser, as an assignee. Therefore I was estopped as a purchaser from raising my claim. But when I set up my new claim I could come under section 47. I would ask your Lordships to refer to sub-section (2) of section 47. As an assignee from the mortgagor I admit I was estopped from coming under section 47.

[FLETCHER, J.—What is sold is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and if his property is gone, your right is gone.]

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—You cannot re-open the question so far as you are a purchaser from the judgment-debtor.]

The result of what your Lordships say would be to drive me to a different proceeding.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the decree-holders against an order of the learned First Subordinate Judge of Pabna, dated the 23rd February 1916. The decree-holders obtained a mortgage decree in a simple mortgage. One of the properties that was apparently subject of the mortgage decree was a Raiyati holding. Whether it is transferable or non-transferable is a matter we do not know and we are not concerned with in the present litigation. The present objector, who was the defendant No. 8, was sued on the ground that he had purchased a portion of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor. The ordinary preliminary decree was made on the 25th February 1914, and there being failure to pay the amount found due on the mortgage, the final decree was passed on the 29th September 1915, and the property was then directed to be brought to sale.

The defendant No. 8 then applied under the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and objected that the property in question could not be brought to sale on the following ground: The defendant No. 8 had purchased a portion of the mortgaged property originally from a lady named Kamini Sundari who had acquired it at a sale in execution of a money-decree; and as regards that interest, it is quite clear that the defendant No. 8 was bound by the final decree in the mortgage suit directing that the property should be brought to sale. But the defendant No. 8 also in these proceedings which he purported to originate under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure set up a fresh and independent title, namely, that he had acquired from the landlord, who alleged that he was not bound by the transfer made by the mortgagor, a new and independent interest in this portion of the property. That is the matter the decree-holders object to being enquired into in the present proceedings. I think that is right. That interest, if the defendant No. 8 has in fact acquired it, is a matter wholly independent of the interest of the mortgagor that was comprised in and made subject to the mortgage which was being enforced in the present suit. Any right that the defendant No. 8 has to an interest outside and independent of the mortgage must be enforced by proper proceedings outside the present suit. I think it is quite clear that that new and independent interest is not a matter relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree passed in the mortgage suit. That being so, the present appeal should be allowed. We make no order as to costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

KERWICK v. KERWICK.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 3 OF 1918.

June 19, 1918.

KATHLEEN MAUD KERWICK—

APPELLANT

versus

FRED. JAMES RUPERT KERWICK—

RESPONDENT.

Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 81, 82—Property purchased by husband in name of wife—Advancement—Presumption—English Law.

The rule of English Law that when a husband buys property in the name of his wife he should be presumed to have done so for the benefit of the wife, applies to persons of British nationality resident in India, and the mere fact that after the purchase the husband continues to manage the property and collect rents is not sufficient to rebut the presumption. [p. 377, cols. 1 & 2; p. 382, col. 1.]

Mr. Giles, for the Appellant.

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

RIGG, J.—The parties in this case were married in 1901. They have two children, Dagmar aged about 14 and Terence aged about 10. The husband is an Assistant Engineer in the Public Works Department, whose pay with allowances does not now exceed Rs. 500 a month. In 1907 he bought a piece of land from Dr. Pedley for Rs. 10,000, and built a house, which he called Kildare, on it at a cost of about Rs. 16,000. He made out a cheque for Rs. 9,000 to his wife who endorsed it over to the vendor. The deed of sale of the land was registered in her name. In 1908, he again bought another piece of land, and built Kerry on it. This land was similarly registered in his wife's name. In 1915, the parties separated after a quarrel. The question for decision in this suit is whether these two houses and pieces of land were intended as a gift to the wife, or whether there is a resulting trust in favour of the husband on the ground that they were merely placed in her name benami in order to evade a supposed rule prohibiting Government servants from speculating in landed property. The learned Judge on the Original Side found that there was no advancement and decreed the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the properties were his and should be transferred to his name. The first point for consideration is whether the English Law relating to the presumption to be made from the investment of property by a husband in his wife's name is to be applied to the parties or not. The trial Judge describes the parties as English, but thought that because they had spent most of their lives in India, the presumption that would be made by an English Court should not be drawn in view of the fact that the husband paid for the property, managed it and took the receipts. He treated the case on the same footing as a purchase by a Hindu or Mohammadan, and presumed that the transaction in the circumstances was a benami one. Mr. Higinbotham states that he is not prepared either to affirm or deny that the parties are English, but I am of opinion that there is not the slightest reason for supposing that they are not of British nationality. It is inconceivable that if they were not, plaintiff would not have said so and thereby cut away at once one of the main foundations of the defendant's case. By virtue of section 13 (2) of the Burma Laws Act, the law to be administered on the Original Side of this Court is the same as would be administered by the Calcutta High Court, and in the present case that would be the common law of England. Mr. Higinbotham contends that sections 81 and 82 of the Trusts Act, 1882 (which is in force in Rangoon), governs the case. He admits that the burden of proof lay on his client in the first instance, as the tenor of the documents was adverse to his claim. But he contends that as soon as he proved the source of the funds for the purchase of the property, and his client's receipt of the rents, the burden shifts. Section 81 of the Trusts Act is as follows: "Where the owner of property transfers or bequeaths it and it cannot be inferred, consistently with the attendant circumstances, that he intended to dispose of the beneficial interest therein, the transferee or legatee must hold such property for the benefit of the owner or his legal representative". Illustration (d) to that section deals with the case of a gift from a husband to a wife, and says that the presumption in such a case is that she takes the beneficial interest. The presumption is an inference from the relationship of the parties. I do not think that the enactment of this section was intended to abolish any presumption arising from the personal law of the parties. The question still remains whether the attendant or surrounding circumstances of the case are inconsistent with such a presumption.

In Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council declined to import the presumption that a purchase of property by a Hindu father in favour of his son was an advancement; but they did not do so on the ground that such a presumption could in no case be made in India, but that it was one that could not properly be applied to Hindus, and that its incorporation would be foreign to and objectionable in a system of law that recognizes the purchase by one man in the name of another, to be for the benefit of the real purchaser. For similar reasons, their Lordships have declined to import the English presumption in the case of gifts by Mohammadans. On the other hand, the English doctrine of advancement was recognised in Kishen Koomar Meitro v. Mrs. M. S. Stevenson (2). The learned Judges said: "As between the father and daughter, both of English extraction, and living under the English Law, why should the doctrine of advancement not be considered applicable? If by English Law certain rights are secured to a child by the doctrine of advancement, why should the child by living with its parents in this country be deprived of that right? Had litigation arisen between French and his daughter that would have been governed by English Law and the doctrine of advancement might have been effectually pleaded by the daughter." The doctrine was assumed to apply in the case of McGregor v. McGregor (3), which was decided by the Recorder of Rangoon in 1898. In section 39 of the Transfer of Property Act there is a reference to a provision for advancement and such an expression could only apply to persons of British nationality. The mere fact that the parties have been educated or have chiefly resided in India cannot affect their personal law, and in my opinion the burden of proving that the registration of the land on which Kerry and Kildare are built in the name of Mrs.

Kerwick was not intended as an advancement lies upon the plaintiff.

The parties lived happily together until January 1915. With the exception of the evidence of the parties themselves, there is very little evidence of facts antecedent to or contemporaneous with the purchase to show whether the intention of the plaintiff was to create a trust or an advancement. Mrs. Kerwick says that she and her husband were on very good terms and that he told her he intended to make provision for her. In paragraph 5 of the plaint Kerwick states that he purchased the properties with the object of making provision for his children. In cross-examination he said that he wished the property to benefit his children not after their death, but to help in their education and that he intended to give them to them when they reached a reasonable age. He took out 3 insurance policies one of which was intended for Terence, and in 1912 he bought Kenmare which he admits was intended for Dagmar. Apart, therefore, from Kildare and Kerry, he did make provision for his children, which makes it the less unlikely that he made some provision for his wife, and the more probable that the property in her name was intended for that purpose.

It is argued that if Kerwick's intention was to benefit his wife, he would not have entered into so wild a speculation as house building on borrowed capital. But the same argument would apply with reference to his intention to benefit his children, and it is clear from his own statements that he did not make the purchases as a speculation but as provision for his family.

It is also urged that it is improbable that he would borrow money from his sister to benefit his wife.

There is, however, no more improbability in his borrowing from a wealthy sister to benefit his wife, than to benefit his children who were very young at the time. On any view of the case Kerwick's financial proceedings are somewhat remarkable. The learned Judge, after reviewing the financial resources of Kerwick, says that it is very unlikely that a man possessed of Rs. 8,000 would borrow Rs. 50,000 to make a present to his wife. He remarks that it is significant that between 1907 and 1912 Kerwick could or at any rate did only repay Balthazar and Son Rs. 4,500, and that at the time of separation his wife did not contend that he had any other sources of income except his salary. I do not think that this passage correctly represents the financial position and dealings of Kerwick. Kerwick admits that he had a banking account with Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son only. In his letter to his wife, Exhibit 6, dealing with his financial position and the burden of debts, he says that his salary (inclusive of profits from the houses) is Rs. 515 and that after making certain payments, he will only have Rs. 185 on which to live. He continues: "The other source from which I sometimes derived a little is at an end, after your and Lindsay's bloodthirsty plans and threats at Father Colombo's house." Such is his own account of his financial position, but his pass-book exhibits a most extraordinary situation. Credits to the amount of Rs. 1,87,000 odd were placed to his account from 1907—15 and vary from Rs. 5,000 in 1909 to Rs. 42,000 odd in 1914. The loans from Balthazar will not account for much of this money. In 1905, the credits are only about Rs. 1,800; the next year they are Rs. 3,200 but when building begins in 1907, they leap up to Rs. 18,000. His banking account does not show that he had Rs. 8,000 in 1907. The money may have been elsewhere but if so, there was no necessity for him to borrow Rs. 8,000 from a sister, or Rs. 12,000 from Balthazar. It is not necessary to enter into Kerwick's financial dealings generally, as they are not really relevant to the case, nor are there the materials on the record for such an examination; but I think it may be said that Kerwick must have thought it possible to raise considerable sums of money, before he commenced building, or he would not have undertaken the ventures. Before he paid off what was due on Kildare and Kerry, Kerwick bought Kenmare in November 1912 for Rs. 17,000 for his daughter, and in the same month he writes to his wife in England and suggests that she should send him a power-of-attorney to enable him to deposit the title deeds of Kerry to help her father. In March 1913, he borrowed Rs. 12,000 for his father-in-law and appears to have taken no security from him for the loan. Mrs. Kerwick admits that her husband treated her generously, and the loan to the father-in-law was certainly a very generous proceeding on the part of a man with such small ostensible means. This loan and the character of his financial proceedings generally are, I think, a sufficient answer to the contention that a man of his means would not buy two houses for his wife. The parties were on very good terms at the time, and there was no idea that they were likely to separate. So long as they lived together, the rents from the property were their mutual benefit. In these circumstances, it is no more unlikely that Kerwick intended an advancement for his wife when he purchased Kildare and Kerry, than that he would lend her father Rs. 12,000.

It is common ground that Kerwick managed the properties, collected the rents and paid them into his own banking account. This, however, may have been merely an arrangement to suit the convenience of the parties. Mrs. Kerwick was in England much longer periods than her husband, who remitted her £ 20 a month for the expenses of herself, the two children and a niece. In Grey v. Grey (4) the fact that a father received the profits of an estate for his adult son for twenty years, built much and provided materials for buildings, and treated for the sale of an estate, was not held sufficient to rebut the presumption of an advancement arising from the purchase of the property in the son's name. In the case of English people resident in India, the arrangement made would probably be determined to some extent by considerations of convenience, and I do not think the management of the estate by Kerwick is conclusive evidence that the registration of it in his wife's name was a trust only. The houses were in the name of Kerwick in the Municipal Office at the time of the filing of the suit, but how long they had stood in his name is not clear. Kerwick says that so far as he knew of recent years the tax bills have been made out in his name, and explains that he means for the last two or three years. It would have been easy for him to produce evidence to show that they had always stood in his name. The same considerations as to convenience would apply, if the arrangement was that he should manage them on behalf of his wife. Kerwick explains that the reason why the land was registered in the Registration Office in his wife's name was his belief that he was not allowed to speculate in land, but that in 1912 he found out that there was no rule forbidding officers to buy a house for themselves to live in but they were only prohibited from buying from natives of India. Clause 9 of the Government Servants Conduct Rules, 1904 (as corrected up to 1912), allows any Government servant to buy immoveable property for residential purposes, and allows members of the Provincial or Subordinate Civil Services to acquire immoveable property by purchase with the sanction of the Local Government or the Head of a Department specially empowered to grant such sanction. Kerwick is a member of the Provincial Service. There is no absolute prohibition in the rules against a purchase of house property from a native of India; report of the intention of the officer making the purchase must be made to the Commissioner for his orders. Had Kerwick really consulted the rules (1912), he would have found that he could not purchase Kenmare without permission. Moreover, if his intention was to conceal his operations from his superior officials, why were not the houses also put in his wife's name in the Municipal Office? Until he came into Court, Kerwick never suggested that the houses had been registered benami in order to evade the rules. On the 18th November 1912 he wrote to his wife as follows: "Now, dear, Pa to get on with his business wants some security in the bank and I let him have the house papers of Kerry house, which are now free from debt, to deposit in the Chartered Bank... Well as the house is in your name the Bank have refused Pa. I wanted to draw up a stamped paper for a power-of-attorney...giving me full power to sell, borrow money on or to register any transfer of your property..." Further on in the same letter he tells her that he is buying Kenmare and says: "I cannot put this house in your name as you are not here, so see what you have lost". He explains that he was merely joking. The pleasantry is very weak and does not explain the use of the expression "your property". In reply to this letter she sent him a power-of-attorney. Now at the time this letter was written, Kerwick had found out that he was not prohibited from holding property, if his story is to be believed. It is difficult to understand why instead of asking for a power-of-attorney to sell her or borrow on property, he did not ask her for once to retransfer the houses to his name, which would have saved much trouble. He did not make any attempt to have the houses transferred back to his name, but suggested that if she had been in India the new purchase would have been put in her name also. If the old transactions were benami, the expression "see what you have lost" is meaningless. On receiving the power-of-attorney, he seems first of all to have borrowed Rs. 12,000 on the security of life insurances and then to have repaid the sum by a loan from Balthazar (see Exhibits C and Z). The promissory note, Exhibit C, was signed by him, "Mrs. K. M. Kerwick by her attorney." He says that he borrowed the money from Balthazar on the security of Kerry. The way in which the promissory note, Exhibit C, was signed appears to indicate an intention of holding his wife responsible, which is not a very intelligible proceeding if she had no property to meet the debt. In my opinion, Kerwick's contention that he put Kildare and Kerry into his wife's name benami is not even plausible.

In January 1915 the parties quarrelled but decline to disclose the reasons for the estrangement. Mrs. Kerwick's parents had been staying with them at Kerry in 1911 and left the house owing to a quarrel with Kerwick. It is urged that Mrs. Kerwick would not have permitted her husband to send them away if the house had been her own. This, however, depends on whether she decided to side with her husband or not—either they or her husband had to leave Kerry, and unless she intended to break with him, the natural course of events was for the parents to quit. I am unable to see in what way this incident tends to show that she was not the owner of Kerry. Mrs. Kerwick says that when she quarrelled with her husband in January, she threatened to go home and asked him how the house stood. He then gave her Exhibit 7, which is a statement of the debt on Kildare and Kerry, the taxes due, insurances, the names of the tenants and the rents. Apparently he is also alleged to have given her Exhibit 8, a statement of her father's debt. Kerwick states that he does not remember giving these two papers to her, and with reference to the former, he is unable to suggest any reason why he drew it up if it was not for his wife. He thinks he drew up Exhibit 8 to assist his memory. If Exhibit 7 was intended as a mere aid to his memory, it is difficult to understand why it commences with the information that the papers are with Balthazar (a fact he could not have forgotten) or why there is no mention of Kenmare. Exhibit 8 begins, "Pa's loan from Gasper Rs. 6,000." Gasper was the insurance agent. On the 1st April Kerwick repaid Balthazar Rs. 12,000, which was made up of Rs. 6,000 repaid by "Pa" and another Rs. 6,000 borrowed from Gasper. It is argued that the words at the end of Exhibit 8 "Pa paid Kathleen £ 20" indicate that the note was one for his private information, as, if it was intended for her, the expression would have been "Pa paid you." There is some force in this contention, but it is not conclusive, as he may have made out the account in the more formal manner of inserting the name of the recipient. On the whole, I think the balance of probability is in favour of Mrs. Kerwick's version.

The parties were unable to come to an understanding and on the first March 1911, a deed of separation was drawn up by a priest. It provides that Kerwick shall pay his wife £ 8 monthly out of his income, and also more if possible, that the father is to keep Terence at school and have him with him during the vacations, a similar arrangement, mutatis mutandis, being made for Dagmar. Mrs. Kerwick was to leave for England at once and her husband was to pay her passage. The defendant contends that she accepted so small a sum of £ 8 because it was understood that she was the owner of Kildare and Kerry. She is supported in her contention by Father Colombo, whose evidence, however, has been rejected by the learned trial Judge on the ground that it is probable that Father Colombo's memory is at fault. This conclusion is reached by the learned Judge after consideration of the subsequent conduct of the parties. This portion of the case has been argued very elaborately at the Bar. Both parties admit that something was said about the houses. Kerwick's version of the conversation is that nothing was said about his wife receiving the income from the Rangoon houses, but that Father Colombo did say that £ 8 was too small an allowance, and that when she called attention to the income from the houses he explained that they were heavily mortgaged and brought in very little. There is no mention about the income from the houses in the deed itself, and the omission is noteworthy. The argument to be drawn from it would have been still more forcible if the deed had been drawn up by a conveyancer instead of by a young Italian priest. There is no evidence to show whether the expression "and more if possible" had any allusion to the houses which Kerwick said were heavily mortgaged. Father Colombo says he thinks Kerwick said the property belonged to his wife and that this was the idea he gave him. In answer to interrogatory No. 10, which was as follows: "Is it not a fact that at the said interview the plaintiff proposed to make the defendant an allowance of £ 8...that you suggested an allowance of £ 12; that the defendant then remarked that the plaintiff had properties in Rangoon which brought the plaintiff an additional income; that the plaintiff then said that after paying taxes and rates and interest on mortgages he got about Rs. 50 a month only out of his properties and that he was keeping those properties for the benefit of his children and that if the income from the properties was to be further discussed the plaintiff would break off the discussion?" Father Colombo replied, "in this particular meeting of which mention is made there was no discussion about any house property. It was only at a subsequent meeting when the deed was signed that a mention was made of the property and it is referred to in answer to No. 11, examination-in-chief."

In answer to the 12th and 13th interrogatories by plaintiff the witness would not swear that there was any claim by defendant to the property or admission by the plaintiff on the subject, but in answer to the 14th question he again said Mrs. Kerwick laid claim to the property. Turning now to Exhibit H, written by plaintiff on the 15th November, I find the following passage: "I have remitted to you monthly the sum of Rs. 120 as stipulated in the priestly agreement, and I am remitting Rs. 50 a month as interest on your father's loan of Rs. 6,000 to the money-lender in Rangoon, which ordinarily should go to you to make your monthly allowance, i. e., Rs. 170 (120 plus 50)." Kerwick explains that this statement means that if he had not had to send the money to the money-lender he would have sent it to her, if she had not claimed the house and her father had paid the debt; and in cross-examination he says that he had promised to give her more than £ 8 if possible and intended to carry this out. I do not think on this evidence that the passage in Exhibit H read with the 10th interrogatory can be construed into an admission on the part of Kerwick that he was bound to pay her Rs. 50 out of the income from the houses. Father Colombo's memory as to the details of the conversation seems defective. It seems to me most probable that Mrs. Kerwick was dissatisfied with the allowance, and pointed to the house property income and made some claim to it, whereupon Kerwick said they were very heavily mortgaged and the payments on them absorbed nearly the whole of the income, but that if possible he would pay her more than the £ 8. Father Colombo's evidence does not amount to much more than that he carried away the impression that Kerwick had settled the property on his wife, an impression that might arise from Kerwick undertaking to allow her more if the interest on her father's loan was paid him, and the houses were let, but Colombo will not swear positively that there was any definite admission or claim as to the ownership. Objection has been taken to the admission of oral evidence at the trial as to the contents of certain letters sent by Kerwick, but not asked for by him, to be produced at the trial. The Judge ruled that Mrs. Kerwick could be asked her recollection as to the contents of the letters. We are of opinion that the evidence on page 49 of the record about the contents of these letters is inadmissible, sections 22, 65 and 66, Evidence Act, and ruled accordingly at the hearing. In enacting section 22, the Indian Legislature followed the rule laid down in Lawless v. Queale (5) in preference to that in Slatterio v. Pooley (6). This portion of the evidence was used by the trial Judge to discredit Father Colombo, the trustworthiness of whose evidence I have already discussed.

When the deed of separation was drawn up, Dagmar was in England and Terence was sent to school at Mussoorie where he fell ill. Mrs. Kerwick promptly cancelled her power-of-attorney and informed Balthazar of her action. In August Kerwick agreed to Terence being taken to England but refused to allow him to see his mother's parents. Negotiations broke down owing to this restriction, which Mrs. Kerwick regarded as ridiculous. According to the deed of separation Mrs. Kerwick was to go home at once, but her husband seems to have been unable to meet the necessary expenditure (see Exhibit 6). In September he wrote to her detailing his difficulties and asking her to leave him a free hand in respect to the houses. In October, (Exhibit G) she replied and asked him to sell Kildare and transfer Kerry to her free of debt. In his reply (Exhibit H) he did not repudiate her claim to the houses, although in his cross-examination he stated that he considered the claim an impudent one. He discussed the debts due on the houses and said that Rs. 12,000 had been raised on the mortgage of Kerry for her father. He did not mention the fact that Balthazar had been repaid. Kerry is apparently free from debt to Balthazar. It is clear that whether Kerwick denied his wife's claim subsequently to the separation or not she did not abandon it. It is suggested that she used it merely as a means for bringing pressure to bear on him to let her have Terence. She admits that the real contest was over the boy, and even after the suit had been filed she wrote to her husband and said that "the houses never troubled her". But the argument is a two edged weapon. It is equally open to the defendant to argue that the plaintiff used his right of custody of the boy, to induce her to abandon her claim to the houses. They had been represented to her as being heavily mortgaged and as bringing in a very small income. Her father owed Kerwick money. In these circumstances she was probably willing to waive her rights in the Rangoon property, if an arrangement satisfactory to her was reached about Terence. I do not think the argument from pressure gives real assistance to either party in this case. No arrangement was reached and in December Mrs. Kerwick's Advocates wrote to Kerwick. The subsequent correspondence between the parties' Advocates throws no light on Kerwick's intention when he bought the property in 1907 and 1908.

The evidence relating to Kerwick's intention is somewhat meagre, but the onus of proof lay upon him and in my judgment he failed to discharge it. I think that the probability is that he intended to make provision for Mrs. Kerwick, just as he was making provision for his children. The letter, Exhibit I, from which the most reasonable inference would be that it was written to the owner of the property, cannot be explained away as a mere jeu d'esprit. It is not until the deed of separation has been signed that Kerwick suggested that the property was not Mrs. Kerwick's and then so far as admissible evidence on the record goes, not until the suit is about to be filed. I have already stated my reasons for believing that Kerwick's explanation that the property was transferred to his wife benami is untrue. There is practically nothing left in plaintiff's favour, except his management of the property, and this is inconclusive evidence of ownership in a case such as this. I would allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts.

MAUNG KIN, J.—I concur in holding that the onus is on the plaintiff of rebutting the presumption that the purchases were by way of advancement in favour of his wife, the defendant.

The Indian Law on the subject of advancement is contained in section 82 of the Indian Trusts Act, which has been made applicable to Rangoon. The section provides :—"Where property is transferred to one person for a consideration paid or provided by another person, and it appears that such other person did not intend to pay or provide such consideration for the benefit of the transferee, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the person paying or providing the consideration."

It will be seen that on the subject of any presumption arising in the case of the transferee being the wife or the child of the person paying the consideration, nothing is stated in the section. The question of advancement or no advancement is left as one of intention, which will have to be proved according to the law of evidence. The same is the case in English Law.

So, in this case the question would be, "Did the husband intend that his wife should hold the property purchased as trustee for him or that she was to have the beneficial interest therein?"

On whom, then, does the onus lie as to the intention of the husband?

In England it is easy to answer the question, because a presumption in favour of an advancement to the wife is allowed.

In India there is at first sight some difficulty, for we have decisions between Hindus as well as between Mahomedans to the effect that the English presumption of advancement cannot be recognised. The reason assigned in the case of Hindus is their inveterate practice of holding land in the name of another. The principle of the decisions in Hindu cases has been extended to those of Mahomedans, because as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moulvie Sayyud Uzbur Ali v. Musammatt Bebee Ulfat Fatima (7), though "we cannot apply to the decision of a case between Mahomedans...any reasons...drawn exclusively from the Hindu Law. ... it is perfectly clear that in so far as the practice of holding lands and buying lands in the name of another exists, that practice exists in India as much among the Mahomedans as among the Hindus." And as regards the Burmans we have the case of

JONES, J. H. v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Meeyappa Chetty v. Maung Ba Bu (8), where the principle was extended by a Bench composed of Sir Charles Fox, C. J., and Parlett, J. The learned Chief Judge observed in his judgment: "Neither Court had in mind the long line of decisions referred to at pages 531 and 627 of Ameer Ali and Woodroffe's Evidence Act as to the presumption to be made in India when a person purchases property and takes a conveyance in the name of a relation. As far back as 1854 it was decided by the Privy Council that the presumption made in English Law that the purchase in such a case was for the benefit and advancement of the person to whom the conveyance is made, does not apply in India, and that the presumption in India is that the purchase is benami and that the burden lies on the person to whom the conveyance has been made of proving that he is entitled to and beneficially interested in the property." It does not appear that the learned Chief Judge grounds his decision on the same reason as did the Privy Council in the Mahomedan case above cited.

It has now come to be stated in text books and judicial decisions that in India a purchase by a husband in his wife's name creates no presumption of gift to her or of advancement for her benefit. I venture to think that the proposition stated in this form is far too wide and embraces cases of persons who were not in view, when the judicial decisions against the presumption of advancement were given. The case of persons of British nationality was clearly never under consideration. The presumption allowed by English Law is not a presumption juris et de jure but is one of fact and I consider that this presumption is made in English Law, not only because the wife is found to be invested with one of the principal incidents of ownership, but also because the husband in putting the property in her name must have had some intention regarding the transaction and the probabilities are that the intention is to confer a benefit upon the wife. I am unable to see why such a presumption cannot be drawn in the present case. Under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act Courts may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case. There can be no doubt that in the case of persons of British nationality residing in India it cannot be said that they have the inveterate habit of holding property in the name of others. I would, therefore, hold that the English presumption of advancement should in this case be drawn in favour of the defendant.

As regards the facts also I am entirely of the same opinion as my learned colleague.

Appeal allowed.

THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL—RESPONDENT.

Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 105—Remoteness—Charitable bequest, whether subject to rule against perpetuities—English rule, whether applicable to Indian bequests.

Section 101 of the Succession Act applies to all bequests, whether they are of a charitable nature or not. [p. 391, col. 1.]

The question whether a bequest is invalid for remoteness, does not depend upon what did in fact happen but upon whether under the terms of the Will the bequest might be delayed beyond the time specified in section 101 of the Succession Act. [p. 391, cols. 1 & 2.]

The positive language of the Succession Act as contained in the provisions of section 101 is sufficient to preclude the application of English Law. [p. 390, col. 1.]

A testator, after bequeathing certain properties to a church subject to certain conditions, directed that should the conditions be ever broken or in any way infringed, then the properties shall be made over to another church:

Held, that the gift over was invalid for remoteness. [p. 391, col. 2.]

JONES, J. H. V. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, dated the 4th March 1915.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of CHAUDHURI, J.—This suit was instituted on the 17th February 1911 for the construction of the Will and Codicils of one Henry Wilkin Jones for ascertainment of the rights of the parties interested in his estate and for administration of that estate; and for the purpose also of a scheme being framed for an account and for other reliefs. It came on before me and I delivered my judgment on 16th July 1912, which is to be found in I. L. R. 40 C. 192*. At that time Eliza Humphreys was alive. She died on 10th April 1917 and upon her death certain questions have arisen, and this is an application for further construction of the Will having regard to her death.

At the hearing of this suit the Administrator-General submitted certain questions for the decision of this Court which are to be found on pages 198, 199 et seq in 40 Cal. These questions were dealt with but the following question was left undecided, viz., where the corpus was to go. The testator had merely devised the income and there was no special provision about the corpus. Although I allowed the matter to stand over at that time having regard to the fact that Eliza Humphreys was then alive, yet I stated that section 59 of the Succession Act provided that where the interest or produce of a fund was bequeathed to any person and the Will afforded no indication of an intention that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration, the principle as well as the interest should belong to the legatee and that that section, although it spoke only of the interest or produce of a fund, applied equally to immoveable property. I gave my opinion that a gift of income without more was a gift of the corpus, even though the gift was to the separate use or through the medium of a trust. I take the same view now. Here the income having been given and nothing being said about the corpus, the corpus follows it.

The next-of-kin who were very strongly represented at the hearing of the suit have again appeared before me on this occasion and contend that the decision in the case was not correct and that having regard to the death of Eliza it is open to them now to question the decision. I do not think it is so open. In addition to the many points which were then discussed, a further point has been raised by learned Counsel appearing for them that under the Succession Act, section 101 applies to charitable bequests. In placing his arguments before me he has put forward various contentions. With regard to some of them there can be no doubt whatsoever. He says first of all that having regard to section 2 of the Succession Act, the Court must look to that Act and that alone for the law of British India applicable to all cases of testamentary and intestate succession. We also say quite correctly that where an Indian Statute deals with a matter, the positive language of the Statute precludes the application in India of the principles of English Law. It is undoubtedly correct that the Indian Succession Act is a positive enactment and must be followed wherever it is applicable. Section 101 of the Succession Act provides against perpetuity. He says that although the ruling against perpetuity does not apply to charitable gifts under the English Law, still under the Succession Act it must be held that it is applicable. He says that the Legislature considered the question of charitable bequests in connection with the Succession Act and he relies upon section 105 as an instance where express provision is made with regard to charitable gifts. I do not consider that the argument is sound. It means this that under the Succession Act no bequest of any kind can be made to a charity, because it is likely to last beyond the time provided for under section 101. Now section 101 of the Succession Act embodies restrictions upon the power conferred by section 99 and it has to be read in connection with the sections relating to void bequests with which that Chapter deals. It is difficult to read section 101 as contemplating institutions. Charitable institutions need not be persons, the term person being defined by section 3 of the Succession Act. The definition of person in the Succession Act is that a person includes a company or association or a body of persons whether incorporated or not. The language of section 101 seems to be particularly inapplicable to the case of charities. It is quite correct to say that where there is an Indian Statute reference to English Statutes is not permissible in considering it, but the rule against perpetuity which has been recognised as existing in the Law of England independently of any Statute is founded upon considerations of public policy which are as applicable to places outside England as to England. This has been laid down by the Privy Council [Yeap Cheach Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo (1)]. Learned Counsel appearing for the next-of-kin has not been able to place any authority before me in support of his contention. The Succession Act was enacted in 1865, more than 80 years ago, and although questions of this character have frequently come up before the Law Courts in India and also in England, I do not find any reference to any case in which a similar view was put forward for consideration. As an instance of a gift for general public purposes I may refer to, amongst others, the case of Mitford v. Reynolds (2). I may also refer to Rev. Joseph Colgan v. Administrator-General of Madras (3), where it is laid down quite distinctly (pages 443-444): "The general rule is that all gifts, whether of real or personal property, which purport to appropriate property to a certain purpose in perpetuity are void as contrary to public policy, unless the purpose be a charitable one." A charitable use to come within the application of that principle must possess three characteristics, indefiniteness, meritoriousness and perpetuity. It seems to me that section 101 is so worded that it excludes the case of charitable bequests. If it was intended by the Legislature that the rule of perpetuity would also apply so far as charitable uses or charitable trusts are concerned, nothing could have been easier than to have put in one simple sentence in the same manner as section 105 create a limitation. I, therefore, decide against the contention of the next-of-kin. I do not think it was open to the next of-kin who have appeared and raised this question now to raise it.

*See Administrator-General of Bengal v. Hughes, 21 Ind. Cas. 183—Ed.

JONES, J. H. V. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

The sixth question before me at the original trial runs as follows:—

"What, in the event of the provision in favour of the Circular Road Baptist Church being validly forfeited for breach and infringement of the conditions, would be the destination of the funds that had been applicable for such provision? Would in such case the gift over contained in the 8th clause of the Second Codicil take effect or would there be an intestacy as to such funds or what otherwise would be the effect or result of such forfeiture?" I dealt with that question in page 209* of my judgment. On that occasion the next-of-kin strenuously contended that the whole of the gift to the Baptist Church and other charities failed on the ground that the gift over might not operate within perpetuity limits. This contention was based upon In re Bowen Lloyd Phillips v. Davis (4). I held against the contention. I held that there was no intestacy not even as regards the surplus income, and I do not think that the same question can now be agitated before me in a different form. Having regard, however, to the nature of the Will and the Codicils and the questions involved in them I think all the parties should get their costs out of the estate, the costs of the Administrator-General being as between attorney and client. Costs to be taxed as of a hearing. The Administrator General will hand over the moiety to the Howrah Baptist Church and the Circular Road Baptist Church.

(1) (1874) 6 P. C. 381.

Mr. C. O. Remfry, instructed by Messrs. Orr, Dignam & Co., for the Appellants.—The gift over from one charity to another is governed by the rule against perpetuities as laid down in section 101 of the Indian Succession Act, because there was no knowing when the conditions laid down in the Will would be broken by the Baptist Church to which the properties were bequeathed in the first instance. The language of section 101 is free from ambiguity and should be given effect to, whatever might be the English Law on the point. If the Legislature intended that the English Law about bequests to charity should not come within the purview of section 101 of the Indian Succession Act, they would have clearly expressed that intention by adding an exception or proviso to the section. The question as to whether the bequest is valid is not res judicata as against my client, because by the decree based on the previous judgment this question was expressly left over for a future decision after the death of the annuitant, Eliza Humphreys.

Mr. A. A. Avetoom, instructed by Messrs. Watkins & Co., for the Lall Bazar and Howrah Baptist Churches respectively, based his arguments on an interpretation of section 2 of the Indian Succession Act and relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee, reported as Lee v. Fagg (5), in support of his contention that the rule against perpetuities was the same in England as in any other country under the British Empire; the rule being based on public policy and being independent of Statutes.

Mr. Camell, on the same side, urged that the application of section 101 of the Indian Succession Act to charities would result in placing charitable bequests in a less advantageous position than bequests to individuals. The very terms of that section indicate that it was not intended that it should have any application to charities. The section concludes by laying down "the minority of some persons who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong." These words clearly indicate that the section applies to individuals and not to charities, which could neither be a "minor" nor could attain "full age", as the section lays down. Properties owned by a church are generally inalienable, therefore, there would arise no mischief if gifts or bequests to a church or to a charity became inalienable by reason of the gift over to another charity, the object of the rule against perpetuity being to prevent properties being inalienable beyond a certain time.

Messrs. Walter Gregory and R. K. Chatterjee, instructed by Messrs. Leslie and Hinds, for the Administrator-General.

JUDGMENT.

SANPERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Joseph Henry Jones and Emma Adelaide Jones, the Executor and Executrix of the late Thomas Gill Jones, claiming as the next-of kin of Henry Wilkin Jones, late of Calcutta, against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chaudhuri delivered in 1918.

(5) (1874) 6 P. C. 38, 43 L. J. Ecc. 1; 30 L. T. 80; 22 W. R. 902.

The parties to the suit were as follows:—The Administrator-General of Bengal, and as such the executor and trustee of Henry Wilkin Jones, was the plaintiff. The first defendants were the Pastor and Deacon of the Circular Road Baptist Church, Calcutta; and they were sued as representing the Baptist Church. The next defendant was the Pastor of the Howrah Baptist Church, sued as representing that Church. The third defendant was the Pastor of the Lall Bazar Baptist Church, sued as representing that Church; and, the 4th defendant was Thomas Gill Jones, whose name I have already mentioned and whose representatives are the appellants in this appeal.

Now, in the suit several matters were raised by the Administrator-General upon which the directions of the Court were asked; but this appeal relates to one matter and one matter only, namely, whether the bequests to the Howrah Church and the Lall Bazar Church were good and valid bequests.

The material portion of the Will is clause 17, which runs as follows: "On the death of the last survivor of them, the said Eliza Humphreys, Anne Elizabeth Moffat Humphreys and Helen Winifred Ledlie, then I direct my said trustee to sell and convert into money all my real property and to invest the same in the securities of the Government of India, and out of the said Trust Funds to hold securities of the Government of India for the full sum of Rs. 30,000 if the said Trust Funds shall amount to so much or shall exceed that sum, but not otherwise, and if the said Trust Funds shall not amount to so much, then to hold the whole thereof upon trust to pay the income thereof quarterly to two of the Deacons for the time being of the Circular Road Baptist Church, to be by them applied in manner following, namely, as to a moiety thereof for the poor's funds in connection with the said Church for the sustenance and support of the poor belonging to the said Church or the congregation usually worshipping in the said Baptist Chapel, and as to the other moiety for the General Fund in connection with the said Church for the following purposes." Then he sets out certain purposes.

JONES, J. H. V. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

From the terms of this clause it is obvious that this was a trust both for charitable and for religious purposes. There were no less than four Codicils to this Will. The one which is material to this appeal is the second Codicil. By clause 7 of that Codicil the testator directed as follows:—"I direct that the provision made in my said Will and Codicil in favour of the Baptist Church worshipping in the Lower Circular Baptist Chapel, shall be subject to the following further conditions:

"(a) That no ordained Minister of the Gospel or Missionary or Member of the Baptist Missionary Society be ever elected as a Deacon of the said Church or be allowed to canvass for votes to secure his election as a Deacon of the said Church.

"(b) That at each of the communion services, commonly called the Lord's Supper, celebrated in the Chapel or elsewhere there shall be two cups used, one of alcoholic or fermented wine and one of unfermented wine, and each person communicating shall be permitted to partake of whichever cup he or she pleases without having his conscience overridden.

"(c) That the said Deacons do not introduce any innovation into the practice of the said Church but adhere to the old practices which have always been observed in Baptist Open Communion Churches.

"(d) That before any money is paid by my executors or trustees quarterly to Deacons for the time being of the said Church, there shall be given to the said executors or trustees every quarter a certificate signed by the Pastor and two of the Day Deacons, testifying that the conditions of this and of the other Codicil and of my Will have been carefully, conscientiously and strictly observed."

Then in clause 8 the testator directed as follows:—"I further direct that should the conditions laid down in the last clause hereof, or in the previous Codicil, or in my said Will, be broken or in anywise infringed, then and in that case one-half of the interest, dividends, etc., that I have set aside for the said Lower Circular Road Baptist Church shall be made over and paid to the Pastor for the time being of the Howrah Baptist Church for the benefit of the said Church generally and, the other half thereof to the Reverend Arthur Jewson's Faith Orphanage at present of No. 117, Dhurumtolla Street (if then existing), or if not in existence, to the Pastor of the Lall Bazar Baptist Church for the benefit of the said Church and of the poor of the Church." We have no concern with the Faith Orphanage in this appeal, because it was stated that the Faith Orphanage had ceased to exist at the material time, and the consequence was that the two churches, the bequests to which were in question in this case, were the Howrah Baptist Church and the Lall Bazar Baptist Church.

The question which was argued on the appeal was whether the gifts to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches were invalid on the ground of remoteness.

It was said that by the terms of the Codicil No. 2 these gifts were to vest upon the happening of a specified uncertain event (viz., the failure of the Circular Road Church to perform the conditions set out in the 2nd Codicil), which might be too remote.

It was urged that it was possible that the above-mentioned event might not happen until some time (whether it is short or long is immaterial) after the lifetime of the last survivor of the persons living at the testator's decease, mentioned in clause 17 of the Will, and that consequently the gifts would be invalid by reason of section 101 of the Succession Act of 1865, for the vesting of the bequests would be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease.

The first point raised was that this matter was res judicata by reason of the decision which Mr. Justice Chaudhuri had given in the same suit on the 16th of July 1912.

Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the material section. That runs as follows:—"No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court."

I am not sure that having regard to the words of the section, it applies to this case at all.

It prohibits the trial of a suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit, and the first explanation provides that "the expression 'former suit' shall denote a suit which has been decided prior to the suit in question, whether or not it was instituted prior thereto."

In this case the previous decision was in the same suit.

Further, although Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in his judgment of 1912* did decide that the gift over to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches was valid and that there was no intestacy, he confined the directions to the disposal of the residuary Trust Funds during the lifetime of Eliza Humphreys, who was the last survivor of the persons mentioned in clause 17 of the Will, and the decree concluded as follows:—"And this Court doth not think fit at present to determine the destination of the income of the said residuary Trust Funds or of the corpus thereof or the rights of parties therein and thereto respectively after the death of the said Eliza Humphreys and doth defer the determination of the said questions until after the death of the said Eliza Humphreys, when the parties entitled shall be entitled to apply to the Court in this suit for the determination thereof."

I think this provision left it open to the parties to raise the question of the validity of the gift over to the two churches, which would be one of the questions involved in considering the matter, the determination of which was expressly deferred by the decree.

Further it appears that the argument which was based on section 101 of the Succession Act was not raised before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri in 1912, and in any event, in my judgment, the previous decision of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri would not prevent him considering and deciding that question on the further hearing in the same suit. In view of the above-mentioned matters and the express reservation contained in the decree of 1912, which has been already referred to, I do not think the matter can be said to have been "finally decided" within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to prevent Mr. Justice Chaudhuri considering the point raised in respect of section 101 of the Succession Act.

In any event, in my judgment, the matter must be open to the appellants in this appeal.

The decree of 1912 did not finally decide all the matters raised in the suit.

On the contrary, it expressly deferred for determination in the future the question of the destination of the corpus and income of the residuary Trust Funds after the death of Eliza Humphreys, and this is the matter now under discussion.

It was in a sense an interlocutory decree in the suit and it did not finally decide the above question. This was not finally decided until Chaudhuri, J.'s judgment in March 1918.

For these reasons, in my judgment, it was open to the appellants to raise the matter in dispute on this appeal.

As regards the main question in the appeal, it was argued on behalf of the appellants that the question must be decided by the terms of section 101 of the Succession Act, that the Act was one which amended and defined the rules of law applicable to intestate and testamentary succession in British India, and that unless the two churches in question could shew that the bequests to them were specifically excepted from the operation of its provisions, the Act must apply.

It was argued by Mr. Avetoom for the Lall Bazar Church that the bequest to charity was one bequest and included the gifts to the two churches in question, and that the mere shifting of the charitable bequest from one object to another was not material and did not render the bequest invalid.

Mr. Camell for the Howrah Church argued that the rule against perpetuity involved two matters:—

*See 21 Ind. Cas. 153.—Ed.

JONES, J. H. v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL.

(1) a provision against perpetual inalienability,

(2) a prohibition against vesting beyond a certain time.

He urged that perpetual trusts in favour of charities were permissible in India, and if so, there was no reason why the exception which had been grafted on to the rule in England allowing the shifting of the charitable bequest from one object to another, as in Christ's Hospital v. Grainger (6), should not also be permitted.

In other words, it was argued that the above principles of English Law were in force in India at the time of the passing of the Succession Act in 1865 and that it was not the intention of the Legislature to alter the law in India by departing from the law of England in this respect.

In my judgment that is not the course which should be adopted in construing this Act.

In Norendra Nath Sarcar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (7) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council indicated the proper mode of dealing with an Act intended to codify a particular branch of the law.

At page 26, Lord Herschell's opinion in Bank of England v. Vagliano (8) was approved. It is as follows:—"The proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a Statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions....." And the head-note of the Privy Council case is: "A Code must be construed according to the natural meaning of the language used and not on the presumption that it was intended to leave the existing law unaltered."

This was with reference to the Succession Act of 1865 which we have now under consideration.

The Act recites that it is expedient to amend and define the rules of law applicable to intestate and testamentary succession in British India.

Section 2 provides as follows:—"Except as provided by this Act, or by any other law for the time being in force, the rules herein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary succession." So that, saving the exceptions there mentioned, the rules in the Act contained are to constitute the law in India applicable to all cases of intestate and testamentary succession.

With reference to this section it has been held by this Court in Nepen Bala Debi v. Siti Kanta Banerjee (9) that the words "applicable to all cases" operate as a repeal of the previously existing law, and that subject to the exception in the section the Courts must look to this Act and this alone for the law of British India applicable to all cases of testamentary and intestate succession and with regard to the exceptions, the burden is upon those who rely upon the exceptions to prove that their case comes within them.

The first part of the exception in section 2 is clearly confined to provisions which are to be found in the Act itself, and the other half refers to provisions of "any other law for the time being in force."

I have great doubt whether this can be taken to mean that the rules of English Law which were in force in India at the time of the passing of this Act are to be preserved: but it is not necessary to decide that, because, in my judgment, the matter under discussion is dealt with by the Act, and the positive language of the Act, as contained in the provisions of section 101, is sufficient to preclude the application of English Law.

Section 101 provides as follows:—"No bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong."

The provisions of this section create a rule which is different to the rule in English Law existing at the time of the passing of the Act. The rule in English Law was that no valid interest could be created which did not of necessity vest within the prescribed period of a life or lives in being and 21 years after: subject to the exception which had been grafted upon the rule that where charities were concerned, the mere shifting of a charitable trust from one object to another did not invalidate the bequest.

By section 101 the above rule is departed from, for the bequest is not valid if the vesting may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and then only if the thing bequeathed is to belong to him if he attains full age.

By the definition in clause 3, 'minor' means a person who shall not have completed the age of 18 years, and minority means the status of such person. So that the rule in India as laid down by the section is different from that existing in England at the time of the passing of the Act.

The language of the section is positive; it provides that "no bequest is valid whereby, etc." To apply the plain meaning of the language used, "no bequest" must mean no bequest of any kind, whether a bequest to an individual or a charity. It is said that the words contained in the section relating to the minority of some person show that this section could not be intended to apply to a charitable bequest, but could only be applicable to bequests to individuals. I do not think this is a sound argument.

The section in the first part provides that no bequest is valid if the vesting may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease—the second part of the section provides that in a certain event the vesting may be still further delayed, i.e., it may be delayed for the minority of a person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period (i. e., the lifetime of one or more persons already mentioned), provided that the thing bequeathed is to belong to him if he attains full age.

It was argued that the result of holding that a charitable bequest was included in section 101 would be that the vesting of the bequest could not be delayed for so long a time as if the bequest had been to an individual living at the testator's decease with a gift over to a minor if he attains full age. That may be so; but that does not seem to me a sufficient reason for disregarding the plain words of the section.

Section 105 deals with bequests to religious and charitable uses: so that the framers of this Act had bequests to charity in their minds at the time the Act was drafted, and they must be presumed to have known of the exception in favour of charitable bequests as laid down in Christ's Hospital v. Grainger (6), and it seems to me that if the Legislature had intended to except bequests to charities from the operation of section 101, nothing would have been easier than to add a proviso to section 101 carrying out the rule laid down in Christ's Hospital v. Grainger (6).

There, however, is no such proviso: The main rule of English Law in this respect has been materially altered, as I have shown, by the provisions of the section, and that being so, and in the absence of any specific provision in the Act preserving the exception which had been grafted on to the English rule of law in favour of charities, I see no reason for holding that the Act intended the, exception to be preserved.

The language of section 101, in my judgment, is clear and unequivocal and applies to all bequests, whether they are of a charitable nature or not.

In my judgment, therefore, the bequests to the Lall Bazar and the Howrah Churches are within the section 101, and it remains to be considered what is the result.

It was not seriously disputed that by the terms of clause 17 of the Will and clauses 7 and 8 of the 2nd Codicil the bequests to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches might not come into operation until sometime after the death of the last survivor of persons living at the testator's decease, viz., those persons mentioned in clause 17 of the Will: for the Lower Circular Road Church might have performed the conditions set out in clause 7 of the 2nd Codicil for a time (it might have been for a year or years, the length of the time is not material) and then it might have failed to comply with the conditions, so that the bequests to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches were dependent upon the happening of a specified uncertain event (viz., the failure by the Lower Circular Road Church to perform the conditions laid down in clause 7 of the 2nd Codicil), which might not have occurred until sometime beyond the lifetime of persons living at the testator's decease as mentioned in clause 17 of the Will.

Consequently, in my judgment, the bequests to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches were not valid on the ground that the vesting of the funds bequeathed to these churches might be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease.

There is one more argument which I must deal with, viz., that presented by Mr. Avetoom, that there was only one bequest to charity, and that it vested upon the death of Miss. Eliza Humphreys. This I cannot accept, and I think the terms of the Will and the 2nd Codicil make it clear that there were three bequests, one to the Circular Road Church and the other two to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches, which latter bequests would only come into force in the event of the Lower Circular Road Church failing to perform the conditions laid down; and as regards the vesting, in my judgment, the bequests to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches would not vest in them until the Lower Circular Road Church had failed to perform the specified conditions. That this must be so, is indicated by the terms of section 107, which relate to the vesting of a legacy: the same reasoning would apply to the vesting of the bequests.

There is no doubt that in fact the bequests to the Howrah and Lall Bazar Churches, if valid, would have in fact come into operation on the death of Miss Eliza Humphreys, inasmuch as it appears from the decree of 1912 that the Lower Circular Road Church had not complied with the conditions contained in the Codicil and was not in a position to do so; but the question does not depend upon what did in fact happen: it was admitted that the material question was whether under the terms of the Will and the Codicil the bequests to the two churches in question might be delayed beyond the time specified by the Act.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal should be allowed and a declaration made that the bequests to the Howrah Church and Lall Bazar Church are invalid, that as regards the corpus and income of the residuary Trust Funds in question after the death of Eliza Humphreys there is an intestacy, and that an enquiry by the Registrar, if necessary, should be held as to the next-of-kin entitled thereto. There should be a direction to the Administrator-General to make over the corpus and income to the persons so found to be entitled thereto.

We think that having regard to the terms of the Will and the Codicils the costs of all parties, except of those to whom I shall refer directly, should come out of the estate, the costs of the Administrator-General being as between attorney and client. Of the three respondents Mrs. Blanche Grace Walsh, Wilfred Boswell and Mrs. Nesta Naomi Sherwin, Mrs. Blanche Grace Walsh did not appear, and we make no order as to her costs, KISHEN SINGH v. INDUSTRIAL BANK OF INDIA.

With regard to W. Boswell and Mrs. N. N. Sherwin we think that the proper order is this:—The question of their costs cannot be determined definitely at the present moment and it will be dependent upon the enquiry as to the next-of-kin. The order, therefore, will be that if it turns out upon the enquiry that they are entitled as next of kin, then they will get their costs of this appeal out of the estate: If it turns out that they are not entitled as next-of-kin, then they will not get costs out of the estate, but will have to bear their own costs themselves.

We think that the Administrator-General may, pending the enquiry as to the next-of-kin, invest the sum, which is now released, in the War Loan.

WOODROFFE, J.—In my opinion it is quite clear that the question before us is not res judicata. On the contrary the decree of 1912 expressly reserved the question of the destination of the corpus and income of the residuary Trust Fund after the death of Eliza Humphreys, which is the matter now for decision.

On the merits it appears from the Indian Succession Act that its framers had in mind charities, and have in fact under section 105 made a new and specific provision therefor. The language of section 101 is plain and applicable to the present case, unless it be shown that a reservation in favour of charities existed either by virtue of the previous law or by the Act itself. The Act itself has no such reservation: Though its framers must have been aware of the leading case of Christ's Hospital v. Grainger (6), they have not made the finding in that decision a proviso to the section. This indicates, so far as it goes, that it was not the intention to apply this decision to this country, and this again meets the argument that this exception in favour of charities is to be found in a law existing previously to, and now independently of, the Act, assuming that there is now such a law of succession.

I may here add that according to English Law a gift to charity may be bad for remoteness if it follows the gift to an individual. Upon the contention of the respondent that section 101 does not apply to charities at all, it follows, and indeed it is admitted, that there is no section in the Act which would exclude a case of remoteness not allowed by English Law. It is accordingly said that the whole matter is to be dealt with independently of the Act—whether the bequest is a good or a bad one. I do not think, however, that this was the intention of an Act enacted to deal with the whole subject. There may be matters with which it has not dealt; but this is, in my opinion, not one of them. The language of section 101 is clear and no exception is stated.

The argument that we are here to deal with only one bequest, is not in accordance with the facts.

I agree, therefore, with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

Petition for revision, under section 44 (e) of Act III of 1914, against the order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 26th June 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, second class, Ludhiana, dated the 3rd July 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law, which has been referred to the Full Bench for decision, is whether an appeal or an application for revision arising out of a suit, in which a Company was the plaintiff, comes within the purview of section 171 of the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913, and cannot consequently be instituted or proceeded with without the leave of the Court. Section 171, upon the interpretation of which the answer to the question depends, runs as follows:—

“When a winding up order has been made, no suit or other legal proceeding shall be proceeded with or commenced against the Company except by leave of the Court, and subject to such terms, as the Court may impose.”

Now there can be no manner of doubt that an appeal or an application for revision is a legal proceeding, within the meaning of the section, but the matter does not rest there. Can such a proceeding arising out of an action brought by a Company be regarded as a proceeding against the Company? Prima facie there is considerable force in the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in Milawa Ram v. People's Bank of India (1) that the proceeding is intended to wrest from the decree obtained by it in the Court below, a decree which but for the appeal or revision would establish the Company's title in the subject-matter of the suit, and that it should, therefore, be treated as a proceeding against the Company.

On the other hand, the language of the section can be construed to mean that the proceeding in question should not be treated as a thing apart, irrespective of what has gone before, and that it should be viewed with reference to the action out of which it arises.

This view has found favour with the highest Judicial Tribunal in England, and after considering the matter carefully we do not think that there is any adequate ground for our taking a contrary view. There can be no doubt that when an action is brought by or on behalf of the Company, the defendant can file his written statement and resist the action without the leave of the Court. Suppose, the defence fails in the Court of first instance, is the defendant precluded from asking the higher Court to adjudicate upon that defence without first obtaining the leave of the Court conducting the liquidation? It can be legitimately contended on his behalf that he did not take the initiative in setting the machinery of the Court into motion, and that consequently his failure in the Court of first instance should not debar him from going up to the higher Court and satisfying it that his defence was correct and that the action against him ought not to have been successful.

This, in substance, is the ratio decidendi of the judgment of the House of Lords in Humber v. Griffiths (2), where Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of the Court observed that “when once an action by the Company itself has been proceeded with, there is no necessity for the defendants in the action to obtain leave for any defensive proceeding on their behalf”; and further remarked that “the respondents having been successful” in the lower Court “cannot now object to the appellants’ defending themselves against the consequence of the judgment by the ordinary means of an appeal to this house”.

This judgment proceeds upon section 87 of the English Statute, 25 and 26 Victoria, Chapter 89, which section is practically in pari materia with section 171 of the Indian Act, the only difference being that the English Statute uses the words “any suit, action or other proceeding.” while the Indian Act contains the words “suit or other legal proceedings”; but the difference is merely a verbal one and indicates no change in substance. The judgment of the House of Lords was delivered in 1901, and has never been questioned so far. Indeed, the Companies Act of 1862 has been repealed by the Companies (Consolidation)

PARBATI KUNWAR v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF KHERI.

Act of 1908, and section 87 has been re-enacted by section 142 of the new Statute; and this new enactment in almost identical terms lends support to the view that the exposition of the law contained in that judgment has received the implied approval of the Legislature.

Dissenting, therefore, from the rule laid down in Milawa Ram v. People's Bank of India (1) and following the exposition of the law contained in Humber v. Griffiths (2), we hold that an appeal or an application for revision arising out of an action brought by a Company does not come within the purview of section 171 of the Indian Companies Act and that it can be instituted or proceeded with without the leave of the Court. The case must now go back to the Single Bench for decision on the merits.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), Ch. VII-A—Thikadar—Enhancement of rent.

Chapter VII-A of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, applies to thikadars, and consequently a "favourable rent" payable by a thikadar or person to whom the collection of rents in a mauza has been leased, is liable to be enhanced in the circumstances and subject to the condition therein provided. [p. 396, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Board of Revenue for the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, dated the 2nd April 1915, reversing that of the Commissioner, Lucknow, dated the 7th October 1914.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. In the appeal the question for determination was whether the rent payable by the appellant under a lease therein set out was liable to enhancement under Chapter VII-A of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886 (XXII of 1886). The Board of Revenue had held that it was.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Amiend Jackson, for the Appellant, submitted that Chapter VII-A of Act XXII of 1886 applied only to grants of land. The lease in suit was not a grant: it gave appellant no right of occupancy in the land. Appellant was a thikadar, not a tenant under section 3 (10). Chapter VII-A did not apply to her, and the rent payable by her was not liable to enhancement. Various sections of Act XXII of 1886 were discussed.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. O'Gorman, for the Respondents.—Act XXII of 1886 applies to the case. Before that Act a grant like that in the lease was liable to resumption after the death of the grantor under section 52 of Act XVII of 1876. That liability was taken away by Chapter VII-A, which was added to Act XXII of 1886 by U. P. Act IV of 1901, and the liability to enhancement of rent was substituted. There was thus no hardship to the thikadar. The policy of the Government was to put an end to grants of this class, as they affected the proprietor's ability to pay the Government revenue. Chapter VII-A applies to all such grants whatever name is given to them.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 2nd April 1915, of the Board of Revenue for the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, which set aside a decree, dated 7th October 1914, of the Court of the Commissioner of Lucknow, and restored a decree or order, dated the 4th June 1914, of the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur.

The suit in which this appeal has been brought was instituted in a Court of Revenue which alone had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, a Civil Court having no jurisdiction in the matter. In the suit the plaintiffs claimed a decree for the possession of the entire village Mauza Bandhia Kalan, situate in Pargana Nighasan, in the district of Kheri, by resumption of the muafi, and in the alternative that the rent might be fixed at a proper amount under section 107G of Act XXII of 1886 (the Oudh Rent Act, 1886), and other reliefs which need not be referred to. The Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, before whom the suit came for trial, did not grant a decree for resumption, but having found that the rent was liable to be enhanced under section 107G of Act XXII of 1886, by his decree declared that the defendant was a tenant of the Mauza without any right of occupancy, and determined the rent to be payable at 2,000 rupees per annum. The only question to be considered in this appeal is, whether the rent at which the Mauza was held by the defendant of the plaintiffs at the date of suit was or was not liable to be enhanced, and that question depends upon the nature of the lease under which the Mauza was held by the defendant.

Mauza Bandhia Kalan is part of the Taluqdari estate of Majbgain. On the 13th November 1882, Raja Milap Singh, in whom was then vested that estate, by his Will devised Mauza Bandhia Kalan to his wife Rani Dhan Kunwar, who on his death obtained possession of the Mauza. Thereafter Rani Dhan Kunwar, in order to provide maintenance for her daughter, who is the defendant in this suit and the appellant in this appeal, and maintenance for that daughter's son executed on the 23rd February 1891 the following lease:—

"Lease in favour of Chhoti Betia, i. e., Parbati, who is married at Malanpur, and also in favour of the grandson, i. e., the dear son of the said daughter, granted by Rani Dhan Kunwar, 'talukdar' of Majhgain and Bhur, Pargana Nighasan.

"Mauza Bandhia Kalan, Pargana and Tahsil Nighasan, 'Hadbast' No. 61, owned and possessed by me, the executant, the revenue of which, along with that of the entire 'Taluka,' is paid to Government, is leased to you from 1297 Fasli up to the term of your life and that of your dear son, at a 'jama' of 584 rupees per annum. You should take possession of the said Mauza from 1297 Fasli as a lessee for life and bring into your own use all sorts of receipts which include 'mal' and 'siwai' and pay to me 584 rupees annual lease money, instalment by instalment, year by year, without objection, and all sorts of profits will belong to you and your dear son during your respective lives and after you and your dear son the lease of the Mauza will end and it will, as before, revert to the possession of the holder of the 'liaka' (estate). During your life and that of your dear son neither I nor any heir or representative of mine will have power to set aside the lease. If you do not pay the 'jama' reserved by the lease at the proper time, it will be duly recovered from you without interest by means of a suit in Court. You should, during the period of your lease, fully carry out all orders issued by the authorities in respect of the village, so that no stigma of disobedience of orders might attach to you or to the 'taluka' (estate). You should keep the tenantry satisfied in every way, so that the population of the village might increase and the village might not become desolate. Under proper circumstances you are also authorised to eject the tenants so that you might eject them after issuing notice of ejectment. You should, however, see that they are not oppressed. You are authorised to enhance or reduce the rent of the tenants so far as it is just. You shall carry on all the affairs of the village just as they have been hitherto conducted.

"These few presents have, therefore, been executed by way of a lease to stand as evidence.

"Boundaries of Mauza Bandhia Kalan:—

"East.—Bandhia Khurd.

"West.—Hamlet of Gangaband

"North.—Oudh forest.

"Dated the 23rd February, 1891.

"RANI DHAN KUNWAR."

Under that lease the defendant became the thikadar or person to whom the collection of rents in the Mauza had been leased by Rani Dhan Kunwar, who was then the landlord. Rani Dhan Kunwar died in 1891. After her death the Taluq vested in Raghubar Singh, a plaintiff and one of the respondents, and in Raj Mangal Singh, represented in this suit and appeal by the Deputy Commissioner of Kheri as the special manager of the Court of Wards of the estate of Majhgain.

PARBATI KUNWAR v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF KHERI.

Land forming a Mahal or part of a Mahal which is under Chapter VII-A of Act XXII of 1886 liable to be resumed by the proprietor or to have the rent payable in respect of it enhanced must be land held rent-free or at a favourable rate of rent. By section 107-I of the Act it is enacted that:—

“For the purposes of this Chapter (Chapter VII-A) a grant of land at a favourable rate of rent means a grant of land at a rent less than the aggregate of the revenue and local rates payable thereon.”

All three Courts in India have found that the rent of 584 rupees, which was made payable by the lease of the 23rd February 1891, was a favourable rate of rent within the meaning of Chapter VII-A. But it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that Chapter VII-A does not apply to persons holding land as thikadars. That contention is based on section 3, clause (10) of the Act, according to which a—

“tenant means any person, not being an under-proprietor, who is liable to pay rent; and in the following portions of this Act, namely, sections 13, 14, 17, 18, 29, 53, 54, 55, sub-sections (1) and (2), 56, 59, 60, 61, 62, 108, 126 and 138, but in no others, the expression ‘tenant’ shall be held to include a thikadar or person to whom the collection of rents in a village, or portion of a village has been leased by the landlord.”

Section 3 (10) which contains that definition was part of Act XXII of 1886 as it was passed in 1886. Chapter VII-A, which deals with the resumption and the enhancement of the rent of land held rent-free or at a favourable rate of rent and contains section 107A to section 107K, was added to Act XXII of 1886 in 1901 by an amending Act, U. P. Act IV of 1901, and consequently the specific enactments of Chapter VII-A are not limited in their application by section 3 (10), which must be regarded as a mere glossary defining the terms “tenant” and “thikadar” as those terms are employed in the Act XXII of 1886 as it stood in 1886 when it was passed.

The object of enacting Chapter VII-A which the Government of India had in view obviously was the protection of the Government revenue assessed upon agricultural lands, and as far as possible to maintain proprietors of lands in a position to enable them to pay the Government revenue and the local rates assessed upon their lands, and thus to avoid losing their lands by making default in payment of the revenue due to the state. In some parts of India, in Oudh for instance, many proprietors of lands were in the habit of acting improvidently in making grants of lands, by lease or otherwise, rent-free or at rents which did not enable them to pay the public revenue and local rates assessed upon their lands. As early as 1793 the Governor-General in Council passed Regulation XIX of 1793, with a similar object of protecting the Government revenue derivable from lands. In section 1 of that Regulation it is stated: “By the ancient law of the country, the ruling power is entitled to a certain proportion of the produce of every bigha of land (demandable in money or kind, according to local custom) unless it transfers its right thereto for a term or in perpetuity, or limits the public demand upon the whole of the lands belonging to an individual, leaving him to appropriate to his own use the difference between the value of such proportion of the produce and the sum payable to the public, whilst he continues to discharge the latter. As a necessary consequence of this law, if a Zemindar made a grant of any part of his lands to be held exempt from the payment of revenue, it was considered void from being an alienation of the dues of Government without its sanction. Had the validity of such grants been admitted, it is obvious that the revenue of Government would have been liable to gradual diminution.” That Regulation was applied to Oudh after the annexation of that province.

By section 52 of Act XVII of 1876 (the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876), it was enacted:—

“52. All grants (whether in writing or otherwise) by proprietors, or the persons whom they represent, of land to be held exempt from the payment of rent or at a favourable rate of rent, are hereby declared to be liable to resumption, unless such grants have been sanctioned or confirmed by the Governor-General in Council or the Chief Commissioner.

PARBATI KUNWAR v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF KHERI.

"Provided that, if such grants are held under a written instrument (whether executed before or after the passing of this Act) by which the grantor expressly agrees that the grant shall not be resumed, they shall be held valid against him (but not as against his representatives after his death) during the continuance of the settlement of the district in which the land is situate which was current at the date of the grant."

Section 52 was subject to the procedure and exemptions contained in sections 53, 54 and 55 of that Act.

Section 52 of Act XVII of 1876 was wide enough to apply to grants to thikadars of land in Oudh exempt from the payment of rent or held at a favourable rate of rent, and it authorised the resumption of such grants when they had not been sanctioned or confirmed by the Governor-General in Council or the Chief Commissioner of Oudh. Sections 52, 53, 54 and 55 of Act XVII of 1876 continued in force until Act IV of 1901 was passed. By section 107E, which by Act IV of 1901 was added to Act XXII of 1886, it was enacted as follows:—

"107E. Land held rent-free or at a favourable rate should be liable to resumption, only when by the terms of the grant or by local custom it is held—

"(a) at the pleasure of the grantor;

"(b) for the performance of some specific service, religious or secular, which the proprietor no longer requires;

"(c) conditionally or for a term, and the conditions are broken or the term expires."

* * * *

That section limited the lands which might otherwise have been resumed if section 52 of Act XVII of 1876 had remained in force, and in that respect was more favourable to the grantees of such lands than section 52 of Act XVII of 1876 had been.

By section 107A, which was one of the sections which were added to Act XXII of 1886, the proprietor of a Mahal or part of a Mahal was, amongst other rights of suit, given a right to sue to enhance the rent of any land held at a favourable rate of rent, whether so held by grant in writing or otherwise. And by section 107B, all land in Oudh held at a favourable rate of rent was made liable to enhancement of rent unless the holder established certain specified facts, which have not been established in this case. That section is subject to the following proviso: "Provided that no land held under a written instrument, whether executed before or after the 1st day of January 1902, by which the grantor expressly agrees that the grant shall not be resumed, shall be liable to resumption or assessment or enhancement of rent until the grantor dies, or the term of the current settlement of the local area in which the grant is situated expires, whichever event first occurs." In the present case not only did the grantor of the lease die before suit, but the term of the settlement current at the date of the lease, of the local area in which Mauza Bandhia Kalan is situate, expired before the suit was brought.

By section 107G, which is one of the sections which in 1901 were added to Act XXII of 1886, it is enacted as follows:—

"107G. (1). Land not liable to resumption under section 107E and to which the provisions of section 107H do not apply shall be liable to assessment or enhancement of rent as the case may be.

"(2) When a grant held rent-free or at a favourable rate is found to be liable to have rent assessed or enhanced thereon, the grantee shall be deemed to be a tenant without a right of occupancy under sections 36 and 37 of this Act, and the rent shall be determined at such rate as the Court may consider to be fair and equitable, having regard to the rents paid for land of similar quality and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood.

"(3) The period of seven years for which he (the grantee) shall be entitled to retain the holding shall begin from the first day of July next following the date of the institution of the suit."

Mauza Bandhia Kalan was not liable to resumption under section 107E, as the term for which the lease was granted has not expired, and it is not proved that any condition contained in the lease has been broken. The provisions of section 107H do not apply in this case, and consequently section 107G does apply, as the lease of the 23rd February 1891 was a grant of land at a favourable rate of rent, and Mauza Bandhia Kalan was land held by the defendant at a favourable rate of rent within the meaning of Chapter VII-A of Act XXII of 1866. The decree of the Board of Revenue, which set aside the decree of the Commissioner of Lucknow and restored the decree or order of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur enhancing the rent to Rs. 2,000 per annum, was right.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Board of Revenue should be affirmed, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 9, 15, applicability of—"Disability" and "inability", meanings of—Alien enemy, right of suit of—Limitation, running of.

Section 9 of the Limitation Act covers the case of an alien enemy who is debarred from suing in consequence of a declaration of war. [p. 399, col. 2.]

The general rule is that once limitation has begun to run, a subsequent "disability" to sue will not avail to stop it in the absence of express statutory provision. [p. 399, col. 2; p. 400, col. 1.]

Per Sanderson, C. J.—The Legislature in enacting section 9 of the Limitation Act did not mean exactly the same thing by the use of the two words "disability" and "inability." [p. 399, col. 2.]

An express statutory provision on a particular matter would have the effect of overriding any common law rule regarding the same. [p. 399, col. 2; p. 400, col. 1.]

Per Woodroffe, J.—Section 15 of the Limitation Act clearly refers to orders of Civil Courts, and not to the condition of things under which an alien enemy is prevented from suing owing to a declaration of war. [p. 400, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chaudhuri* and the facts may be gathered from the plaint to this effect; a suit was brought by the Deutsche Asiatheche Bank, which is a German Bank which used to carry on business in Calcutta and is now in liquidation under the orders of the Government of India, and the defendants are Messrs. Hira Lall Burdhan and Sons who carry on business as merchants in Calcutta. The suit was brought in respect of four promissory notes which were made payable on demand, and their respective dates were 4th of June 1914, 11th of June 1914, 30th of June 1914 and 30th of June 1914. These notes were endorsed to the plaintiff Bank, and it is agreed that the cause of action in respect of the notes which were payable on demand would arise on the dates of the notes. Consequently, the periods within which a suit or suits in respect of the notes would have to be brought would expire in June 1917. The suit was brought on the 9th of May 1918, and, therefore, prima facie it was out of time. But the appellants allege that a certain period ought to be excluded from the time specified by the Act of Limitation. They refer to the fact that the war with Germany broke out on the 4th of August 1914, and that thereby they, the plaintiffs, were debarred from suing in Civil Courts in this country, and they allege that it was not until the 1st of November 1915 that the plaintiff Bank obtained a license from the Governor-General in Council to carry on their business in British India with a power to sue for the recovery of debts which were owing to the Bank. Consequently they urge that the period from the 4th of August 1914 to the 1st of November 1915 ought to be excluded from the time prescribed by the Act of Limitation. The learned Judge has come to the conclusion that that period cannot be excluded, and I think that the learned Judge has come to a right conclusion.

I need not deal with all the reasons that the learned Judge has relied upon in his judgment, but I am not sure that I am prepared to adopt all the reasons which he has given. There is no doubt that when the war broke out on the 4th of August 1914, the plaintiff Bank being an enemy alien had no right to sue in Civil Courts in this country until the Bank obtained a license or authorization from the Crown or from the Governor-General in Council as the representative of the Crown.

I think it is clear further that in the circumstances of this case the right of the plaintiff Bank to recover upon the promissory notes was suspended for the time being. In November 1915 the license which was given to the plaintiff Bank was as follows: It was addressed to Deutsche Asiatische Bank, and authorized them to carry on their business to the extent and in the manner therein specified, and one of the clauses was: "To continue legal proceedings already instituted and with the sanction in each case of the said Controller to institute further suits for the recovery of debts due to the Company."

After that license was given, it was within the power and the right of the plaintiff Bank to sue in the Civil Courts of this country for the recovery of debts owing to the Bank.

Now, in the case of each of the notes the time for the purpose of the Limitation Act began to run from a date in June 1914, which was before the outbreak of the war, and the question is whether there is any statutory provision or common law rule which would avail the plaintiffs in their contention that the period between the 4th of August 1914 and November 1915 ought to be excluded in computing the period prescribed by the Limitation Act within which the suit should be brought. Section 9 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908, provides as follows: "Where once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it." Now, prima facie that section covers this case, because I think that either the words "disability" and "inability" would be applicable to the position of the plaintiff Bank at the time the war broke out. I think it can truly be said that the plaintiff Bank by reason of the outbreak of the war was "disabled" from suing, or it may be said that by reason of the outbreak of the war the plaintiff Bank suffered from "inability" to sue. Prima facie, the words of the section will cover this case. But the learned Advocate General on behalf of the plaintiff Bank argued that the section was not intended to deal with the contingency of the outbreak of war but was intended to deal only with such disability or inability as might be referred to in the Act itself, and he drew our attention to the "disability" which is referred to in section 6 and also in section 7. I am not prepared at present to accede to that argument, for I think the section is in accordance with the general rule that once the time for the purpose of limitation has begun to run, "disability" to sue will not avail to stop it, in the absence of express statutory provision.

But even if the learned Advocate-General's argument on that point is correct, there remains the word "inability", to which the above argument does not apply, unless the word "inability" means no more than "disability", for the learned Advocate-General has drawn our attention to the fact that section 9 is the only section in the Act where the word "inability" occurs. We are bound to give some meaning to the word "inability". I do not think we are entitled to assume that the Legislature in enacting this section, when it used the word "disability" and the word "inability", meant exactly the same thing by the use of the two words. Consequently I do not see how we can escape from the conclusion that this case is covered by section 9. I agree, therefore, with the conclusion at which the learned Judge has arrived.

As regards there being any common law rule, which would avail the plaintiffs upon this point, I do not know of any; and even if there were, here we have an express statutory provision which I think, would have the effect of overriding any such rule.

As regards the question of hardship to which the learned Advocate-General referred, I do not think that he was referring to any hardship in this particular case but that he was referring to other cases where it might arise. In this case there is no doubt that there is no hardship inasmuch as although the plaintiff Bank's business in Calcutta was put an end to in August 1914 when its officers were interned, the Governor-General in Council appointed a gentleman, whose name was Mr. Gros, so long ago as December 1914 for the purpose of liquidating assets and paying debts of the Bank, and then in November 1915 the Governor-General in Council gave an express authority to the plaintiff Bank to institute proceedings in order that it might recover the debts which were owing to it, and if this suit had been brought within a reasonable time from November 1915, there can be no doubt that the suit could have been brought within the time specified by the Act of Limitation. Instead of that, a period of time, which extended from November 1915 to May 1918, was allowed to pass before the suit was brought. In these circumstances, I think in this particular case there has been no hardship.

In my judgment for the reasons that I have stated above, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

We think that in this case the appeal must be treated as an appeal from a decree, and we leave it to the discretion of the Taxing Officer to do what is right in respect of the taxation of costs. We may say for his guidance that as far as the appeal is concerned, it was not a long matter and that the appeal was disposed of in less than three hours. With reference to this question I may mention that the appellant himself in the memorandum of appeal purports to appeal from a decree.

WOODROFFE, J.—The general rule is that when limitation has commenced to run it will continue to run. Has anything been shown to us which creates an exception to this general rule by reason of the suspension of rights due to the existence of the state of war? There is, in my opinion, none shown: nor does section 15 of the Limitation Act apply, for the word "order" there clearly refers to orders of Civil Courts and not to the condition of things with which we have here to do. As the suit is admittedly barred unless the period mentioned in the plaint is excluded, I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pre-emption—Acquiescence, what amounts to—Plaintiff willing to sell his own share.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff for pre-emption on the ground that he was a co-sharer in the property sold and a brother of the vendor while the vendee was a co-sharer only, it appeared that the plaintiff was heavily in debt at the time of sale, that he had no money and that he was willing to sell his own share in the property to the vendee along with his brother:

Held, that this conduct of the plaintiff amounted to an acquiescence by him in the sale, and that his suit must, therefore, be dismissed. [p. 401, col. 2.]

Mr. Nehal Ohand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff was a co-sharer as also were the vendees, but the plaintiff was own brother of the vendor whilst the vendees were distant connections. The vendees pleaded various defences. They denied the custom: They denied the plaintiff's preferential right and alleged that the sale was made with the consent and knowledge of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance held that the custom of pre-emption prevailed and that the plaintiff had a preferential right, and it held against the defendants on the issue of the acquiescence. The lower Appellate Court held that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz was insufficient to establish the existence of the custom and that the weight to be attached to the record was greatly diminished by the fact that a number of other matters were recorded, which could not possibly be customs, in the very same clause.

The plaintiff has appealed. We may mention here that the lower Appellate Court has not dealt with the issue of acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff. We think that this issue ought to have been decided and inasmuch as the lower Appellate Court has not decided the issue, we are entitled to decide the issue ourselves. We have already mentioned that the plaintiff is own brother to the vendor. Prima facie, therefore, if the plaintiff had been ready and willing to keep the property, there would be no person to whom the vendor would be more likely to wish to sell the property than to his own brother. It is not pretended that there was any quarrel or dispute between the brothers. In the written statement it was expressly pleaded that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the sale, that he was a man who was heavily in debt, that his property was under mortgage, that he had previously sold a large portion of his property and that five days before the sale-deed was executed, he had sold another portion. The plaintiff, when cross-examined, admitted that he was in debt. He admitted that he had sold a considerable portion of his property and that one sale had taken place almost simultaneously with the sale to the defendants, the vendees in the present suit. Evidence was produced on behalf of the vendees to the effect that the sale to the vendees had been negotiated by the two brothers and that the plaintiff at that very time wanted to sell his own property to the vendees, who explained that they had not sufficient money to buy the shares of both brothers. The witness who deposed to these facts was hardly (if at all) cross-examined in respect to these matters. Bearing in mind the initial probability of this evidence being true having regard to the close relationship that existed between the vendor and the plaintiff, namely, that they were own brothers, we think it extremely surprising that the learned Subordinate Judge who tried this case in the first instance absolutely discarded the evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge says that if the plaintiff knew of the sale, the vendees would have required the plaintiff to be a witness to the sale-deed. The vendees no doubt might have done this had they anticipated roguery on the part of the plaintiff. But if, on the other hand, the evidence be true that the plaintiff was actually asking the vendees to purchase his own property at the very same time, it is hardly surprising if the vendees never anticipated that after they had purchased the other brother's share a suit of this nature would have been instituted. The learned Subordinate Judge says:—"It is further urged that the plaintiff is in debt and had not the means to purchase a share. I do not think this argument plausible. Plaintiff could advance Rs. 1,120 or had sufficient property by selling part of which he could raise Rs. 1,120."

Now in the present case it is admitted by the plaintiff himself that he was in debt, that he had no money and that he was selling his own property, and yet the learned Subordinate Judge thinks that there was no force in the argument that he would in that condition be unwilling to purchase this property. The learned Judge says that the plaintiff could easily have raised the money by selling another portion of his property. This seems to be a very poor argument. It does not appear very reasonable that a man who has no ready money should sell a share which is already in his possession, for the privilege of buying another share which is not in his possession, having of course to meet some expense in connection with the transfer.

Under the circumstances of the present case we have not the least hesitation in holding that the plaintiff knew and acquiesced in the sale to the vendees-defendants.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Grant, construction of—Succession, whether can be altered by agreement—Sanad laying down special rule of succession, validity of—Successive life-estates, whether can be created in favour of unborn persons—Custom, family, proof of—Evidence.

A grant of lands made by a Hindu in favour of another Hindu, in so far as it lays down a rule of succession unknown to the Hindu Law, is absolutely void. [p. 409, col. 1.]

The Hindu Law does not permit the creation of successive life-estates in favour of unborn persons, the estate itself remaining undisposed of. [p. 409, col. 1.]

An agreement between a grantor and a grantee cannot alter the line of succession according to law. [p. 408, col. 1.]

A rule of succession laid down in a grant creating successive life-estates in the property granted to certain female members of a Hindu family cannot be binding upon the family even though it has been actually followed in the family for a long time, unless it has ripened into a family custom. [p. 407, col. 2; p. 409, col. 1.]

In deciding the question whether there was a family usage under which certain female members of a family acquired by succession ownership to the family property, the fact that the female members who were in possession of the properties for the time being made transfers and otherwise dealt with the properties as if they were owners thereof, cannot be excluded from consideration. [p. 408, col. 2.]

In order to establish a kulachar (family custom) it must be shown that the custom has existed from time immemorial, and where the custom set up is peculiar only to a single family the rule is more strictly enforced than in other cases. [p. 409, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal and Appeal No. 59 arise out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs as executors to the estate of one Kali Prosanna Ghosh for the partition of a property called Taraf Katia Nangla and for allotment of a one-third share thereof to the plaintiffs.

Taraf Katia Nangla, Touzi No. 1086 of the Khulna Collectorate, consists of 8 Mouzabs, one of which bears the name of Katia Nangla. It is situated in Pargana Sahas, and the revenue payable for it was included in the Dowl of Pargana Sahas at the time of the Decennial Settlement, but has all along been treated as a separate property and a separate Touzi number was given to it when the Cess Act came into force. The plaintiff claims title to one-third share of it in the following manner:—

Pargana Sahas belonged to the Chanchra Raj family, and Raja Baroda Kant (the last Raja) left three sons, Jnanada Kant, Hemoda Kant and Manada Kant. Hemoda Kant Roy, one of the sons, sold his undivided one third share of Zamindari Mahal Pargana Sahas, Touzi No. 1086 of the Khulna Collectorate, to Kali Prosanna Ghosh by a conveyance dated the 15th December 1892 "together with a like share of and in all and singular subordinate interests in the said Zamindari including the Rania Britti 1,15,000." At that time the life-estate in Taraf Katia Nangla was held by Rani Durga Sundari, the mother of Hemoda Kant, under a family arrangement, the latter having a vested remainder in one-third share of the property. In the year 1901 Kali Prosanna Ghosh brought a suit for partition of Pargana Sahas including Mouza Katia Nangla. The case was amicably settled, and Pargana Sahas was partitioned; and it was agreed in that suit that Taraf Katia Nangla would remain in the possession of the Rani during her lifetime and that it would be partitioned after her death.

Rani Durga Sundari died on the 28th December 1911 and the present suit was instituted on the 7th August 1912.

The plaint was originally one for partition with a Court-fee of Rs. 10 and was directed only against the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who are the representatives of the brothers of Hemoda Kant. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 disclaimed all interests in the property, and stated that Taraf Katia Nangla was the Rania Britti of the Rania of the family. The defendants Nos. 6 to 9 (the Rania) were thereupon added as parties. They pleaded that the Taraf was Rania Britti, that under a family custom the

AMBALIKA DASÍ V. ARPANA DASÍ.

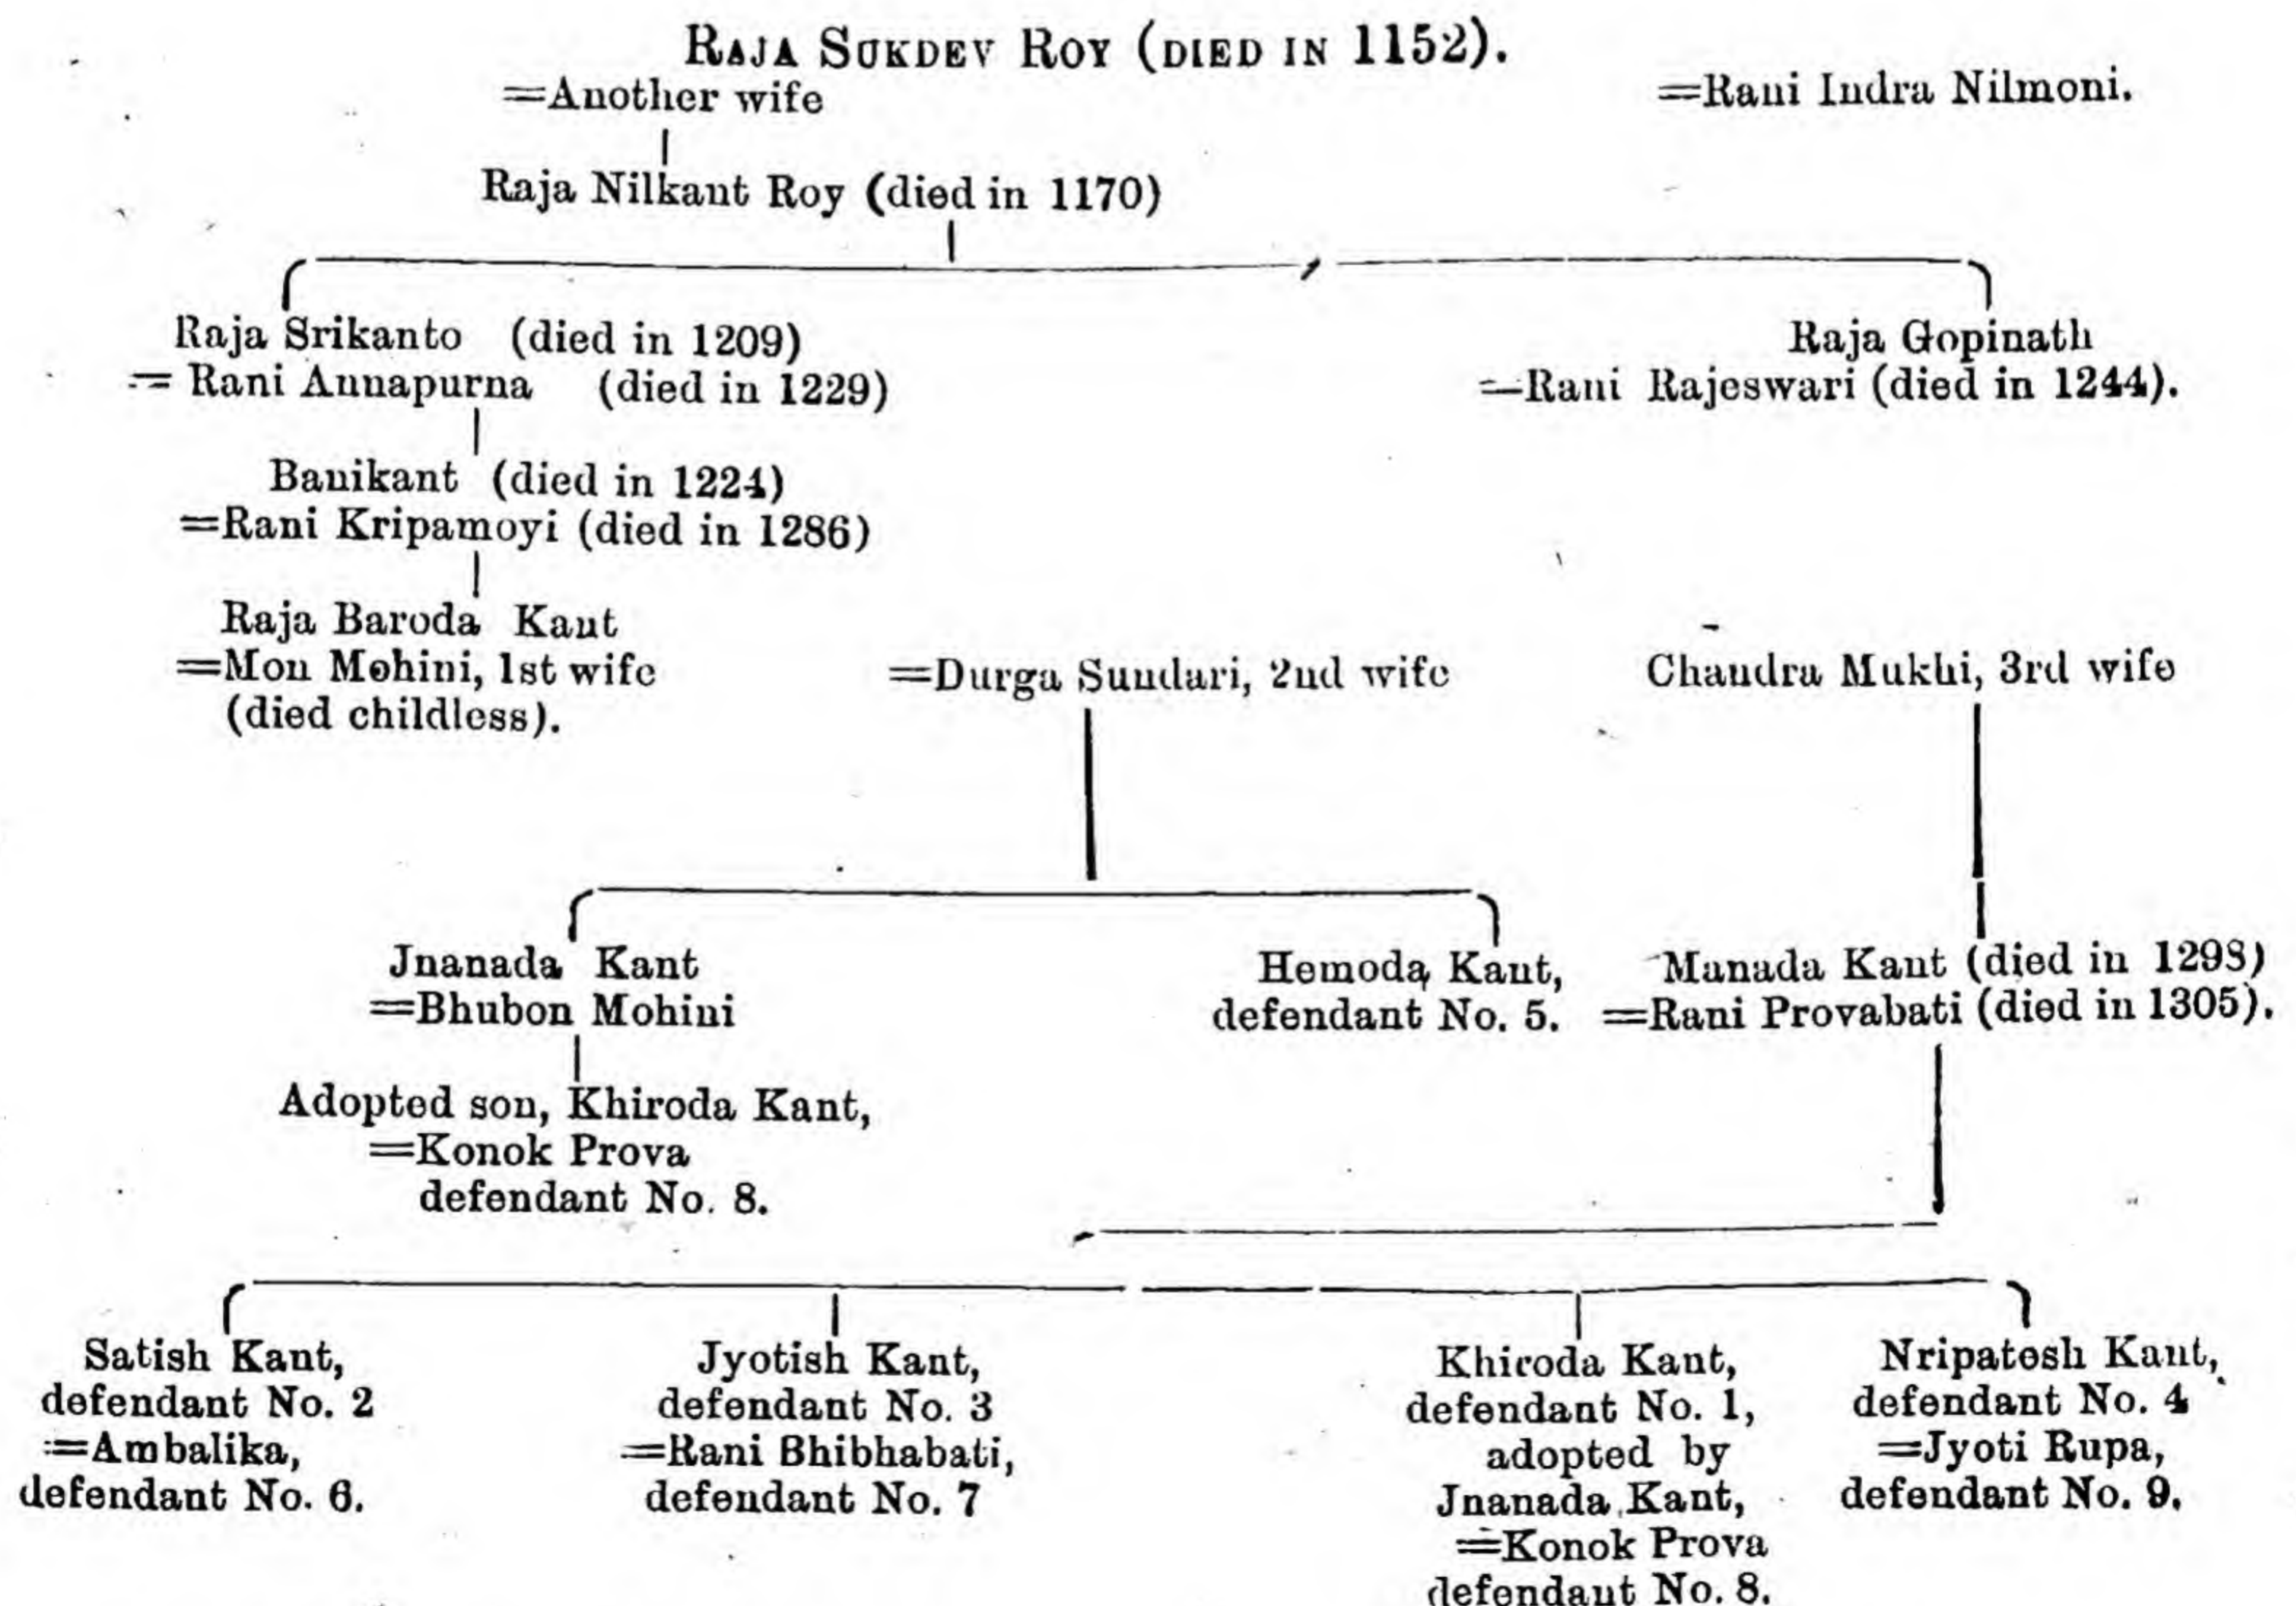

Ranis of the family successively are entitled to it, that the male members of the family have no right to the same, and that accordingly the plaintiff had acquired no title to it under the conveyance executed by Hemoda Kant. The latter (the defendant No. 5) was also made a party, and he pleaded that the claim set up by the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 that the property was held by Ranis in succession was false, that the property was obtained by his mother Rani Durga Sundari by gift from one Rani Kripamoyi (who held it in absolute right) and that on the death of Rani Durga Sundari he as her sole surviving son was entitled to the whole of the Taraf, but that the plaintiff had not acquired any right to Katia Nangla under the conveyance executed by him in favour of Kali Prosanna Ghosh. The plaint was thereupon amended and the suit was converted into a title suit.

The Court below held that the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 had failed to prove the family custom set up by them, that Hemoda Kant had a vested interest to the extent of one-third in it at the time of the sale of his share of Parganas Sahas, but that a third share in Mouza Katia Nangla only, and not in the whole Taraf Katia Nangla, passed under the conveyance executed by him in favour of Kali Prosanna Ghosh, and made a decree accordingly.

The defendants Nos. 6 to 9 have preferred Appeal No. 86 of 1915, and the plaintiffs have preferred Appeal No. 59 of 1915.

We will first deal with the appeal of the defendants Nos. 6 to 9, viz., Appeal No. 86 of 1915.

The following genealogical table of the family will be useful in following the facts of the case:—

AMBALIKA DASI v. ARPANA DASI.

It is alleged by the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 that Raja Nil Kant executed a Sanad in favour of his step-mother Rani Indra Nilmoni on the 16th Sravan 1160 B. S. (1753). The original Sanad is not forthcoming, but it is stated in a Rubakari of the Collector of Jessore, dated the 25th March 1816, that "on reference to the Sanad and after an enquiry it became clear that Raja Nil Kant had made a gift as Britti of 5,001 bighas in Mouza Katia Nangla and others" together with other lands in other Mouzas to Rani Indra Nilmoni for her maintenance, that she was in possession thereof and that during her lifetime she made a gift of them to Rani Annapurna as a Youtuk Britti. The original Sanad, therefore, must have been produced before the Collector. The defendants have produced in this case a confirmatory Sanad said to have been granted by Raja Sri Kant Roy on the 4th February 1817 to his wife Annapurna and his brother's wife Rani Rajeswari (wife of Raja Gopinath), in which it is stated: "My father the late Raja Nil Kant Roy gave Taraf Katia Nangla and others in Pargana Sahas to the late Rani Indra Nilmoni as Ranian Youtuk Britti for the performance of Bratas and other charitable and pious acts..... confirming the aforesaid Britti the aforesaid Katia Nangla and others included within my Zemindari, Pargana Sahas is again granted to you as Youtuk Britti for your maintenance and performance of pious acts. You and the Ranis of the family shall remain in the enjoyment and possession of the aforesaid Britti and hold the same as Lakhiraj. You or the future Ranis shall not be entitled to make a sale, gift or heba of the aforesaid Britti and shall be entitled only to enjoy the profits thereof. I or my heirs shall have no claim to or concern with the aforesaid Britti. If I or they should at any time make any claim, it shall be futile and of no effect. To this effect I grant this Sanad in confirmation of the Ranian Youtuk Britti."

The defendants have also produced a Taidad of the Bajeh lands belonging to Rani Annapurna filed in the Jessore Collectorate in 1209 B. S. by one Ramdhin Singh, in which it is stated that Raja Nil Kant had granted a Britti to Rani Indra Nilmoni of lands situated in Mouzah Katia Nangla and seven other Mouzabs (named) and so she made a gift of that Britti as Youtuk of Rani Annapurna. The date of the old Sanad bearing the signature of the Raja is given as 11th Bhadra 1160 B. S. and that of the Youtuk Britti as 25th Sravan 1187.

It appears that the said Ramdhin Singh obtained a mortgage of about 3,867 bighas of land situated in Katia Nangla (referred to in the proceedings as purchase) from Rani Annapurna. On the death of Ramdhin, his son Mohan Singh was in possession of the property and he made a gift of portions of the same to his son-in-law and daughter's son, who were in possession when proceedings were started for resumption of the lands under Regulation XIX of 1793. The Collector of Jessore by his Rubakari, dated the 25th March 1816, referred to the Sanad dated the 16th Sravan 1160, and the facts stated above and came to the conclusion that the lands were actually the Youtuk Britti properties of Rani Annapurna, and that under the circumstances the Government had no title to the lands mentioned in the Sanad.

Rani Annapurna (the widow of Raja Sri Kant) died in 1229, and it appears from a petition of her daughter-in-law Rani Kripamoyi (hereafter referred to) that she made a gift of the entire Britti Taraf Katia Nangla during her lifetime to Rani Kripamoyi. Raja Srikant's son Bani Kant died in 1224, leaving his widow Rani Kripamoyi and a minor son Raja Baroda Kant. Raja Baroda Kant's estate having fallen into arrears of Government revenue was taken charge of by the Court of Wards.

In the meantime the mortgage-debt due to Mohan Singh (son of Ramdhin Singh) was satisfied, and Mohan Singh by a petition to the Collector of Jessore, dated the 18th December 1822, stated that he had received the whole of the principal and interest, and prayed that the name of Rani Kripamoyi as the owner of the Youtuk Britti might be entered by expunging his name.

Rani Kripamoyi on the 9th March 1823 applied to the Collector of Jessore for registration of her name in respect of Youtuk Britti Katia Nangla as the mortgage had been paid off, but stated that the property might remain under the management of the Court of Wards until the money due from her son (Raja Baroda Kant) to Government was satisfied, when it would come back to her, and that an annual sum might be fixed for her personal expenses and religious rites, and this proposal was accepted and given effect to by the Collector as would appear from his Rubakari, dated the 22nd March 1823.

In 1823 the Government decided to restore the Pargana Sahas to the minor Raja (Baroda Kant) after a proper settlement shall have been made by the Collector and directed the Board of Revenue (by a letter dated the 13th November 1823) to issue the necessary orders.

In the year 1837 one Ram Kissen Panda put in a Taidad in the Collectorate in respect of 6,121 bighas of lands in Katia Nangla and other Mouzabs claiming the same under a gift from Rani Indra Nilmoni. The Collector thereupon started proceedings for assessment of revenue upon those lands under the provisions of Regulation II of 1819.

Rani Kripamoyi in her petition, dated the 4th August 1837, filed in the said proceedings stated that "since a long time before the British Government the Ranis of Rajas have been in enjoyment and possession of the Ranian Brittis in many villages, especially in Taraf Katia Nangla, as revenue-free lands. The Ranis in former times had been in possession of the Brittis in view of maintenance of the Ranis, and they had been in the enjoyment of the profits. In this way the Britti having come down from one Rani to another it descended to the late Rani Annapurna, who made a gift of the entire Brit Taraf Katia Nangla and others to me as a Youtuk for my maintenance, and since then I have been holding that property as Youtuk property and I have been in undisputed enjoyment of the profits thereof. Neither the aforesaid Panda nor any other person has a single cotta of Lakhiraj land in the aforesaid Taraf."

Raja Baroda Kant in his petition of the same date stated that "in the year 1197, when a Decennial Settlement of the entire Zemindari was concluded with my grandfather the late Maharaj Sri Kant Roy, the entire Ranian Britti was resumed and being assessed with revenue was included in the Dowl of the Zemindari. Thereupon the late Raja paid the revenue of the resumed Brit along with the Zemindari and maintained the grant (Britti) to the Ranis Rajeswari and Annapurna as before for their maintenance. After their death my mother Srimati Rani (Kripamoyi) succeeded to the Brit (property) who defrayed the expenses of her maintenance out of it, and I have been paying the revenue of the entire property to Government. But they have not the power of making a sale or gift of that Brit. When the Ranian Britti was resumed by Government in the year 1197 and assessed with revenue, and when the Ranis have not the power of making a sale or gift, how can it be possible that Rani Indra Nilmoni made a valid rent-free gift of the aforesaid 6,121 bighas of land to aforesaid Panda?"

The matter came up before the Special Deputy Collector and he held by his order, dated the 16th January 1838; that the lands in dispute were in fact the resumed lands of the Ranis, they having been resumed by the Government and their rents added to the entire Zemindari of the Raja at the time of the Decennial Settlement, that the lands had been granted away for maintenance of Rani Kripamoyi, that the claim of Ram Kissen Panda was false and that the claim of the Government to resume the lands on the ground of the same being Lakhiraj was untenable. The order of the Special Deputy Collector was upheld by the Commissioner by his Rubakari, dated the 16th February 1839.

Rani Kripamoyi lived for a long time and appears to have been in possession of Katia Nangla as long as she was alive.

In the abstract statement of the jamabandi of Pargana Sahas prepared by the Collector in 1232 (1826), apparently when the estate of the minor Raja was taken charge of by the Court of Wards, Katia Nangla was not included. The Rani, however, as we have seen, agreed that Katia Nangla should be in the possession of the Court of Wards so long as the debts of the minor Raja was not paid off. She asserted her right and possession before the Special Deputy Collector when Ram Kissen Panda set up a claim based upon the alleged gift from Rani Indra Nilmoni, and she was supported by her son Raja Baroda Kant and her right was recognised by the Special Deputy Collector and the Commissioner in 1838. The jama wasil baki papers (Exhibit D series), from 1279 to 1286, pattas granted by Rani Kripamoyi (Exhibit A series), kabuliyats (Exhibit E series), saltamami nikash jama kharach (Exhibit C), rent receipts (Exhibit F series), counterfoil rent receipts (Exhibit H series) and decrees, show Rani Kripamoyi as being in possession of "Youtuk Britti" or "Ranian Britti" Katia Nangla.

There is one instance, however, which shows that Raja Baroda Kant asserted his right to a portion of Taraf Katia Nangla. It appears that one Dwarka Nath Bose claimed 45 bighas of lands as included within his Mahal Gandamaka in certain proceedings before the Deputy Collector in the year 1857, and Raja Baroda Kant claimed it and asserted his possession to it as being included in Mouza Sukdara (one of the Mouzas of Taraf Katia Nangla) within his 'Zemindari Pargana Sahas.'

He lost the case, and it does not appear that Rani Kripamoyi was any party to the proceedings.

Rani Kripamoyi made a gift of Katia Nangla to Rani Durga Sundari and the latter was in possession of the Taraf so long as she lived. There is a large number of documents showing her possession as not disputed.

After the death of Raja Baroda Kant, disputes arose between Manada Kant (the son by his third wife) and Jnanada Kant and Hemoda Kant, his sons by his wife Rani Durga Sundari. Rani Durga Sundari claimed Taraf Katia Nangla and certain other properties as her Ranian Britti. The dispute was settled by a release, dated the 17th February 1884, executed by her in favour of Manada Kant, whereby she gave up her claim to the properties other than Taraf Katia Nangla claimed by her. It was agreed that the three brothers would get the whole estate with the exception of Taraf Katia Nangla in equal shares, that Taraf Katia Nangla would remain with their consent in the possession and enjoyment of Rani Durga Sundari for her maintenance for life and for the performance of religious duties, and that the sons would not be able to claim Katia Nangla during her lifetime.

Subsequently Hemoda Kant sold his one-third share of the Pargana Sahas "including the Ranian Britti in Katia Nangla" by a conveyance, dated the 15th December 1892, as stated above to Kali

Prosanna Ghosh. On the 21st January 1901 Kali Prosanna Ghosh instituted a suit for partition of Pargana Sahas, in which he prayed that "Mouza Katia Nangla may also be partitioned but to be held by Rani Durga Sundari during her life under the agreement." Rani Durga Sundari and the representatives of Jnanada Kant and Manada Kant were parties defendants to that suit. The suit was amicably settled and Rani Durga Sundari filed a petition of compromise in which she stated that "Taraf Katia Nangla" which was in her enjoyment and possession under the deed of release, dated the 17th February 1884, would remain in her possession and enjoyment in her life. On the 19th March 1905 a decree was passed by consent for partition of Touzi No. 186 (Pargana Sahas) and it was ordered that "Taraf Katia Nangla included in Pargana Sahas at present held by Rani Durga Sundari in life-interest being now not to be partitioned be kept undivided, and the same be partitioned after her death."

Rani Durga Sundari died on the 28th December 1911 and since her death the Ranis of the family, viz; the defendants Nos. 6 to 9, claim to be in possession of Taraf Katia Nangla. Their possession is not seriously disputed. The second issue in the case was: "Are the Ranis mentioned in the written statement in possession of the whole or any part of the property?" And the learned Subordinate Judge says in his judgment that it (along with some others) had not been passed.

The original Sanad of 1160 (1753) as already stated is not forthcoming, but having regard to the fact that it was produced before the Revenue Authorities a century ago (1816) [see Rubakari of Collector of Jessore, dated 25th March 1816 Exhibit 1 (3)], there can be no doubt that there was such a Sanad. However, it is not set out in the Rubakar and all that appears is that there was a gift of 500 bighas of land in Katia Nangla by Raja Nil Kant to his step-mother Rani Indra Nilmoni for her maintenance.

The next grant set up by the defendants as stated above is that of Raja Sri Kant Roy, dated the 4th February 1797 (Exhibit M), in favour of his wife Rani Annapurna and his brother's wife Rani Rajeswari. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that this document was not genuine. It is said that this was in the record room of the defendants and was accidentally found in 1317. The evidence on the point was not believed by the Court below, and we do not think that the evidence is convincing. The grant, however, is referred to in Exhibit O, which is said to have been found along with it. This Exhibit O is a registered document "appertaining to Ranian Britti Mahal Taraf Katia Nangla and others belonging to Rajmata Rani Kripamoyi," purporting to have been prepared in the year 1284 B. S. It mentions (among various other documents) "a Sanad confirming Ranian Youtuk Britti, dated the 25th of March 1203 B. S., granted by Raja Srikanth Roy to Rani Annapurna and Rani Rajeswari." The Taidad (Exhibit N-a) and the Exhibit O do not appear to have been challenged in the Court below, and the learned Subordinate Judge has not referred to Exhibit O at all in his judgment. So far back as the 4th August 1837 Raja Baroda Kant in his petition to the Special Deputy Collector stated that the late Raja "maintained the grant (Britti) to the Ranis Rajeswari and Annapurna as before for their maintenance." The Sanad of 1203 does not appear to have been produced before the authorities at the time. It may be (as suggested on behalf of the defendants) that as Raja Baroda Kant and Rani Kripamoyi were resisting the claim of Ram Kissen Panda based upon an alleged gift by Rani Indra Nilmoni (who had got Taraf Katia Nangla under the Sanad of 1160 from Raja Nilkant), the confirmatory Sanad of 1203 was not of importance in these proceedings.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the Sanad of 1203 is consistent with other subsequent unimpeachable evidence. The Taidad of 1209 states that there was at first a gift of Taraf Katia Nangla to Rani Indra Nilmoni, and then that property was given to Rani Annapurna in 1187, whereas the Sanad of 1203 shows that the property was given to the two Ranis Annapurna and Rajeswari. The Collector's proceedings of 1816 also show the same thing. Then again Rani Annapurna alone mortgaged the property to

Ramdhin Singh, and the petition of Mohan Singh also shows that Rani Annapurna alone was the owner. Rani Kripamoyi also in her petition of 1229 also sets up the previous title of Annapurna alone. Rani Rajeswari did not object to the transfer of Katia Nangla by Annapurna to Ramdhin, nor does she appear to have dealt with the property in any way although she did not die until 1244. On the other hand Rani Rajeswari was dealing with certain other properties without any reference to Rani Annapurna. An explanation was attempted on behalf of the Rani defendants based upon the fact that there were other properties besides Taraf Katia Nangla which were given as Ranian Britti to Rani Annapurna and Rani Rajeswari, and it was suggested that by some arrangement between themselves Rani Annapurna obtained Taraf Katia Nangla, and Rani Rajeswari got other properties, and that this would explain why the Ranis were dealing with certain properties without reference to each other. The Sanad of 1203 no doubt refers to the grant of Taraf Katia Nangla "and others" are also stated to be in Pargana Sahas. The properties dealt with by Rani Rajeswari do not appear to be situate in Pargana Sahas. That being so, the explanation is not satisfactory. Though the fact that Rani Rajeswari had some properties which she was dealing with as her Britti without reference to Rani Annapurna may suggest the possibility of other grants to the two Ranis and an agreement between them, there is no evidence to show that there was any other grant to the two Ranis. We need not, however, discuss the matter further, because, in our opinion, the genuineness of the Sanad of 1203 does not help the case of the Rani defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that "if this document (Sanad of 1203) be a genuine one, then the contention of the Ranis is true." But the Sanad states, "you and the Ranis of the family shall remain in the enjoyment and possession of the aforesaid Britti and hold the same as Lakhiraj, you or the future Ranis shall be entitled only to enjoy the profits thereof." Now in so far as it lays down a rule of succession limited to the Ranis of the family, it is not valid. An agreement such as that laid down in the Sanad cannot alter the line of succession according to law. Its value as evidence of the family usage will be considered later on, and this brings us to the main question in the case, viz, whether any family custom or usage has been proved under which the Ranis are entitled to succeed to the Ranian Britti property Katia Nangla to the exclusion of persons who are entitled to succeed according to law.

As already stated, Rani Indra Nilmoni first obtained the property under Sanad of 1160. She made a gift of it as Youtuk Britti to Rani Annapurna during her lifetime. This is clear from the Rubakari, dated the 25th March 1816; and the Rubakari of the Collector, dated the 22nd March 1823, states that Rani Annapurna filed a hebanama in respect of Taraf Katia Nangla. Then again it appears from the petition of Rani Kripamoyi, dated the 4th August 1837, that Rani Annapurna also made a gift of the Taraf to Rani Kripamoyi as Youtuk Britti. It is contended on behalf of the Ranis that the conveyance by one Rani in favour of another during her lifetime merely accelerated the succession, and reliance is placed upon the statement of Rani Kripamoyi in her petition, dated the 4th August 1837, that after the death of one Rani, another Rani succeeded to the right of enjoyment for her maintenance. But as the Kulachar is based upon these instances, we cannot ignore the fact that there were conveyances by one Rani in favour of another. The right of Rani Durga Sundari to the property was disputed by her step-son Manada Kant, and the dispute was settled by the release executed by her, under which she was to enjoy the property only for her life.

It is to be observed that Rani Annapurna claimed the properties as her Youtuk Britti obtained by gift from Rani Indra Nilmoni. She mortgaged Katia Nangla to Ramdhin Singh, and Rani Kripamoyi treated the mortgage as valid. Had there been a family custom that each Rani was to hold only a life-estate, Rani Kripamoyi would have been entitled to succeed to the property on the death of Rani Annapurna without redeeming the mortgage. It is contended on behalf of the Rani defendants that Rani Annapurna died in 1229 and Kripamoyi got the property in the same year, and that the mortgage money had been satisfied, by the time Annapurna died, out of the profits of the property, and it was, therefore, unnecessary on the part of Rani Kripamoyi to embark on a litigation to show that Rani Kripamoyi had no right to mortgage the property. It appears, however, from the petition of Mohan Singh (the son of the mortgagee Ramdhin Singh), dated the 18th December 1822, that after the death of Rani Annapurna, the balance of the money due under the mortgage was received by him, and Kripamoyi in her petition, dated the 9th March 1823, stated that the mortgage was redeemed by the Government.

Rani Rajeswari also was dealing with her Ranian properties without reference to Rani Kripamoyi. By a Kobala, dated the 26th January 1810 (Exhibit 1-1), Rani Rajeswari transferred certain Mouzabs out of Taraf Madhu Khali by way of conditional sale for Rs. 10,501 in favour of Gouri Charan Ghose and others, and from the Rubakari of the Collectorate, dated January 1828, it appears that she applied to the Collector to pay off the mortgage on behalf of the minor Raja (whose estate was then under the Court of Wards), "as there will be no heir to the said Milkiat except the said minor." Then it appears that with regard to another Britti property of Rani Rajeswari, which consisted of Tauper lands, Raja Baroda Kant on the 26th May 1911 claimed that he was entitled to it on her death, and prayed for settlement of the same with him. It is clear, therefore, that so far as Rajeswari's Britti properties were concerned, they came to be inherited by Raja Baroda Kant, and not by any Ranis of the family as laid down in the Sanad of 1203.

It is contended that the fact that the Ranis purported to transfer does not show that they had the power to do so, and that Hindu widows often make alienations in excess of their powers. But in deciding the question of family usage the fact that the Ranis have dealt with the properties as if they were owners thereof, cannot be excluded from consideration.

AMBALIKA DASÍ v. ARPANA DASÍ.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the rule of succession set up is based upon a grant and not upon a Kulachar or family usage. The defendant Jyotish Kant in the 19th paragraph of his written statement stated that Taraf Katia Nangla constitutes the "Ranian Britti created by a valid grant." Further on he says that the properties have all along been held uninterruptedly by the respective Ranis "as of right" and according "to the long established family usage" and "custom of the country prevalent among specially respectable families." So that it was based upon grant, Kulachar and also Desachar. In the written statement of the Rani defendants they set up the original grant of 1160 to Rani Indra Nilmoni, and the confirmation of the grant in 1203 by Raj Sri Kant and also set up the long-standing and uninterrupted usage and family custom in the Raj family, "as being held by the Ranis in succession, each Rani having only a life-interest without having any right to make any sort of gift, etc."

As observed above, the grant, in so far as it lays down a rule of succession, is absolutely void as it prescribes a rule of succession unknown to Hindu Law. It is also void as it purports to create successive life-estates in favour of unborn persons, the estate itself being undisposed of. Even if the rule of succession laid down in the Sanad of 1203 has actually been followed, it cannot be treated as binding upon the family unless it has ripened into a family custom.

It is contended on behalf of the Ranis that ever since 1160 B. S., for more than a century and a half, the Ranis of the family have been successively in possession of the property as Ranian Britti and there is no evidence to show that any Raja was in possession of it.

But in order to establish a custom it must be shown that the custom has existed from time immemorial and where the custom set up is peculiar only to a single family, the rule is more strictly enforced than ever. It is true that a family custom of proved antiquity is entitled to be recognized by the Courts, irrespective of position and rank of the family, and the Chanchara Raj family appears from Hunter's Statistical Account of Jessore to be an ancient family of position and importance.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that no question of immemorial usage can possibly arise when the origin of the alleged usage is known. In the present case the custom is said to have originated with the grant in 1160. Assuming that there can be a valid custom where the origin is known, it must be shown that there has been a long line of succession in accordance with the usage. In Sumrun Singh v. Khedun Singh (1) the Sudder Diwany Adalat, after taking the opinion of Pandits, held that in order to legalize any deviation from the strict letter of the law, it is necessary that the usage should have been prevalent during a long succession of ancestors in the family when it becomes known by the name of Kulachar, and in that case only two instances having been adduced in support of the Kulachar set up in that case, the Court held that it was not sufficient; see also Pertaub Deb v. Sarup Deb Raikut (2). In the case of Ramlakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (3) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed: "Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families, but it is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable, and...should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence; for it is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty, on which alone their legal title to recognition depends." It is contended on behalf of the defendants that in this country a custom would be valid if in existence from before the year 1793, and reliance is placed upon the observations of Sir Charles Grey, C. J., in an early case referred to in Banerjee's Stridhan, page 234, and it is pointed out that in the case of Garuradhwaja Prasad v.

AMBALIKA DAS V. ARPANA DAS.

Superundhwaja Prasad (4), the existence of a family custom for 80 years was held to be sufficient. Although there may be no definite rule in Hindu Law as to how old a custom must be in order that it may have the force of law, in the present case (as will be presently shown) there does not appear to have been succession according to any family usage from before the year 1793.

In the case reported as Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (4) there was evidence of a family custom (succession by primogeniture) for 80 years, and the family belonged to a group of families in which the custom had been in existence from time immemorial, and it was held under the circumstances that the family custom had been proved.

The only case in which a family custom of succession from mother-in-law to daughter-in-law was set up, was in the case of Prince Mahomed Buktyar Shah v. Rani Dhojmani (5) and it was held not to be proved.

In the present case Rani Indra Nilmoni obtained the property under an express grant. Rani Annapurna and Rajeswari also had a Sanad (though a confirmatory Sanad) assuming the same to be genuine, and there was a gift by Rani Indra Nilmoni during her lifetime to Rani Annapurna. The Sanad of 1203 does not refer to any family custom. It merely recites the grant of Taraf Katia Nangla and others in Pargana Sahas as Ranian Youtuk Britti to Rani Indra Nilmoni and states that the Taraf Katia Nangla and others is again granted to Rani Rajeswari and Annapurna as Youtuk Britti and lays down the line of succession as to future Rani. No question can, therefore, arise of any family custom up to the time when Rani Annapurna got the property. Rani Annapurna admittedly made a gift of the property to Rani Kripamoyi during her lifetime, and it was during the time of Rani Kripamoyi, when Ram Kissen Panda claimed the property under an alleged gift from Rani Indra Nilmoni, that the custom was set up for the first time. It is said that it was the first occasion on which it was necessary to set it up. But had there been a family custom as described in the petition of Rani Kripamoyi, dated the 4th August 1837, viz., that since a long time before the British Government the Rani of the family had been in enjoyment and possession of the Ranian Britti, and that after the death of one Rani another succeeded to the rights, it would have been mentioned in the Sanad of 1203, granted by Raja Sri Kant.

In the proceedings which took place in 1837, Rani Kripamoyi, after reciting the custom as stated above, said that the property descended to Rani Annapurna who made a gift of it to her as a Youtuk and since then she had been holding the property as Youtuka property. Raja Baroda Kant by his petition of the same date stated that his mother succeeded to the Britti property. The suggestion is that the gift by one Rani during her lifetime to another merely accelerated the succession. But the custom set up in the petition of Rani Annapurna was that "after the death of one Rani another succeeded to the rights." Without attaching, however, any importance to these distinctions, the only instance of succession which can possibly be relied upon on behalf of the defendants is that of Rani Kripamoyi. Leaving aside the fact that there was a gift to her by Rani Annapurna during her lifetime, can it be said that Rani Kripamoyi succeeded under any family custom? There was no case of succession according to family custom before she succeeded; and there could not be any family custom between the date of grant to Rani Annapurna in 1203 and the succession of Rani Kripamoyi. In any case one instance of succession cannot establish a family usage. We have not referred to the oral evidence because it is not of any value, and in any case does not prove anything more than what appears from the documentary evidence.

After the death of Raja Baroda Kant, Rani Durga Sundari's right to the Ranian Britti was challenged by her step-son Manada Kant, and the dispute was settled between her and the sons, by giving to Rani Durga Sundari only an estate for life, and in the suit for partition brought by Kali Prosanna Ghose it was expressly agreed upon by Rani Durga Sundari and the representatives of Jnanada and Manada that Taraf Katia Nangla would be partitioned after her death. It is true that the Rani defendants were no parties to these suits. But the husbands

(of some of the defendants), who in the present suit say that the ladies of the family succeed to the Rania Britt under a family usage, were parties, and Bhuban-Mohini the widow of Jnanada Kant was also a party to the partition suit. Bhuban Mohini would have been entitled to succeed under the alleged custom on the death of Rani Durga Sundari, but she along with the husbands of some of the present Rani defendants agreed to the arrangement. A decree was passed by consent and the property was dealt with in a manner which is inconsistent with the existence of the family usage set up.

It is to be observed that no definite rule of succession is prescribed by the Kulachar. The Ranis of the family are to succeed according to the Kulchar, but whether the daughters-in-law alone or grand-daughters-in-law also are to succeed, is not clear. In the present case the Rani defendants are all grand-daughters-in-law of Rani Durga Sundari. Then again it is not stated what would happen, if a Raja becomes widower and there is no dowager Rani, or daughter-in-law or grand-daughter-in-law and the Raja subsequently marries a second time. On the whole we are of opinion that the special family usage set up by the defendants has not been established, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 137, 138, 142, applicability of—Purchaser of bare site—Possession, symbolical, value of—Dispossession—Limitation.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a bare site in March 1916, on the allegation that he purchased the site in dispute in July 1902 and took symbolical possession thereof in October 1904 and that defendants had ousted him therefrom two years before suit.

Held, that the property in dispute being a bare site, plaintiff's symbolical possession was equivalent to actual possession, and that the article prima facie applicable to the suit was Article 142 of the Limitation Act.

Articles 137 and 138 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act apply only where the purchaser has never taken possession of the property.

Revision from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 3rd May 1917.

Mr. Harcharan Das Bhalla, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Chaman Lal Gulati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the following facts alleged by the plaintiff, viz, that he purchased the area in suit in July 1902 and took possession in October 1904 and the defendants had ousted him two years before suit brought in March 1916, the Courts below have dismissed the suit as time-barred; the trial Court applied Article 138, the lower Appellate Court Article 137 or Article 142.

Both Courts are wrong in applying Articles 137 and 138, which apply only when the purchaser has never taken possession of the property.

In this case the petitioner-plaintiff obtained symbolical possession in 1904 and as the property is a bare site, his symbolical possession was equivalent to actual possession.

The Article of prima facie application to the suit is Article 142; the suit is well within time and the defendants can defeat the claim only by shewing an adverse possession of more than twelve years.

Consequently the lower Appellate Court cannot decide the suit on limitation without first deciding the nature and duration of the defendants' possession.

I accept the petition and set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand for decision on the merits. Costs to follow final event.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Preference to one creditor—Mortgage in favour of creditor to secure payment of genuine debt, validity of, as against other creditors.

A mortgage executed by a debtor in favour of one of his creditors to secure the payment of a genuine debt, the properties mortgaged not exceeding in value the amount which they are intended to secure, is not invalid under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act as against the other creditors, even where the mortgage bond is taken after the mortgagee-creditor has knowledge that other creditors of the mortgagor are exercising pressure for the re-payment of debts due to them. [p. 415, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Faridpur, dated the 30th March 1916.

FACTS—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on a mortgage-bond which was executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff on the 16th Falgun 1318 to secure the payment of Rs. 16,000. The defendants Nos. 4 to 6 in the suit were the purchasers of the mortgaged properties in execution of a money-decree obtained by them against the mortgagors subsequent to the execution of the mortgage-bond. The lower Appellate Court found that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 owed to the plaintiff on the date of the bond the amount secured thereby and passed against them a money decree for the sum of Rs. 6,000. The Court dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 4 to 6, on the ground that the bond represented a fraudulent preference given by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to one creditor, i.e., the bond was executed not so much to secure re-payment to the plaintiffs as to protect the interests of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, so as to enable them to retain their properties against the claims of other creditors.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabarty (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellants.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money due upon registered kistibandi bond, dated 18th May 1914. The bond was executed on account of money due to the firm named Surya Kumar and others, with whom business was going on from 1307 to 1317. The appellant is a relation of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The other defendants Nos. 4 to 6 are the purchasers of the mortgaged properties in execution of a money-decree obtained by them against the mortgagors subsequent to the execution of the bond. Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 deny the bona fides of the transaction also the consideration and say it was a benami transaction.

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff's claim was one which could not be enforced in view of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, because it was a preference given to one of the creditors. I submit the claim was a bona fide one and the relationship did not affect the case at all. Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1) referred to.

The evidence as to the value of the land was shut out by the order of the Court and hence the observation by the lower Appellate Court about the small value of the land is not fair.

The bond was executed after giving a remission of Rs. 2,000. This shows that there was a genuine debt and the relationship did not affect the case at all.

The lower Appellate Court has wrongly applied the case reported as Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrial (2).

The latest cases on this point are reported as Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1), Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (3).

The case of Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrial's case (2) is the earliest of the three Privy Council cases and hence that cannot be applied here.

The law on this point is clear. Because one creditor is preferred and another is unpaid, that does not vitiate the transaction under section 53. Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (3), and observation on page 589 of 21 C. W. N. referred to.

The law is clear on this point and if there is a consideration existing, the transfer is valid.

The finding of the Subordinate Judge that the relationship of the plaintiff has prejudiced the case is absolutely without jurisdiction. Transaction was going on for some 10 years.

The prayer was for a decree of Rs. 6,000 on account of the mortgage and also some money as damages from defendants Nos. 4 to 6, on the ground that the defendants have removed some huts and some 12 tin godowns.

[TEUNON, J.—There is no finding on this point].

The case was dismissed and hence there is no finding.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra), for the Respondents.—The real finding of the lower Appellate Court comes to this, that the mortgage was taken for the protection of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. Defendant No. 2 is plaintiff's sister's husband.

On the 9th April 1912 defendant No. 4 instituted a money suit for Rs. 14,000 against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and another man.

Defendant No. 1 is father of defendant No. 3.

Mortgage-bond sought to be enforced was registered on the 16th April 1912, though it bears the date 26th February 1912.

From the mortgage-bond it is clear that the instalments for payment extend to the year 1332. This shews that the real intention was to protect the property and defeat or defraud other creditors. Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4) referred to.

The main point is to look to the real object of the transaction, i.e., the intention. They owed him Rs. 18,000 and Rs. 2,000 was remitted.

The money-decree was obtained on 6th August 1913 for about Rs. 14,000. The plaintiff put in a claim which was disallowed on the 20th March 1914.

On the 30th May 1914, defendants Nos. 4 to 6 purchased those properties.

The plaintiff's case is that the bond was in possession of the defendants Nos. 4 to 6 but they deny all knowledge of possession. In a criminal case this bond was filed by the defendant No. 2.

Prayer for attachment before judgment was made on the 25th April and the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 must have communicated this news to the plaintiff. These elements must be considered. Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1) affirms the decision in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4).

The Privy Council case referred to does not lay down a general provision of law with regard to consideration.

The real intention of the bond was not mere satisfaction of the debt but to avoid the claims of other creditors.

If it is a cloak to avoid other creditors, bona fide consideration is not sufficient to make the transaction valid. Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4) referred to.

To make the transaction valid, three things are necessary

1. Adequate consideration.
2. Good faith.

3. It must not be a mere cloak for the benefit of the debtor.

Conditions 2 and 3 are not satisfied. See Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4).

It is a case of secret trust. Referred to Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (4).

Defendant No. 2 is sister's husband of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 is father of defendant No. 2 and No. 3 is brother of defendant No. 2.

Two children of defendant No. 1 are servants of the plaintiff.

The mortgaged property was worth Rs. 500 but no body would take it as security for Rs. 16,000.

[TEUNON, J.—A part is better than the whole.]

No book was produced to prove that interest was realised.

There was no agreement as to the interest in the beginning and it was an after-thought, and hence the interest of some years was put down.

There is no evidence to show that this firm is alone responsible for the money and not the other two firms with whom business was going on.

It would have been a strong case if any amount of the principal was due; only interest is alleged to be due but no book has been produced for the claim of the interest. The only evidence is the oral testimony of the plaintiff.

The interest in other cases is much below the rate at which in the present case it is charged.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on a mortgage-bond. The mortgage-bond was executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in favour of the plaintiff on the 16th Falgun 1318, to secure the payment of a sum of Rs. 16,000. The defendants Nos. 4 to 6 in the suit were the purchasers of the mortgaged properties in execution of a money-decree obtained by them against the mortgagors subsequent to the execution of the mortgage-bond. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that in fact defendants Nos. 1 to 3 owed to the plaintiff on the date of the bond the amount secured thereby, and he has made against them a money-decree for the amount claimed in the suit, a sum of Rs. 6,000. He has dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 4 to 6 on the ground that the bond in fact represents a fraudulent preference given by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to one creditor, namely, the plaintiff, over others, or in other words, that the bond was executed not so much to secure re-payment to the plaintiff as to protect the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and to enable them to retain their properties against the claims of other creditors.

In appeal, it is contended before us that even on his own findings the learned Subordinate Judge's decision cannot be upheld. On the other hand the respondents seek to support his decision by contending, firstly, that in fact on the day on which the bond was executed there was nothing due by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to the plaintiff, and secondly, by contending that even if there was such a debt due yet by the bond a benefit was reserved to the debtor, it representing or concealing merely a secret trust in favour of the mortgagors.

As to the question of the debt it is not disputed that as a matter of fact defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had transactions with the plaintiff for a series of years extending from 1307 to 1318. But it is contended that there was no arrangement made that interest should be charged by the plaintiff or paid by the defendants. We have been referred to many passages of the evidence in support of that contention, but we find there is ample oral evidence in support of the agreement to pay interest. No doubt there are some discrepancies in that evidence as to the existence of what is spoken of as Falat books, and no doubt it is the case that the Falats spoken of as kept by the firm of Pitamber and Nilamber from which the moneys were actually taken for the benefit of the defendants have not been produced. But simply because the plaintiff and the defendants are relations, we see no improbability in the plaintiff's claiming and requiring them to pay interest on advances made to them. The oral evidence on the point is supported by many entries in the plaintiff's books of account, and is also further supported by the fact that the plaintiff himself had apparently to pay interest to the firm from which the money was actually taken. It has been suggested that that firm and the plaintiff's firm are really one and the same. But no doubt though there is a close relationship between the partners, it cannot be said, and in fact there is no evidence to show, that the businesses are not separate and independent. For these reasons we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that on the day the bond was executed there was a sum of Rs. 18,000 and odd due by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to the plaintiff and that after granting a remission of a sum of Rs. 2,000 the plaintiff obtained the bond in question for the sum of Rs. 16,000 due and owing to him.

In support of their second contention the respondents point to the following facts, that the defendant No. 2 is the plaintiff's sister's husband, that though the transactions had extended over a period of some ten years, yet until the day in question resort to a mortgage-bond had not been had, and that this mortgage-bond was taken after the plaintiff had knowledge of the debt due to defendant No. 4 and of the pressure exercised by defendant No. 4 on defendants Nos. 1 to 3, that the bond was in fact taken or at least registered a few days after the institution of the suit brought by defendant No. 4 against defendant No. 1 and further that the bond provides for payment by instalments extending up to the year 1332. These considerations, however, do not to our minds outweigh the facts, namely, that there was in reality a genuine debt of some Rs. 16,000 due by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 to the plaintiff, that there has been no exaggeration or overstatement of that consideration and there is in fact no suggestion that the properties mortgaged exceeded in value the amount which they were intended to secure. Because the plaintiff is related to defendant No. 2 and was aware of the fact that defendant No. 4 was demanding his dues from defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and was bringing pressure to bear upon them, are no reasons why the plaintiff should not require the defendants to secure the repayment of the money which was honestly due to him. In fact we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has been misled by his misapplication of the case reported as Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrial (2). In that case it was found as a fact that of the consideration money only half was in fact due from the assignor and the other half was not due from him but merely represented a benefit reserved for him. There is nothing of that nature in the present case, and the principles applicable to the present case are to be found in the case reported as Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1) and in the case reported as Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh (3).
